SHAMROCKS AGAIN BEAT GARNER FIVE

KLEMME, WON SECOND GAME OVER GARNER TEAM

Shamrocks Will Play At Hayfield This Friday Evening

The Garner basket ball squad met the Klemme high school Shamrocks on the local floor last Friday night and took their second defeat from the fast local quintet, dropping the score in a close game ending 8 to 7 in favor of the Shamrocks.

A few weeks ago Hockey's five defeated Garner on their own floor 16 to 8. Since then Garner has developed a better defense team and which helped them hold down the shifty Shamrocks to the low score Friday night. Both teams played a strong defensive game and but a few field goals were made. Klemme was enabled to gain their lead on accuracy of free throws, of which they made good a large per cent.

The game Friday night lacked the usual flash and speed displayed by the Shamrocks and was slow in contrast with the game with Dumont a few days previous, which was full of pep and action from start to finish.

Garner Had Poor Backing

Only four or five boosters came over from Garner with their team. Garner would have a lot better team if the the town would get back of them. Poor support discourages a team. On the other hand the people of Klemme give the high school team real support by going with them and giving them encouragement. It is estimated that at least over one hundred Klemme people went to the game at Garner, besides the regular high school boosters. If Garner expects to develop a good basket ball team they had better get a little of Klemme's boosting spirit into their system. And this also applies to other towns who fail to boost high school activities.

Klemme At Hayfield Friday

Last week it was announced that Ventura would play here this week Friday. Coach Hockey had his dates wrong and has informed The Times that Ventura does not play here until January 21st. Klemme will go to Hayfield this Friday evening to play that school in their first game with them this season. A big delegation of boosters expect to go with the boys and help them bring home another scalp to hang in the Shamrock gym.

Hayfield usually has a strong outfit. They start early in the fall to practice and are usually going good before other schools get started in basket ball.

Last year Klemme broke even with the Bohemian hay-makers, but the Shamrocks are on a winning streak this year and they want to beat Hayfield on their own floor. Hayfield has a good line up again this year and with the speedy Shamrocks on their trail the game Friday night should be well worth the trip of any fan who wants to see some real action.

Abe's Team Here Next Week

Next week Friday, January 14th, "Abe" Lauritsen and his Renwick high school quintet will battle the Shamrocks on the local floor. "Abe" has been grooming his warriors for this battle and it will be one of interest to both Klemme and Renwick. "Abe" is a Klemme young man who is coaching at Renwick for the second year. "Abe" had a good team last year and has a better one this year. It looks like a battle!

REPORT OF HANCOCK COUNTY COW TEST ASSOCIATIONS

Mr. G. D. Garball Submits Report On Two Associations

Following is the report on Hancock County Association No. 1:

Hans Mortenson, Britt, had high herd for December with an average of 32.8 lbs. of butterfat. Mortenson's herd consists of 21 cows and the above average is based on that number.

M. T. Love, Garner, with a herd average of 28.4 lbs. of butterfat took second place in Hancock No. 1.

C. S. Tannahil's cow, Bird, producing 1360 lbs. of milk containing 111.5 lbs. of butterfat held the high record of the association for December.

The association average of 517 lbs of milk and 20.2 pounds of butterfat was produced by 310 cows in milk of the 399 cows on test.

Alfred Brones, Forest City, has installed individual drinking cups and new steel stanchions in his barn.

Report On No. 2

Swen Swenson, Kanawha, had both high hera and high cow in the Hancock No. 2 for December. The herd of ten cows produced an average of 857 lbs. of milk per cow for the month, containing 29.6 lbs. of butterfat.

Lady Kanawha, purebred Holstein cow, owned by Mr. Swenson produced 1838 lbs. of milk in December, containing 71.7 lbs. of fat. She received very practical farm rations as follows: seven pounds of corn and cob meal, seven pounds of ground oats and one pound of linseed oil meal with a limited amount of alfalfa hay.

Schnurr & Dallman, Britt, were very close to the high herd with a herd average of 29.4 lbs. of fat for the eight cows.

C. J. Peterson, Britt, owns the second highest cow, Tootsie, who produced 63.9 lbs. of butterfat during December.

S. A. Barber, Kanawha, leads the list of men having cows producing over forty pounds of fat in December. Mr. Barber has three cows in this class. Other men who have cows producing over forty pounds are as follows: Swen Swenson, Peter Benson, Fred Trenary, B. F. Higdon, Thos. Everett & Son, B. L. Huling, Schnurr & Dallman.

The association average for the month was 171 lbs. of butterfat produced by 217 cows now in milk. There are 286 cows on test in the 26 herds and the above average is based on that number.

Separator Losses Been Reduced

Separator losses have been cut down considerably. Twenty three pounds of fat valued at approximately $12.00 were lost with the skim milk during December. Much of this loss can be attributed to too rapid cooling of milk before separating.

W. H. Schwab and Thos. Everett & Son have put in concrete floors and steel stanchions. W. J. Siobert will install new barn equipment in the near future.

Sweet clover pasture, the year following corn has proven a fairly successful practice by Anton Anderson, Britt. The clover seed was broadcast in early July at the rate of 13 pounds to the acre. The corn was then laid by, using a cultivator of the spear head six-shovel type. The surface was left quite level and the seed not too deep. Plenty of moisture during the late summer and fall of 1926 gave the maximum growth possible under the shady condition of the cornfield. At the date of the first killing freeze, the sweet clover seeding varied in height from six to eighteen inches.

An excellent stand was obtained this year as compared with that of 1925 when the weather conditions were very unfavorable during the late summer.

According to Mr. Anderson, it is not advisable to drop more than three kernels to the hill and it is better to check than to drill the corn, where clover is to be sown.

Mr. and Mrs. C. F. Keraus entertained a number of friends at a six o'clock dinner Sunday evening. After dinner the evening was spent playing cards. All had a fine time and wished Mr. and Mrs. Keraus much happiness during 1927.

SHERIFF CAPTURES BOOZE RUNNER

125 GALLONS OF ALCOHOL WAS NEW YEAR'S EVE HAUL

Fort Dodge Men Caught With Big Cargo Of Joy Water At Kanawha

New Year's eve Sheriff Peck Hanson received a tip that a big cargo of booze might be going through Britt. He notified Britt authorities to be on the look out for a big Buick sedan headed that way. The driver, Melvin Hurley, and Chas. A. Davis, both of Fort Dodge, were so anxious to get out of Britt that Davis was left and Hurley drove on to Kanawha and near there ran his car into a snow drift, where he was captured by the Kanawha marshall and held until Peck arrived on the scene.

The men were placed under arrest and Monday were given a hearing at Mason City, being released when a large bond was furnished.

Sheriff Hanson was advised from a federal agent that the men caught are old offenders and rated as among the big bootleggers of the state. They had 125 gallons of alcohol in the car which they were running through from Minneapolis to Fort Dodge, no doubt to furnish the old "joy" for a happy new year celebration.

The men were suspicioned when their car collided with another car on the Forest City road. A passing motorist from Garner thought all was not well and so notified Sheriff Hanson he suspected them of carrying a load of booze. This tip resulted in their capture.

METHODIST CHURCH NOTES
A. W. Gauger, Pastor

Our communion service in Klemme was impressive and helpful. We believe that all are the better fitted for the tasks awaiting them during this year.

The pastor started for Liberty church to conduct a like service but was moored in a snow drift from which he could not free himself until it was too late for service. We hope to conduct the same service on next Sunday.

Some time ago the Federal Council of Churches representing all Denominations of the Christian church in their annual meeting in Minneapolis suggested a revival in Bible reading for the new year. They suggested that the Gospel of Luke be read during the month of January and the Book of Acts during February. This is all inclusive so that every lover of the Book may and should be glad to enlist.

While everyone is in possession of or has access to a Bible or Testament to comply, yet that it may be the more possible the American Bible Society offers the penny gospels as a handy volume to accompany the reader everywhere. We were pleased at the eagerness with which the 100 gospels were received last Sabbath, and trust that all are put to real use. We still have more to pass out if there are others who will agree to read them.

FIVE CARS LIVE STOCK WERE SHIPPED SATURDAY NIGHT

Live stock shipments for Saturday night took quite a drop compared with the week before when seventeen car loads were shipped to the Chicago Market.

Only five car loads left the local yards Saturday night. Of this number the Klemme Shipping Association shipped 1 car load of sheep, and 1 car load of hogs. C. A. Larsen shipped 2 car loads of hogs and 1 car load of cattle.

Klemme is one of the big live stock shipping points along the Rock Island and always has far more car loads of stock than any other town along the line. Klemme buyers pay right up to top prices.

Martin Lau and son, of St. Paul came Tuesday evening for a short visit with Klemme relatives. Mr. Lau is a brother of William Lau, of this city.

FIRST SHOW DREW CAPACITY CROWD

IDLE HOUR THEATRE OPENED UNDER NEW MANAGER

M. O. Barr Showing Good Class Of Pictures; Vaudeville This Week

The opening night, Wednesday, of the Idle Hour Theatre, with Mr. M. O. Barr, as manager, was a big success. The theatre was packed to capacity for the opening picture.

The show Wednesday evening met with universal approvement and all said it was a fine picture.

Mr. Barr has booked a number of pictures. All are new and are high class.

Friday and Saturday nights of this week he has a vaudeville in connection with his pictures with no advance in prices. The vaudeville troup is at present appearing at Forest City.

Mr. Barr has gone to quite an expense in fixing up the hall in a very attractive way, has installed new lights and shades, and a Sani-Zone purifies the air.

He has had the picture machine overhauled and repaired so that it now gives a steady, clear picture.

Wednesday and Saturday nights are regular program nights. The Idle Hour program for the coming week appears elsewhere in this issue.

CHEVROLET SEDAN BURNED EAST OF KLEMME

A Chevrolet Sedan, about a 1924 model, caught fire and burned up on the road four and a quarter miles east of Klemme Tuesday night. The car bore a Cerro Gordo county license plate, but otherwise those who viewed "the remains" could not identify the owner.

A lantern hung on the radiator and the supposition is that flames from the lantern might have ignited the gasoline or oil near the radiator which caused the car to burn up.

The car was entirely destroyed by the blaze and only charred metal parts remained.

Elmer Ax Sings In Des Moines Choir For Christmas Programs

Mr. and Mrs. William Ax received a letter from their son, Elmer, who is attending school at Drake University, Des Moines, stating he could not find time to spend Christmas at home because of his duties there. Elmer is a busy young man, and besides attending school he has seven furnaces to fire and look after during the winter. Besides this he is keeping up vocal lessons and Christmas morning and night he sang in one of the big church choirs at Des Moines. A young man with his ambition will make good.

Celebrate 40th Wedding Anniversary

Ernest Lewis was home the first of the week as his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Lew Lewis celebrated their 40th wedding anniversary. Three children, Charley, Gertrude and Hollie could not be present. Mrs. Henry Lewis was the artist who baked the beautifully decorated cake for the event. There is only one other civil war veteran, besides Mr. Lewis, in this vicinity. The Times joins in extending best wishes and many more happy returns of the day.

Mr. and Mrs. Emil Kraus and daugther, Arlene, were visiting at Garner Sunday.

Don't forget to send or phone your news to The Times. We appreciate your help.

Birthday Surprise Party

A number of ladies gathered at the home of Mrs. Aug. Lau this afternoon to surprise her on her birthday. The ladies presented Mrs. Lau with appropriate gifts as a reminder of the happy event. The afternoon was spent in a social way after which a delightful lunch was served. All report a good time.

Rabbits Dying Of Disease

Ross W. Moses, district game warden, who has charge of Palo Alto, Kossuth and Humboldt counties, reports that scores of rabbits are dying in this section of the state. Evidently tularemia is causing the death of the rabbits. Local veterinarians state that this is not a new disease since rabbits have uffered with it for years.

Surprise Party On Men

Friday evening, Dec. 31st, Mrs. Clarence Kluckhohn and Mrs. Henry Lewis planned a successful birthday surprise party for their husbands. Card were enjoyed during the evening and at a late hour dainty refreshments were served. All report a good time.

Correction

We wish to make a correction in the write-up of the Smid-Schaefer wedding. The bride's name should have been spelled "Caroline," and not Geraldine as it was printed in a large number of mail edition papers The error was not noticed in time to correct in all the papers. This information is especially for our out of town readers.

Frank Gibbs and Harl Gimer left early Monday morning (at 4:30) to again take up their work at Morningside College, Sioux City. Dr. D. P. Anderson took the boys to Garner in his car and from that point they boarded a west bound train for Sioux City.

SCHOOLS OPENED HERE YESTERDAY

TEACHERS BACK AT WORK HAD FINE XMAS VACATION

Special Coach Secured For Work In Declamatory Contest

School work was resumed on Wednesday of this week. All of our faculty report a wonderful time and seem well rested and able for the remainder of the year. Pupils absent before Christmas because of illness are back to get ready for the final examinations of this semester scheduled for the last of next week.

Will Coach Declamatory Class

Selections are being made for the local declamatory contest which will be staged here on Thursday evening, January 27th. Mrs. Elsie Shepler Carmichael, of Clarion, a lady of considerable ability, experience and training, has been engaged as declamatory coach. She begins work with our students Monday, January 17.

Public speaking is receiving more attention than ever in the schools of today and parents who are anxious for their children to make the most of their opportunity will insist that they enroll for training with Mrs. Carmichael. The winners of first and second places will be able to speak again in the first round of county or state contests.

Those winning first places will compete in the Preliminary state contests while those winning second places will compete in the first round of our county declamatory contests. This plan offers opportunity to more of our students participating in this valuable school activity.

Will Play Hayfield Friday Eve

Our boys will go to Hayfield for a clash in basket ball Friday night of this week Hayfied has a husky outfit and may take our measure. But in this respect we "are from Missouri." After defeating our county seat's best five men we may be pardoned for being rather confident of our team's ability. If our lads are not displaying form in basket shooting, tho, we may come home with the little end of the score for they say Hayfield are deadly shooters.

She went across the room to a small closet. Even in the strain of the movement he observed the extraordinary grace and swiftness of her movements. She was very slender, very lithe, and she moved like a flash of light.

"Fancy my being caught without a lemon!" she scoffed, as she returned with the fruit. "Your brain-work stops abruptly sometimes, doesn't it?"

She handed him the lemons with a little gesture expressing amusement, triumph and a dash of coquetry. Laurie's eyes glowed as he looked at her. For the second time, in her actual presence, a sharp thrill shot through him. Oh, if she were always like this!—gay, happy, without that incredible, unbelievable background of tragedy and mystery! He turned his mind resolutely from the intruding thought. This hour at least was hers and his. It should be prolonged to the last moment.

What he longed for was to hear her talk, but that way, he knew, lay disaster to the little supper in swift-returning memory. If she began to talk, the forbidden topic, now dormant, would uncoil its hideous length and hiss. He must hold her attention to other things.

He plunged at random into chatter. For the first time he told her about Bangs, his chum, and about Epstein, their manager; about their plays and their experiences in rehearsals and on the road. Being very young and slightly spoiled, he experienced some chagrin in the discovery that she seemed alike ignorant of the men and the plays. Worse yet, she seemed not even aware that she should have known who Bangs and Epstein were. She did not recall having heard the title of "The Black Pearl." She was not only unaware that "The Man Above" had broken all box-office records; she seemed unconscious that it had ever been written. Observing his artless surprise, she gravely explained. "I have been interested in other things," she reminded him.

The forbidden topic was stirring, stretching. To quiet it, Laurie leaped into the comedy scenes of "The Man Above." They delighted her. Her soft, delicious laughter moved him to give her bits from "The Black Pearl," and, following these, the big scenes from the latter play. This last effort followed the supper; and Laurie, now in his highest spirits, added to his effects by the use of a brilliant afghan, and by much raising and lowering of the light of the reading lamp.

He was a fine mimic. He became by turns the star, the leading lady, the comedian and the "heavy" of the big play. It was only when he had stopped for a moment's rest, and Doris demanded a description of the leading lady's gowns, now represented by the afghan, that his ingenuity failed.

"They're so beautiful that most people think I made them," he said, serenely. "But I didn't, really, so I can't give you any details, except that they're very close-fitting around the feet."

He was folding up the afghan as he spoke, and he stopped in the act, leaving one end dangling on the floor. From the street below the sound of a whistle came up to him, sharp and penetrating, repeating over and over the same musical phrase, the opening notes of the Fifth Symphony. At first he thought the notes were whistled by some casual passer by. Then, glancing at the girl's face, he knew better. The sharp, recurrent phrase was a signal.

He finished folding the afghan, and carefully replaced it on the divan from which he had borrowed it. As he did so, he prattled on. He had suddenly decided not to hear that signal. Doris, sitting transfixed and staring at him, slowly became convinced that he had not heard it.

He glanced at his watch.

"A shocking hour!" he ejaculated. "Ten o'clock. If I go now, may I come back for breakfast?"

"You may not." She made an effort to speak lightly.

"To take you to luncheon, then, one?"

"No, please."

He shook his head at her.

"This is not the atmosphere of hospitality I am used to, but I shall come anyway. I'll be here at one. In the meantime, I suddenly realize that we are not using all our opportunities. We must change that."

He looked around as he spoke, and finding what he sought, picked it up. It was a small scarf, a narrow band of Roman silk carrying a vivid stripe. He held this before her.

"Something may happen some time, and you may want me in a hurry," he said. "I have observed with regret that you have no telephone in your room, but we can get on without it. My mirror reflects your window, you know," he added a little self-consciously. "If you need me, hang this scarf. Just drape it over the window catch. If I ever see it, I'll come prancing across the square like a knight to your rescue."

"Thank you."

She gave him her hand and the automatic smile that always subtly but tensely annoyed him. There was something in that smile which he could not understand, but he suspected that it held an element of amused understanding. So might Doris Delance, smile at her little son.

s he spoke he led the way down long hall with his noiseless, glid- steps. Laurie, following close be- d him, reflected that the place was actly the sort the ophidian Shaw uld choose for a lair, a long, black le, ending in—what?

The match had gone out and he uld see nothing. He kept close to s guide. He almost expected to hear e creature's scales rattle as it slid along. But snakes like warmth, and this place—Laurie shivered in the chill and dampness of it. The next instant Shaw pushed open a door and, standing back, waved his guest into a lighted room.

On first inspection it was a wholly reassuring room, originally intended for an office and now turned into a combination of office and living apartment. A big reading lamp with an amber shade, standing on a flat writing desk, made a pleasant point of illumination. Real logs, large and well seasoned, burned with an agreeable crackle in the old-fashioned fireplace. Before this stood two easy chairs, comfortably shabby; and at the arm of one of them a small table held a decanter, glasses, a siphon and a box of cigars.

As he took in these familiar details, Devon's features unconsciously relaxed. He was very young, and rather cold, and the quick reaction from the emotions he had experienced in the outer hall was a relief. Also, Shaw's manner was as reassuring as his homely room. He dropped the visitor's coat and hat on a worn leather couch, which seemingly served him as a bed, and waved a hospitable hand toward an easy chair. Simultaneously he casually indicated a figure bending over a table on the opposite side of the room.

"My secretary," he murmured.

The figure at the table rose and bowed, then sat down again and continued its apparent occupation of sorting squares of paper into a long, narrow box.

Laurie mentally classified the "secretary" as a big but meek blond person, who changed his collars and cuffs every Wednesday and Sunday, and took a long walk in the country on Sunday afternoons.

However, the fellow had pursuing eyes. Evidently his work did not need his whole attention, for his pale blue eyes kept returning to the guest. Once Laurie met them straight, and coolly stared them down. After this they pursued him more stealthily. He soon forgot them and their owner.

Despite Shaw's hospitable gestures, Laurie was still standing. He had chosen a place by the mantel, with one elbow resting upon it; and from this point of vantage his black eyes slowly swept the room, taking in now all its details—a typewriter, a letter file, a waste-paper basket that needed emptying, a man's worn bedroom slipper coyly projecting from under the leather couch, a litter of newspapers.

It was all so reassuringly ordinary that he grinned to himself. Whatever hold this little worm had on Doris—Shaw had even ceased to be a snake at this point in Laurie's reflections—would be loosed after tonight; and then she could forget the episode that had troubled her, whatever it was.

At precisely this point in his meditations Laurie's eyes, having completed a tour of the room and returned to the fireplace, made two discoveries. The first was that the room had no windows. The second, and startling one, was that it contained Doris' photograph. The photograph stood on the mantel, in a heavy silver frame. It was a large print and a good one. The girl's eyes looked straight into his. Her wonderful upper lip was curved in the half-smile that was so familiar and so baffling.

"Well," the smile asked, "what do you think of it all, now that you are here? Still a bit confusing, isn't it? For you didn't expect to find me here, seemingly so much at home; did you?"

In the instant when his eyes had found the photograph Laurie had been about to light the inevitable cigarette. The discovery arrested his hand and held for an instant, motionless. Then, with fingers that trembled, he completed the interrupted action, threw the match into the fire, and with blind eyes stared down into the flames.

In that instant he dared not look at Shaw. He was shaken by an emotion that left him breathless and almost trembling. What was Doris' photograph doing in this man's room? In the momentary amazement and fury that overwhelmed him at the discovery he told himself that it would not have been much worse to find her real presence here.

All this had taken but a moment. Shaw, hospitably busy with his decanter and siphon, had used the interval to fill two glasses, and was now offering one to his guest.

"No, thanks." Laurie spoke with abrupt decision.

"No?" Shaw looked pained. Then he smiled a wide smile, and Laurie, seeing it and the man's pointed teeth, mentally changed him again from the worm to the serpent. He understood Shaw's mental process. The fellow thought he was afraid to drink the mixture. But what did it matter what the fellow thought?

"Perhaps, then, you will have a cigar and sit down comfortably for our chat?"

Shaw himself set the example by dropping into one of the easy chairs and lighting a perfecto. His smooth brown head rested in what seemed an accustomed hollow of the chair back. His wide, thin lips were pursed in sybaritic enjoyment of his cigar. He stretched himself in the warmth of the fire, sleek, torpid and loathsome.

"Mr. Shaw."

"Y-e-s."

Still standing, with his elbow braced against the mantel, the visitor tossed his cigarette into the fire and looked down into his host's projecting eyes. It appeared that Shaw roused himself with difficulty from the gorged comfort of the moment. There was a perceptible interval before he gave his guest his whole attention. Then he straightened in his chair, and the projecting eyes took on their veiled but watchful look.

"Yes," he repeated, more briskly.

In the brief interval Laurie had planned his little campaign. He would address this creature as man to man; for perhaps, after all, there was more of the man in him than he revealed.

"I am going to ask you to be frank with me."

"Yes?" Shaw let it go at that.

"When we met on the street it appeared that you were as anxious as I am for this interview. Will you tell me at once why you brought me here, and what you wish to say?"

"Willingly." Shaw flicked the ash off his cigar, and kept his eyes on its lighted end as he went on: "I brought you here because I want you out of the way."

"Why?"

"Because, my temperamental young friend, you are a nuisance. You are interfering with my plans. I can't be bothered with you."

The sudden spark that in the old days would have warned Devon's friends of an impending outburst appeared now in his black eyes, but he kept his temper.

"Would you mind confiding these plans to me?" he suggested. "They would interest me, profoundly."

Shaw shook his brown head.

"Oh, I couldn't do that," he said, with an indulgent smile. "But I have a proposition to make to you. Perhaps you will listen to it, instead."

"I'll listen to it," Laurie promised.

"It is short and to the point. Give me your word that you will stop meddling in Miss Mayo's affairs, which are also my affairs," he added parenthetically, "and that you will never make an effort to see her again. As soon as you have given me this promise I will escort you to the front door and bid you an eternal farewell, with great pleasure."

"I'm looking forward to that pleasure, myself," confessed the visitor. "But before we throw ourselves into the delights of it, suppose you outline the other side of your proposition. I suppose it has another side."

Shaw frowned at his cigar.

"It doesn't sound pretty," he confessed, with regret.

"I'll judge of that. Let's have it."

"Well"—Shaw sighed, dropped the cigar into the tray at his elbow and sat up to face the young man with an entire change of manner—"the rest of it," he said calmly, "is this. Unless you make that promise we can't have the farewell scene we are both looking forward to so eagerly."

Smithings' Little Joke Didn't Impress Caller

The Smithings, coincident with young Smithing's admission to partnership in the firm, had moved to a more pretentious neighborhood. In their first few days there they made two acquaintances, Mary Jane Ammons and Mrs. Porter Wadlington. Acquaintance with Mary Jane, the romping five-year-old daughter of their next-door neighbor, was simple and inevitable. An introduction to Mrs. Wadlington, a prominent and influential clubwoman, had been effected through a mutual friend.

One afternoon Mr. Smithing saw Mary Jane race across their front yard. A moment later there was a knock at the door. He tiptoed to the door, turned the knob cautiously, then suddenly threw it open, remaining at the same time in hiding behind it.

There was a moment of utter silence. Then came a frigid feminine voice:

"Is there anybody at home?"

Smithing peered around the door. It was Mrs. Porter Wadlington!

His Promise

A southwestern banker tells of a man in his state who was continually hard up and had so many notes at the bank that he could not leave town except on Sundays and holidays. There was one note of his falling due every banking day. He dropped into the bank one day and spoke genially to the president. "I came in to fix up that little matter of mine," he said, "I'd like to renew it for a while."

The president had the note on his desk. He picked it up and studied it carefully. "Henry," he finally said, "I don't think this note is made out properly."

"Why not?" asked the borrower.

"It reads: 'I promise to pay,' not 'I promise to somesuch.'"

MEDIUM PRUNING AIDS RASPBERRY.

During the past seasons the Wisconsin Experiment station has carried on trials in heading-in the red raspberry, using approximately these three practices. The data secured in 1919 showed little difference in the crop secured from the light and medium pruning, but a marked reduction in the crop resulted from cutting back the canes severely.

In 1920 the plants receiving medium heading-in outyielded those which were given only a light pruning. The differences in some cases were quite marked. As in 1919, the severe heading-in materially reduced the crop. Later experiments have not changed these results to any great extent.

Either of two methods is used in heading-in the black raspberry. It may be pruned in the same way as the red, the heading-in, however, usually being more severe. As this method requires less attention it is the one usually followed in the home plantation. The yields received are ordinarily somewhat less than where the system of "summer pinching" is practiced.

The second method is commonly designated as "summer pruning" or "summer pinching." When this method is employed the tips of the new shoots are pinched out when they are 18 to 24 inches high. To carry out this method properly it is necessary to go over the plantation two or three times during the first half of the growing season, as all the shoots will not reach the desired size at the same time.

This "pinching back" will cause side branches to develop on which the fruiting wood of the following season will appear. These side branches are cut back in the spring, leaving them from 8 to 15 inches long. It may be advisable, also, when the number of new shoots is large to remove some of the weaker ones during the growing season.

Locate Orchard as Near Farm Home as Possible

The home orchard should be located near the home if possible. This is important because the producer will usually get more satisfaction and value out of the home orchard if the fruits can be procured easily and promptly when desired. It is possible, however, that in order to locate the fruits close to the house, it may be necessary that they be grown upon soil less adapted to fruit culture. Since one can usually make by extra care and attention the plot for the home orchard more desirable, this matter should not prevent the planting of a home orchard. The big factor to keep in mind is to locate the orchard as near the home as possible and in an accessible place. Under proper care and attention the soil will generally respond favorably.

Planting Distances for Fruit Trees Will Vary

The planting distances for all the fruits vary greatly, but, in general, the following may be used with good results: Apple—30 to 36 feet apart each way; pear—24 to 30 feet; peaches—20 to 24 feet; cherries—18 to 22 feet; plums—18 to 22 feet; grapes—8 feet in the row and 10 feet between the rows; currants and gooseberries—4 to 6 feet in the row and 6 to 8 feet between the rows; blackberries and raspberries—4 to 6 feet in the row and 8 feet between the rows; strawberries—commercial plantings are usually made 3 feet in the row and 3½ to 4 feet between the rows; for the home orchard, however, they may be planted much closer, from 1½ to 2 feet in the row and 2½ to 3 feet between the rows

Cheap Plan to Protect Fruit Trees in Autumn

A single rabbit has been known to girdle a dozen young fruit trees a day. The juicy bark is especially liked by both rabbits and mice.

It is cheaper to protect trees than bridge graft in the spring, according to L. O. Williams, extension horticulturist at the Kansas State Agricultural college. He advises the placing of a protection about the trunk which may be satisfactorily made from poultry wire, building paper, or cornstalks. Such protectors should be removed in the spring to prevent them becoming a harboring place for injurious insects, he says.

Various washes often substituted for protectors are not desirable as they must be renewed to remain effective.

Life of Spray Machine

The life of the spray machine will be greatly extended if this implement is thoroughly cleaned after the season's campaign is over and stored in a dry place. The tank should be drained and cleaned, the bases of the cylinders removed and all sediment washed out, the pressure relief valve cleaned and the pressure on it released, oil placed in all wearing parts, and the hose thoroughly drained and stored in a dry place where the temperature does not become too cold.

DIGGING UP RELICS OF ANCIENT LONDON

Finds of Exceptional Interest Recently Made.

A tableload of fossils and relics of human activity in bygone ages, taken from clay excavated on the site of the new Daily Mail building in London is being examined at the Guildhall museum, London, by archeological investigators who are composing from its contents a coherent story of this part of ancient London, says the London Mail.

The fact that the excavations have revealed no traces of the Roman occupation tends to confirm the belief that the area was just outside the district developed in that period.

The first recognizable finds were associated with the monastery of the White Friars. The new Daily Mail offices are being built on what was the garden of these Carmelite monks, the license to use this ground having been granted to them in 1807 by Richard II.

At that time the Thames flowed over the site of the present Daily Mail building (Carmelite house), and the south end of the monastery garden was the river bank. Earlier excavation work in the vicinity established the conviction that the friars disposed of their broken utensils by throwing them into the water at the foot of the garden and the discovery now of various vessels is regarded as important evidence of their domestic habits.

Particularly interesting is a part of a curious earthenware brazier which, from its shape and funnel devices, was apparently carried from cell to cell for cooking and heating purposes. Traces of the charcoal burned in it seven centuries ago still remain. Of the same date are several earthenware candlesticks, while a number of jugs of the Tudor period, used in the monastery before its dissolution in the reign of Henry VIII, have been found.

A tavern wine glass, kitchen utensils, and three-legged cooking pot glazed inside, are the most interesting specimens of the kind ever obtained in the Carmelite neighborhood. Notable among the discoveries, also, are several stoneware drinking bottles or jugs, cut to portray the features of an old man with a long beard, supposed to be a caricature of the Cardinal Bellarmino.

Until 1697 the mass of hovels remained the refuge of criminals, but the community disappeared in that year, when an act of parliament was passed revoking immunity from justice. Subsequently, on the site of the new premises, the Whitefriars glass works were erected.

No explanation has yet been found for a set of heavy glass cylinders found in the soil, but a heap of shapeless fragments of glass tells of an exciting episode in the history of naval recruiting. Resisting the press gang when it attacked the factory to seize the glass workers for navy service, the operatives poured melted glass on the heads of the attackers, who fled so precipitately that the officer in command was almost trampled to death.

Washington's Early Adventures Now Assuming New Significance

By HENRY BOTSFORD

AFTER well nigh a century and three-quarters a new interest has recently been aroused in the earliest military adventures of George Washington When barely twenty-one years old, in 1753, Washington was sent by Governor Dinwiddie of Virginia into the far northwestern wilderness—that is northwestern Pennsylvania—to warn the French that they must cease their efforts to occupy that region. Recen researches have given a new histori cal significance to that expedition, during which Washington, alway reckless of his personal safety, had one of his narrow escapes from death at the hands of a treacherous India guide.

The French at that time occupied Canada and claimed the Mississipp and Ohio Valleys. Though the fringe of English speaking colonies alon the Atlantic contained the chief Euro pean population, France maintained sovereignty over most of North Amer ica's area. They were apparently de termined to occupy northwestern Pennsylvania, partly because it was known even then to be rich in petroleum.

Region's Wealth Known

Pioneers and missionaries, Eng lish, French, German and Dutch, had all reported to their government that the petroleum was of great po tential value. There is, however no reason to believe that Washington knew of its existence or value until his adventure of 1753. Then he learn ed that the oil had long been used by the Indians and the pioneering whites for fuel and light, for medicine and in making war paint. Washington was so much impressed with its possibilities that he later became owner of a large area of oil-bearing lands. Although the petroleum industry in its modern form was then undreamed of, Washington was so sure that a fortune resided in his oil-bearing lands that in his will he listed them as his most valuable holdings. In the property schedule attached to the will he wrote

"This tract was taken up by General Lewis and myself on account of the bituminous spring which it contains, of so inflammable a nature as to burn as freely as spirits and as nearly difficult to extinguish."

The Will of Washington

Some historians declare that in an earlier will Washington dedicated this "burning spring" to the public. At any rate, it had passed from his ownership before his death He sold this tract for $200,000, but, suspecting it might revert to his estate under a mortgage, he warned his heirs that should it do so it would be worth much more than the $200,000

Although Washington's first knowledge of petroleum was gained within a few miles of the place where the first oil well in the world was drilled, that first well was not opened until one hundred and six years later, 1859. In that year, Edwin Laurentine Drake bored the first well just south of Titusville, Pennsylvania, and really started the modern petroleum industry

A Development Wonder

Today the American industry is the major part of the world's oil business. Americans are directing oil developments all over the world. It is all part of the huge problem to make sure that the tomorrows shall see America's requirements met. Every decade the production of petroleum has doubled. Science and technical progress have met all demands. Foreign investment and development are in the nature of insurance for the future

In the days of Drake and the industry's beginnings petroleum's value lay in lubricants and kerosene. The age of machinery was only beginning, with its insatiate demand for lubricants, while kerosene, though the best illuminant ever known, was dangerous because poor refining left gasoline that was liable to explode. It is difficult nowadays, when the world is being combed for more petroleum to make more gasoline, to realize that gasoline was once a nuisance and a menace. The internal combustion engine created the demand for gasoline, now the primary product of petroleum. The demands of millions of motor cars increasing constantly, invention and chemistry were set at work by the captains of the industry to make the barrel of petroleum turn out a larger and larger proportion of gasoline. This was done by the cracking process, through which every year now sees a larger proportion of crude oil turned into gasoline

High and Growing Demands

Today well-nigh 2,700,000 barrels of petroleum are required every day to satisfy the demand for motor cars, tractors, trucks, buses, artificial gas plants and the innumerable by-products. Invention is constantly finding new uses, as enterprise just as constantly finds new supplies of petroleum. The wonderful and rather mysterious fluid has revolutionized social habits and industrial methods; yet it is only two-thirds of a century since the industry had its feeble beginning in the Pennsylvania oil country

This year the country will use about 750,000,000 barrels of petroleum. The country will use 700,000,000 gallons of gasoline and will export 1,900,000 more. The production, processing and marketing of petroleum is probably second only to agriculture among American industries.

Roundly, 70 per cent of the world's petroleum industry is American. Ten billions of capital is invested in it—half the valuation of the national railroad system. It employs just about 1,000,000 people. The petroleum pipe line system, gridironing a good share of the country, aggregates about 85,000 miles. Petroleum revolutionized naval warfare by bringing in the oil burning ship; it is fast revolutionizing merchant marines in the same fashion. Multiplication of motor cars, along with the special taxation of their gasoline, has made possible the modern highway system.

A True Social Service

Perhaps the most nearly revolutionary result of Drake's modernization of the petroleum industry is to be found in the change it has brought in the life of rural America. It has carried the city to the country, the country to the city. It has, by making possible the cheap and quick transportation that everybody nowadays enjoys, enabled country and city to know and understand each other as they never did before. It has brought social and educational privileges to country dwellers that a few decades ago seemed absolutely denied to them. On the one hand it has enabled the cities to spread out into suburban areas and the zone of country estates; on the other, it has enabled the people of the open country to have neighbors, society, church and school privileges, intimate acquaintance.

It is a historic fact that the tendency toward division of interest and understanding between city and country is the most serious internal menace to the security of nations, to the integrity of society.

More than anything else, country and city need to know and understand each other and each other's problems. The easy transportation, the ready opportunity for association and acquaintance that have come with the Age of Petroleum have made possible, in this favored country at least, exactly this new intimacy and understanding.

Ridges Formed as the Earth Cooled

Although originally a molted mass, our earth has gradually been cooling. During this process the crust hardened and then the next skin would solidify and shrink, and so on, the result being that the outside layers would tend to fall inwards, "wrinkling" into ridges—our earliest mountain ranges. Cracks, too, would be formed, through which there would be eruptions, and other mountains were made with the thrown-up lava.

The enormously high original mountains were gradually worn down by rain and weather, but as some of their stones would be harder than others, they would not wear evenly, and this again makes another cause for ridges. Rivers, too, would cut a way through soft earth, forming plains, but leaving the hard rock standing up as mountains.

Quart of Water Cleans Kidneys

Take a Little Salts If Your Back Hurts, or Bladder Is Troubling You

No man or woman can make a mistake by flushing the kidneys occasionally, says a well-known authority. Eating too much rich food creates acids, which excite the kidneys. They become overworked from the strain, get sluggish and fail to filter the waste and poisons from the blood. Then we get sick. Rheumatism, headaches, liver trouble, nervousness, dizziness, sleeplessness and urinary disorders often come from sluggish kidneys.

The moment you feel a dull ache in the kidneys, or your back hurts, or if the urine is cloudy, offensive, full of sediment, irregular of passage or attended by a sensation of scalding, begin drinking a quart of water each day, also get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any pharmacy; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast and in a few days your kidneys may act fine.

This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for years to flush and stimulate the kidneys; also to help neutralize the acids in the system, so they no longer cause irritation, thus often relieving bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which everyone should take now and then to help keep the kidneys clean and active and the blood pure, thereby often avoiding serious kidney complications.

THE WORLD'S GREAT EVENTS

ALBERT PAYSON TERHUNE

(© by Dodd, Mead & Company.)

Arnold von Winkelried

SANDWICHED in between several large European nations is a little, mountainous country made up of twenty-two tiny states. These states differ from each other in religion, politics, industries, language and a hundred other points. Yet each and all are spendidly patriotic and united in their compact little federation. Their unity and freedom were bought by centuries of bloodshed and heroic resistance of stronger powers. This confederation of united provinces, or "cantons," is Switzerland.

It consists of former fragments of Italy, Germany and France welded into one nation. A few of these cantons banded together in 1291 in a defensive alliance against any outside foe, but particularly against Austria. Other cantons from time to time joined the alliance, until by the end of the Fifteenth century Switzerland was practically an independent country, with German, French and Italian as its official languages. The chief promoters of the original union were the men of the Schwyz valley, and from these the names "Swiss" and "Switzerland" are derived.

Switzerland's oldest and most relentless enemy was Austria. Austria was a duchy, not an empire, in the early stages of the struggle and was ruled by the Hapsburgs. The Hapsburgs, eager to annex new territory, encroached on Switzerland. The hardy mountaineers endured but a brief period of tyranny and soon flew to arms against their oppressors. Two heroes stand out as foremost in beating back the invaders.

In 1315 an Austrian governor, Gessler by name, was put in charge of the Uri district of Switzerland. Among other acts of tyranny he caused his hat to be mounted on a pole and commanded all passersby to bow to it. William Tell, a peasant, happened along, his crossbow slung over his shoulder and leading his little son by the hand. He refused to salute the hat. Gessler ordered his arrest. Learning that Tell was a famous marksman, the governor ordered him by way of punishment, to shoot an apple off his own son's head. Tell accepted the perilous test, and at the first shot split the apple in half without injuring the boy. Gessler was about to release him, when he noticed a second arrow stuck through the peasant's belt and asked why it was there.

"To shoot you if I had slain my son!" was Tell's reply.

Gessler, in fury, commanded him to be bound, thrown into a boat and rowed to the governor's castle on Lake Lucerne. On the way a storm sprang up. The boat was in danger, and Tell, being a skilled sailor, was unbound and set at the helm. He steered the boat on a rock, leaped ashore and escaped, shooting Gessler through the heart as the latter reached land. Tell then fled to the mountains and rallied his countrymen to resist the Austrian punishment that was certain to follow. Nor was he mistaken in his belief, for the Austrian Archduke Leopold, with nearly 20,000 men, invaded Switzerland.

Less than 1,500 Swiss gathered to oppose the invasion, and took up a position at the top of a steep mountain pass at Morgarten. The Austrians charged up the slippery slope, but were met by an avalanche of tree trunks and bowlders hurled down by the defenders. After a fruitless effort to overcome the handful of mountaineers the Austrians were driven back in wild disorder, leaving 1,500 dead on the field.

This victory attracted other cantons to the federation and taught Europe a wholesome respect for the plucky little states. But sixty years later Leopold III, nephew of the archduke who was so soundly trounced at Morgarten, led an army 6,000 strong against Switzerland. About 1,600 Swiss advanced to check him; and on July 9, 1386, the two armies met on a meadow slope near Sempach.

The ground was uneven and marshy and broken by streams and hedges. The heavy-armed, mounted Austrians could not deploy in such quarters as rapidly and skillfully as the lightly equipped Swiss infantry. Yet by force of numbers they made headway against the weaker foe and left no weak place in their barrier of spear-points through which the patriots could break. They were rapidly surrounding the Swiss preparatory to cutting them to pieces, when Arnold von Winkelried, from the canton of Unterwalden, rushed forward against the serried line of Austrian spears, and shouting, "Make way for Liberty!" grasped all the spears within his reach and gathered their points to his own breast. As he fell, pierced through and through, the weight of his body dragged the spears' points earthward with him, leaving a gap in the Austrian line which his comrades rushed though, over his dead body.

The result of the battle of Sempach was to break Austria's power in the united cantons. Other nations from time to time attacked the little free country, but with no better result.

And so, through the centuries, the tiny independent nation, whose watchword was "Liberty!" wrenched victory from adversity and freedom from the stronger hands of oppression, proving, even as the United States was later destined to prove, that mere force and tyranny can never bind men who are resolved to be free.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Our Policy in Nicaragua Bitterly Attacked in Latin America.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

IF ONE were to believe the press in some Latin-American republics and the alarmists at home, affairs in Nicaragua are approaching a crisis that will be very uncomfortable for the United States. But the administration pursues its course steadily and without the least appearance of being worried. Rear Admiral Julian B. Latimer, commanding our naval forces down there, has established a neutral zone that embraces the entire east coast of Nicaragua and has notified both sides in the civil struggle that any troops of either faction that enter that zone will be disarmed. Though the zone includes Puerto Cabezas, where Doctor Sacasa set up his liberal government, Admiral Latimer's action last week happened to strike hardest at the Diaz forces, for they suffered a severe defeat at Las Perlas and hundreds of them were forced to retire to El Bluff, where they were disarmed by the Yankee gobs. The Conservatives fought desperately for three days but could not withstand the attacks of the Liberals, who were said to have the help of 300 Mexican soldiers and officers.

Dr. T. S. Vaca, agent of the Liberal government in Washington, lodged with Secretary of State Kellogg an emphatic protest against the occupation of Puerto Cabezas by the Americans, asserting that it was unwarranted and that Doctor Sacasa was held in "practical imprisonment." At about the same time President Coolidge gave out a statement describing America's intervention as non-partisan and declaring that the only purpose in landing the bluejackets in Puerto Cabezas was the protection of the lives and property of American citizens. American marines, according to the President, have not molested Doctor Sacasa or any member of his cabinet. The Liberal president, it was pointed out, is now residing in a house lent by Americans at Puerto Cabezas.

Senator Borah, chairman of the senate foreign relations committee, after conferring with Secretary Kellogg and reading a cablegram from Admiral Latimer, issued a formal statement saying he did not believe it was the intention of the United States to intervene in the affairs of Nicaragua, but warning that the government should be "vigilant against being tricked into intervention."

"Naturally, we are interested in protecting our own people," the Borah statement continued. "But we should also bear in mind that to do anything more than is necessary to protect them is wholly unjustifiable. Those people have their own way of doing things, and not only this government but American citizens who go into these countries will have to take that into consideration. I am in favor of withdrawing our forces from Nicaragua just as soon as it can be ascertained that Americans are reasonably safe."

Senator Moses, also a member of the committee, is not so satisfied. He introduced a resolution calling on the State department for the correspondence leading up to the recognition of Diaz and relating to efforts to stabilize his government. It was presumed this would open the way to a general discussion of American policies in Latin-America.

Newspapers in Mexico, Brazil and Argentina are bitterly attacking the policy of the United States in Nicaragua. In Buenos Aires the press calls it part of the fixed program of the United States eventually to annex all of South America. But they are angered by our refusal to admit their beef and alfalfa seed, and suggest a boycott on American coal in retaliation. Unfortunately Ambassador Peter A. Jay, who could explain it all to the Argentina government, has resigned and is about to come home with the body of his daughter, who died there.

GREAT BRITAIN, recognizing the changed conditions in China, has communicated to the powers its new policy in the Orient and asked them to take a corresponding stand. The program calls for revision of the Washington treaty and all other outstanding questions as soon as the Chinese themselves have constituted a government with authority to negotiate, and proposes that the powers should abandon the idea that "economic and political development of China can only be secured under foreign tutelage and should declare their readiness to recognize her right to the enjoyment of a tariff autonomy as soon as she herself has settled and promulgated a new national tariff. They should expressly disclaim any intention of forcing foreign control upon an unwilling China."

The plan calls for the immediate unconditional grants of surtaxes contemplated by the Washington conference, and opposes any attempt by the powers to dictate the purposes to which the yield from the surtaxes should be devoted.

In the State department at Washington the British plan was read sympathetically and in general with favor. France doesn't like it. The press in Japan was unanimously opposed to it, the objections being probably prompted almost entirely by commercial considerations. Large Japanese exporters to China foresee considerable losses in what has been a lucrative field for them, and they have great influence with the government.

Marshal Chang Tso-lin of Manchuria has arrived in Peking, occupied the imperial palace and is giving out orders as a dictator. Meanwhile the northern leaders are reported to be gathering huge armies about Shanghai to prevent the imminent capture of that city by the Cantonese armies.

AROUSED by information that $100,000,000 worth of liquor had crossed from Canada into the United States during the year, and in response to loud protests in the Dominion and the United States, the government at Ottawa announced that it was determined to stop the rum running and to put into full effect immediately the treaty concerning it between Canada and this country. Hereafter any ships clearing from Canada with cargoes of liquor must prove beyond doubt that their cargo has been landed at the point for which clearance was granted, or else their bond for double excise duty will be forfeited. Where evidence is available that clearance papers are made out for fictitious trips, liquor cargoes will be seized and declared confiscated as contraband under the provisions of the Canadian customs act.

Holiday drinking in the United States resulted in the deaths of many persons due to the poisonous nature of the liquors, and opponents of prohibition cried loudly that the government was murdering American citizens. Treasury officials responded with the statement that the use of wood alcohol as a denaturant would not be discontinued, but that a new formula containing an unusually obnoxious compound would be substituted for some of the formulas in use hitherto. In other words, the liquor will be no less poisonous but will be so distasteful that, it is hoped, people will not be willing to drink it.

Rear Admiral Billard announces that "Rum Row" off the Atlantic coast has been entirely put out of business by the efforts of the coast guard.

THERE was widespread damage and great suffering, as well as several deaths, in the lowlands of Kentucky, Tennessee, Arkansas, Mississippi and Alabama, resulting from the overflowing of the rivers following tremendous rainfalls. Eastern Kentucky and Tennessee were the worst sufferers, but elsewhere also the crop losses were heavy. In other parts of the country, notably Ohio, there were extraordinarily heavy snowfalls that brought traffic to a standstill.

Two volcanoes on Kamchatka peninsula are in eruption, and though no loss of life is reported the property damage is severe. The city of Petropavlovsk is nearly buried under lava and ashes. Further west on the Russian coast several fishing villages were obliterated by great waves and masses of ice hurled on them during a storm. Heavy loss of life was reported there.

LITIGATION over the estate of Jay Gould that lasted ten years and enriched many lawyers was brought to an end by a compromise agreement making a series of lump sum settlements and annual payments amounting in all to about $20,000,000 to the many beneficiaries.

The estate has shrunk from $80,000,000 to about $50,000,000. Attorney Samuel Seabury of New York, acting as spokesman for the attorneys concerned, said that Anna, duchesse de Tallyrand, had settled an $11,000,000 claim for less than $3,000,000. A desire to mend family differences actuated this settlement, Mr. Seabury said. He informed Referee O'Gorman that both Frank J. Gould and the duchess held the deepest affection for Helen Gould Shepard, one of the trustees, and felt that no matter how mistaken her course of conduct had been it had not been marked by any trace of dishonor.

AWARD of the Woodrow Wilson Foundation peace prize for 1928 was made to Elihu Root, former secretary of state, at a banquet in New York on the anniversary of Wilson's birth. The presentation was made by Norman H. Davis, president of the foundation, who said it was in recognition of Mr. Root's work in 1920 in the creation of the permanent court of international justice.

MAJOR DARGUE and his comrades in the pan-American army airplane tour, went up to Mexico City and were received by President Calles. They presented to him a flowery letter from President Coolidge and received an equally flowery missive for Mr. Coolidge. Naturally, there was in the documents no slightest hint that relations between the two governments were not entirely pleasant.

GREETED by a million people, the former Crown Prince Hirohito of Japan entered Tokyo and mounted the throne of his ancestors, succeeding to the imperial title on the death of his father, Yoshihito. At his first levee the new emperor read an outline of his policies, saying in part:

"Conditions throughout the world have recently undergone significant changes. The thoughts of men are liable to follow contradictory channels. The economic life of the nation is occasionally marked with the conflict of varied interests. Accordingly it is important to fix one's eyes upon the general situation of the country and unite the efforts of the whole people in promoting the solidarity of the nation, in strengthening still further the foundation of the national existence and securing forever the prosperity of our people.

"Simplicity instead of vain display, originality instead of blind imitation, progress in the view of this period of evolution and improvement to keep up with advancing civilization; nations harmony in purpose and action; beneficence to all classes of people and friendship for all nations on earth. These are the cardinal aims of many whereto our profoundest abiding solicitudes are directed."

CONSIDERABLE importance is attached to the signing on Wednesday of a treaty of friendship and arbitration between Germany and Italy. Though it is not an alliance, the pact is expected to bring the two countries again into amicable relations and to have a bearing on the shaping of the political alignment in Europe. It shows a spirit of co-operation and desire to clear up the misunderstandings of the past year.

BUSINESS men of America formed a commission to investigate the agricultural problem and its relation to the economic life of the nation. Charles Nagel of St. Louis is chairman of the commission, which was created jointly by the national industrial conference board and the Chamber of Commerce of the United States. Mr. Nagel said that while information and suggestions would be sought from leaders in all fields of business and agricultural activity "the commission's findings and recommendations must be entirely its own, uninfluenced and free even from the policies and attitudes of either of the two organizations that have co-operated in organizing the commission."

Lesson for January 9

THE STANDARD OF CHRISTIAN LIVING

LESSON TEXT—Luke 6:27-38.

GOLDEN TEXT—Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect.

PRIMARY TOPIC—How Jesus Wants Us to Live.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Marching Orders for Christians.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—What Christ Requires of Us.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Christ's Life and Example for Us.

The context (v. 26) clearly implies what is elsewhere positively declared (John 15:18-21; Luke 21:17) that the followers of Christ will be hated and opposed. In this lesson Christ sets forth the principles governing the life of his followers.

I. "Love Your Enemies" (v. 27).

Love here is not a natural affection. To love friends is easy, but to love enemies is only possible to those who have been made partakers of the divine nature—been born again.

II. "Do Good to Them Which Hate You" (v. 27).

Love is positive in its nature. The true Christian will not merely refrain from doing injury to one who hates him, but will be concerned with and engaged in doing good to him. True love acts according to its own essential nature.

III. "Bless Them That Curse You" (v. 28).

To bless means to speak well of—to invoke a blessing upon. Injury by words is hard to let go unchallenged. The one who is a child of God and allows the Spirit of his Maker and Redeemer to express itself through him will return blessings for cursings.

IV. "Pray for Them Which Despitefully Use You" (v. 28).

We should pray for those who abuse us. The best commentary on this precept is Christ's own example (Luke 23:34), "Father forgive them for they know not what they do." When Christ was reviled He reviled not again. When He suffered, He threatened not, but committed Himself to Him that judgeth righteously. (I Pet. 2:23).

V. Patiently Endure Wrong and Injury" (v. 29).

The Christian is not to bristle in defense of his rights but rather to suffer insult, injury and even loss. This expresses the law which should govern the individual's actions, but should not be pressed so far that evildoers can go unchecked. Rightly constituted government has been ordained of God for the protection of the innocent and the punishment of evildoers (Rom. 13:1-8).

VI. Give to Every One That Asketh of Thee (v. 30).

God is the supreme example. He gives freely and generously but intelligently. This text does not authorize indiscriminate giving. There is a giving which injures the one to whom the gift is made. To give a man money to buy whisky would be wrong.

VII. Do as You Wish to Be Done By (v. 31).

This is called the Golden Rule. It is the sum total of Christian duty as it pertains to human interrelations. Human beings carry with them the consciousness which is the touchstone which teaches them their duty to others. If men were to live up to this rule the problem of capital and labor would be solved and end would be put to war. International relations would be peaceably adjusted and all profiteering in business would end. Practicing this precept proves that we are children of God. Loving those who love us, doing good to those who do good to us, lending to those who lend to us, is the common practice even among sinners. No new birth, no Holy Spirit needed to live this kind of life.

VIII. Be Merciful (v. 36).

This means to be filled with pity and compassion. To enter into sympathy with every need of others. The supreme example as to this is the Heavenly Father.

IX. Censorious Judgments Condemned (v. 27).

This means that we should not seek out the evil or faults in others for our satisfaction. We should not sit in censorious judgment upon the actions of others. However, it does not prohibit the just estimation of the character of others by their deeds.

X. The Compensations of Right Living (v. 38)

The one who gives freely of money, loves sincerely, makes the Golden Rule the standard of his life, shows mercy and kindness to others, and refrains from impugning the motives of others will be fully rewarded in kind. God will see to it that there be no loss.

HOME-SEWING TIME IS NEAR; GORGEOUS EVENING WRAPS

YES, the time has come to plan for spring sewing. Now that all the holiday decorations are packed away for another season, the "thank yous" all written, the children back at school, too early for golf, too late for grand opera, what to do but sew, sew, sew! Surely all signs are propitious for a January sewing bee.

House frocks to make, a supply of dresses for the kiddies, draperies for the windows—let's study up "what's new" in spring wash goods. Notebook handy? Might want to jot down a few items for reference.

For one thing, write as an opening notation that prints are outstanding for spring. Quaint chintz patterns and grandmother prints, printed sateens, and especially printed batistes and dimities. "They say" small figures will predominate, especially on the heavier weaves, though peering into the far future one sees big-flowered organdies.

Fabrics on the order of pongee, also English cotton reps and Scotch madras are favored for washable daytime frocks, likewise rayon mixtures.

Competing with the new prints is broadcloth in a range of delectable plain colors. This is an ideal fabric for sports and simple daytime frocks, for it launders perfectly. There are also printed broadcloths to be had. These, with novelty rayons, show mostly small patternings.

As to styling, the trend is toward something clever and "different" from the some-time-ago popular bungalow apron effect. There is a decided favor expressed for short sleeves. Some of the newest spring models introduce the bolero—if not actually, at least simulating it. Pockets are made much of, following the inspiration, no doubt, of winter styles.

It is "pockets" which give to this dress of sateen print which you see in the picture a note of individuality.

Evening wraps are reveling in a veritable orgy of gorgeousness. It seems as if elaborateness cannot be carried too far to please women of smart fashion. "Temperance in all things"—except the formal coat or cape, which may carry to excess color, fur and novelty handstitching without transgressing the law of fashion.

The wrappy coat which swathes the figure is perhaps the favorite. Often it introduces a draped treatment, after the manner of the model in this picture. Superb turquoise blue velvet is the chosen medium for this exquisite wrap. It is embroidered over the hips with silver spangles and stars over a rosy silver cloth. Of course it is smartly befurred, for most of the evening wraps are. In this instance luxurious silver gray fox is the preferred trimming.

There is spirited rivalry between velvet, brocade and metal cloth for the formal wrap. When velvet is used it is in some gloriously illuminative shade, lavishly furred, shirred, draped and embroidered.

As to metal brocade, it fairly effervesces with what might be called jewel colorings, for theirs is the red of the ruby, the yellow of the topaz, the green of the emerald, the purple of the amethyst reflected amid the glint of gold and silver weave. Quite often huge collars of shirred velvet usurp the place of furs on the gorgeous brocade wrap.

Charming for young girls are semi-wrappy coats styled either of cloth-of-silver or cloth-of-gold. Collars and cuffs of white rabbit emphasize their youthfulness.

Recent arrivals from Paris embody many decorative ideas which give promise of a continuance of elaborateness throughout the styling of evening wraps.

The facility with which engineering concerns can estimate costs of constructing machinery and equipment is little short of amazing to the uninitiated, says the Wall Street Journal. If a call comes for a generator or turbine of unusual size the engineer quickly calculates the price to be charged as so many hundreds of thousands of dollars, or even millions. It is largely based on weight. The same process has been extended to other lines. After weighing their incoming mail over an extended period and studying the resultant records, big mail-order houses are now able to estimate exactly the aggregate value of the orders received each day by the simple process of weighing them. Tabulation of the individual orders has shown that these estimates differ from the actual by only a small percentage.

Marco Polo's Inspiring Book Written in Cell

Marco Polo, the Venetian traveler, made copious notes on his travels to strange countries, but he did not seem to have an idea of writing a book. Travelers did not write books in his day.

However, when he was captured and imprisoned in a war between Genoa and Venice, he chanced to be placed in a cell with a man named Rusticiano of Pisa, a sort of literary hack. Rusticiano heard Marco's story and then persuaded him to tell it while he wrote. Thus was Marco's famous book written by another.

The book did not take so well at first. The new and wonderful things related in it were regarded as fiction. But in time the book became popular, was translated into many languages and had a great effect in awakening the curiosity and interest of Europeans in the eastern countries. No other travel book ever had such influence.—Pathfinder Magazine.

Heroine of Boer War

Emily Hobhouse is dead. Her relation to the Anglo-Boer war of 1899-1902 was that of Florence Nightingale to the Crimean war. South Africa will never forget her work in the concentration camps, where Boer women and children, driven thither after their homes had been burned and their provisions looted, died like flies. There are farms in the Transvaal, in the northern Cape colony and in the Orange Free State where the mention of her name is still accompanied by a reverent raising of the hat.—The Nation.

Pity the Intelligentsia!

President Sumner of Talladega college said in Talladega the other day: "The intelligentsia all over the world—the college professors and ministers and poets and scientists — are having a hard time of it. Between capital on the one side and labor on the other they are being pretty badly flattened out. The way they have to economize!

"I heard of a young college professor last month who, after he'd been accepted by a pretty girl, slipped on her finger a combination engagement, wedding and teething ring."

Old Folks Need a Mild Laxative —Not a "Physic"

Most men and women past fifty must give to the bowels some occasional help, else they suffer from constipation. One might as well refuse to aid weak eyes with glasses as to neglect a gentle aid to weak bowels.

Is your present laxative, in whatever form, promoting natural bowel "regularity"—or must you purge and "physic" every day or two to avoid sick headache, dizziness, biliousness, colds, or sour, gassy stomach?

Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin helps to establish natural, regular bowel movement even for those chronically constipated. It never gripes, sickens or upsets the system. Besides, it is absolutely harmless and pleasant to take.

Buy a large 60-cent bottle at any store that sells medicine or write "Syrup Pepsin," Monticello, Illinois, for a FREE SAMPLE BOTTLE and just see for yourself.

Hairless Mice

An English naturalist, H. C. Brooke, has been experimenting with the regulation of hair growth. In 16 days he succeeded in producing a strain of mice whose heads were bald. A few days later they lost all their fur. Brooke says that hair is purely a matter of heredity. The time may come, he asserts, when men, if they want to, can dispense with the morning shave and women can forget their hair troubles.

When Winter Comes

Good Elimination Is Essential

HABITS of life change with the changing seasons. Winter brings us more indoors; we are apt to get less fresh air and exercise, to eat heavier food and to be less active generally. These winter-time habits impose heavier burdens upon our hard-working kidneys.

Sluggish kidney function permits retention of poisonous waste in the blood and makes one an easier victim of winter's colds and chills. Presence of these unfiltered toxins makes itself felt in many unpleasant ways. One is apt to feel tired, achy and listless — to have drowsy headaches, dizziness and perhaps a dull, "toxic" backache That the kidneys are not functioning as they should is often shown by scanty or burning secretions.

At such times the use of a stimulant diuretic* to the kidneys is indicated. Doan's Pills act on the kidneys only. Grateful users the country over recommend them. Ask your neighbor!

*Diuretics are agents which increase the secretion of the kidneys—Encyclopaedia definition.

NEXT MEETING OF P. T. A. TUESDAY

PROGRAM WILL BE GIVEN AT THIS MEETING

December Meeting Was Postponed Until This Date

Our P. T. A. will render the program prepared for December but which was postponed then because of the bad weather, will now be given on Tuesday evening, January 18 at 8:00 o'clock.

Rev. Calvin Grosshuesch will give the principal address. Harvey Nelson will read a paper on, "Why the Farmer Needs More Education."

There will be several musical numbers and if possible we hope to have a reading or two.

SEMESTER EXAMINATIONS ARE GIVEN THIS WEEK

Markings On Grade Report Cards Are Again Explained

This week ends the first semester of our school year and the last two days of the week will be employed in dicovering how effective has been our instruction and how well the subjects have been digested by students taking them. Students who have taken their work with sufficient seriousness and who have applied themselves with due diligence are not apt to fail if average ability has been displayed.

The markings are indicated on the grade cards but not on the cards in use by our high school. Hence we again repeat that "A" means work of a high order, the very best that has been done in the subject. The letter "B" indicates work above average, "C" of a quality done by the average in the class, "D" work below average, while "E" denotes work has been unsatisfactory and unacceptable and that there is a condition to be removed or failure will follow. In subjects as English, history and mathematics, pursued a whole year an "E" will mean that there may still be a chance for a credit if last half year shows marked improvement in the subject. "F" will mean an unconditional failure and that the subject must be repeated. We dislike to award such a letter as much as students dislike to receive it but the standards of our school work could not eaily be maintained without a few such awards.

New Subbjects Are Offered

Some new courses will be offered next semester beginning next week, such as Occupations in the Sophomore class, American Government in the Senior Class and Social Problems in both Junior and Senior classes. These will succeed Ancient History, American History, and Economics, offered this term. These are both practical and interesting courses which are offered in many, perhaps most of our Iowa high schools.

SHIFTY SHAMROCKS WIN OVER HAYFIELD IN B. B. GAME

"Abe's" Team From Renwick Here This Weew Friday Evening

Mr. Hockey's Shifty Shamrocks humbled the Hayfield Boys last Friday night at Hayfield, defeating them by a whirlwind finish after trailing most of the game. Hayfield put up a stubborn fight to maintain their record of no defeats on their home floor for the past two years. The game was close, ending with a margin of but one point, 19 to 18 in favor of Klemme.

Abe's Team Is Next Victim

"Abe's" team from Renwick will be here on Friday night of this week bent on avenging the defeat administered them last year both here and at Renwick. The game last year with Renwick here was the best attended game of the season and we anticipate a large attendance this year. "Abe" says he has a better team than last year and our boys here contend they can play a better brand of ball than last year and the game promises to be a battle royal. "Abe" is determined and Hockey is confident. Both have pointed their boys to Friday night and said, "You must win the game on Jan. 14 if you lose all others!" One or the other of these two coaches is doomed to disappointment, but we hope it is not Lawson E. Hockey. "Abe" has put the fighting spirit in our Shamrocks by rooting for Garner in our game here New Year's Eve. They all say 'Beat Renwick or break a tug." Basket ball fans, we predict, will miss the big game of the season unless they are on hand Friday night. It will be worth the price of admission to see Abe tear his hair if his team loses, or break his belt and scatter the buttons off his yest if it should be victorious.

GIVES REPORT ON COUNTY ROAD WORK

MERTEN TELLS OF WORK DONE THE PAST YEAR ON ROADS

County Graveling Road System To Bo Completed By 1930

The following is a brief summary of my official report for the year of 1926. I have tried to include only those details which are of general interest and additional information may be secured at my office by anyone desiring it.

During 1926 we completed the grading of the road from Hutchins to Corwith and from Miller east to the county line. Both of these roads were under construction during 1925. In addition to this we graded 7½ miles of road south of Corwith. The total number of miles graded during the year was 14, and the average cost was $928.43 per mile.

During the year we graveled the Britt-Crystal Lake road, the Hutchins-Woden road, the Hutchins-Corwith road, and the county road west of Corwith, a total of 27½ miles. The average cost of this graveling was $1,514.55 per mile.

We maintained 114 miles of county road thruout the year at an average cost of $117.32 per mile.

The road equipment costs of the year were as follows: One Best Tractor, $5,595.00, one Adams grader, $1,880.00, other equipment and repairs, $673.86.

The total amount spent on county roads from the county road fund was $61,865.07, from the primary road fund was $22,201.38, making a total of $84,066.45.

We built 9 concrete bridges and culverts during the year which cost us $12,265.00, and 5 wooden bridges which cost us $2,166.42. We bought corrugated culverts to the amount of $5,194.25 and spent $3,-048.41 for bridge repairs and equipment. The total cost of all bridge and culvert work was $23,421.27.

On the primary roads we spent for maintenance $22,781.45, an average of $393.00 per mile. We paid off $75,000.00 in primary road bond in 1926.

We have on the primary road system of Hancock county 24 miles of paving, and 34 miles of graveled road. On the county road system we have 44 miles of graveled road and 70 miles of dirt road. At the present rate of progress we will complete the graveling of our county system about 1930.

The publication of the above is not official and you are at liberty to publish as much or as little as you wish. C. F. MERTEN.

(Editor's Note. We thank Mr. Merten for his report which is of great interest and of real value to our readers.)

WAIVER TRIED OUT FAILS AT BRITT

WORKERS UNABLE TO BRING 7 DEPOSITORS INTO PLAN

Britt Will Continue To Be Without A Town Bank Now

BRITT, Jan. 13—The waiver plan of re-organization of the First National bank of Britt has failed because seven people holding $50,000 of the deposits refused to sign the waivers. One, living outside of Britt, had $21,000 in the bank. Only one other was a person living outside of Britt.

Among the farmers the plan went over well and there were 1,600 waivers signed when the committee halted because it was necessary to have the seven depositors aforementioned to put the plan across.

There was $414,112.21 signed and it would require a little more than $475,000. Public moneys in the amount of $110,000 were not taken into consideration.

The bank now goes into receivership but the department has not as yet named the receiver.

WM. SCHLAWIN HAS AUTO ACCIDENT AT GARNER

(Garner Leader)

A couple of automobiles collided on the pavement, a couple of miles west of town Wednesday evening about 4:00 o'clock. One of the cars was a Chevrolet sedan owned and driven by Wm. Schlawin who resides south of Garner, and the other was a Buick 4-passenger sedan owned by Mr. Hatton, of Britt, and driven by his wife. Mr. Hatton is a drainage contractor at Britt. Mr. Schlawin resides upon a farm. Schlawin had been in attendance upon a Farm Bureau meeting at Britt. Details of the accident the Leader did not learn, but it is understood that a rut in the snow on the pavement hindered the cars in passing. We do not know how the Buick looked, but the Chevrolet was a sorry looking sight with a couple of crumpled fenders, a demolished running board, and transmission oil running from the housing that covers the rear gears.

Balky Waffles

An electric waffle iron should never be greased. If your waffles stick perhaps you have not put enough melted butter or other shortening into the batter. One or two extra tablespoons of melted shortening in the batter will often prevent sticking Also when the waffle is brown and crisp and ready to take out of the iron, thrust a fork firmly into it and lift the waffle straight up. If you work around the edges with a knife attempting to loosen it in that way, the waffle will break and be almost impossible to get out whole.

LONELY SOLDIER IN TEXAS IS CHEERED AT XMAS TIME

Package From Friends Of Soldiers Brings Forth Joy To Lonely Man

The two following letters from C. W. Heidel, a soldier at Legion, Tex., who has spent three years in a government hospital, is of great interest to our readers and shows how much Christmas gifts are appreciated by these unfortunate heroes of the World War.

The letters follow:-

LOUIS HALPHEN POST NO. 379
—American Legion—
Legion, Texas

December 13, 1926.

Mrs. Paul Grange,
Klemme, Iowa

Dear Mrs. Grange:-

Have I violated the old established rule by "opening it before Christmas"? If I have, I am sorry but you see this is the first package that I have ever received from any of the Legion Auxiliaries. It is not that I am so "new" in these hospitals as this makes my third consecutive Christmas, I guess it was just an oversight.

My reason for writing so soon and thanking you for your kindness is because I expect to be very busy for the next two weeks and the time not spent in bed, will be spent at this macnine. I am Adjutant of this Post and will have worlds of work on my hands during the "Christmas rush."

Mrs. Grange, everyitem in the box is highly appreciated. I will read the copies of the Iowa Legionaire to the last word on the last page. I really cannot thank you enough but by reading my letter to little Dorance, perhaps you will understand.

Sincerely,
C. W. HEIDEL.

U. S. Hospital No. 93,
Legion, Texas

Master Dorance Grange,
Klemme, Iowa

Dear Dorance.-

Are you going to be a good boy and excuse me for writing you on a typewriter? I hope so because I am very nervous and you could not read what I wrote with a pen.

Sonny, (you are such a manly looking little chap that I cannot help but call you that) you will never know how much I thank you and your father and mother for your Christmas present. I have been in the hospital for three years and this is the first one I have ever received Your picture makes it a "personal" present and your picture is going in a little frame on my table. I have a little room just large enough for a single bed, a table and a chair. The room is not very cheerful and your picture will help brighten it up. When I get the "blues" I am going to look at it and wonder many things about you. I am going to wonder if you are going to be a great foot ball player (as your name would indicate) or are you going to be a radio engineer? I believe you are going to be an engineer because your picture makes me think that you are working on your "antenna."

Sonny, when you are as old as I and when you think that you are so hard that nothing affects you; when you get to the point where you can look down on what a few minutes ago was a friend but is now a corpse, shrug your shoulders and say, "He is out of his misery," and promptly forget him; that is when I hope you get a Christmas present that is a real surprise and I hope that it will bring tears in your eyes, as it did in mine. It isn't that I am wicked because I don't drink, gamble or swear but it is just a feeling of "no one cares" that comes over a fellow.

I have a wonderful father and mother but I see them so seldom. It may be two or three years before I see them again because we are so far apart. You must have wonderful parents too, Sonny, because this day and time people don't usually treat strangers as they have treated me.

I am going to see if I cannot find a kodak picture of myself and enclose it with this letter. It is more of a confession than a letter and I feel better for it and I know that you will not betray my confidence.

Your "big Buddy,"
C. W. HEIDEL.

Nine Meetings In First Series To Bo Held Next Week

The first series of meetings of the county wide corn project being put on by the Hancock County Farm Bureau will be held during the week of January 17th.

Soil will be tested free of charge at these meetings. Anyone wishing to bring samples are welcome to do so.

These meetings will be in charge of Mr. J. L. Boatman, Soil Specialist from the Extension Service at Ames. Everyone is welcome to attend and urged to bring their soil questions for Mr. Boatman to answer.

The following is the schedule of meetings:

Sold To Public Utilities

The towns which sold their municipal electric lighting establishments during the year 1926 are Arion, Bassett, Deloit, Eddyville, Marshalltown, Merrill, Moorhead, Moville, Schaller, Beaver, Bode, Buck Grove, Hardy, Kanawha, Laurens, Lidderdale, Melvin, Palmer, Rodney, Vail, Varina, Vincent, Yetter, Matlock and Havelock.

T. B. Declines

Coincident with the decline of tuberculosis among cattle and hogs is an official report of a decreasing human death rate from the disease, says the United States Department of Agriculture. The low mortality of children under four years may be attributed in part to the aggressive campaign for testing tuberculous cattle and disposing of animals affected with the disease.

Keep Zinc From Food

Liquid foods including buttermilk milk, cider and other fruit juices should not be allowed to stand for even a short time in a galvainzed iron vessel, nor should such a utensil be employed in making preserves, jellies, etc. The zinc used in galvanizing will dissolve and give the food an unpleasant taste and may cause sudden and intense illness.

Hot Lead—Cool Language

A spinister living in a Des Moines suburb was shocked at the language used by two men repairing a telegraph wire close to her home.

She wrote to the company on the matter and the foreman was asked to report.

This he did in the following way:

"Me and Bill Jones were on this job. I was up the telegraph pole, and accidently let the hot lead fall on Bill. It went down his neck. Then he said, "You really must be more careful, Mike'."

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Senate Ready to Exclude Mr. Smith of Illinois—Navy Controversy.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

FRANK L. SMITH, senator-designate from Illinois, will not be permitted to take his seat in the United States senate if the plan agreed upon by apparently a great majority of the senators is carried out. When and if he presents his credentials, they are to be referred to the committee on privileges and elections, and whatever may be the report of that committee on his qualifications, it seems certain that he will be excluded on the ground that he is disqualified for an office of public trust by his acceptance of money from the public utility magnates, whose properties were subject to the regulation of the Illinois commerce commission, of which he at the time was chairman.

This program was adopted after the senate had heard a long speech from McKellar of Tennessee, Democrat, vehemently demanding the exclusion of Smith. Borah, Deneen and some others indicated an intention of contending that Smith should be permitted to take the oath pending the investigation of his qualifications. This would permit him to defend himself before the senate, and it was said he was prepared to do this partly by telling the sources of Republican campaign funds in 1924 and arguing that he is no more disqualified for public office than is President Coolidge.

CONGRESSIONAL advocates of a bigger navy continued their efforts toward that end during the week, but the President stood so firmly on his platform of economy that their ultimate defeat was predicted. They thought Mr. Coolidge had been forced to modify his program when Representative Tilson, Republican floor leader, introduced an amendment to the pending naval supply bill for an appropriation for the construction of the three unbuilt light cruisers authorized in 1924. But the President immediately wrote a letter to Representative French declaring that his attitude advising against any construction other than the completion of the five 1924 cruisers now under way, pending the outcome of negotiations for another limitation of armament conference, remains unchanged. Representative Britten of Illinois, who had introduced an amendment for the elevation of turret guns on 11 battleships, thought the President was too optimistic about that conference. Another amendment, providing for the construction of a new dirigible, was adopted.

Of almost equal importance in the matter of national defense was the inquiry into the general state of the army begun by the house military affairs committee. Among the first witnesses heard were Secretary of War Davis and Maj. Gen. Fox Conner, deputy chief of staff. They told the committee that the budget bureau's cuts in the appropriations asked by the War department would make necessary a reduction of 4,998 in the army personnel, which already is 8,000 below the average strength of the last four years.

In the senate the demands of the "big navy" men were voiced by Senator Johnson of California, who declared it the heighth of folly to cripple our first line of defense at a time when our war creditors are hating us and all the world is envying our prosperity. Senator Hale of Maine, chairman of the naval affairs committee and an administration supporter in most things, followed with a speech in favor of building the American navy in all classes of ships up to the 5-5-3 ratio established by the Washington conference.

WETS in both the senate and the house opened up a vigorous attack on the policy of the federal government which permits the use of deadly poisons in the denaturing of alcohol as a part of the enforcement of the prohibition law. They had a long list of deaths laid to the drinking of poisoned liquor during the holidays, and their denunciations were fierce. The senate adopted a resolution introduced by Edwards of New Jersey calling upon Secretary of the Treasury Mellon to produce whatever correspondence may have passed between the Treasury department and Wayne B. Wheeler, general counsel of the Anti-Saloon league, in connection with the poisoning of industrial alcohol to make it unfit for beverage purposes. Several members of the house introduced resolutions and other measures dealing with the use of poisonous denaturants. Mr. Celler of New York raised a storm by asserting that congressmen drink to excess and refused to retract though others declared the assertion was "an utter falsehood."

Brig. Gen. Smedley D. Butler, who fought the bootleggers and grafters of Philadelphia for many months, seems to have changed his mind about prohibition. In an address in Oakland, Calif., the commander of marines on the Pacific coast denounced the eighteenth amendment as class legislation, saying it reacted against the poor man and favored the rich one. Its principal demerit, he indicated, is the manner in which enforcement has grown out of it.

MATTERS between Cantonese forces and the British approached a real crisis last week when a mob of Chinese at Hankow, infuriated by anti-foreign harangues, attacked the British concession, took possession of public buildings, hoisted the revolutionary flag and forced the foreign business houses to close. The British residents fled to the French and Japanese concessions and all the British women and children in Hankow, Kiugiang and Ichang were removed by vessels, most of them being taken to Shanghai. The Cantonese officials were appealed to by the British consul and the inadequate British forces there were withdrawn, control of the area being surrendered to the nationalist commander. The British government ordered naval reinforcements from Hongkong, and American and French naval forces were held ready to land if the necessity arose. The hostility of the natives in the Yangtse valley so far is directed almost wholly against the British.

FOR the first time since their withdrawal in August, 1925, the American marines are in Managua, Nicaragua, together with some American sailors—106 in all—commanded by Capt. Julius C. Townsend of the navy. Landing from the U. S. S. Galveston at Corinto, the party went to the capital by train and was warmly welcomed by the Nicaraguan national guard and the officials of the Diaz government. It was sent to Managua ostensibly to guard the American legation and on the recommendation of Admiral Latimer, who is maintaining the neutral zone he established along the eastern coast of Nicaragua. Actually one of the important factors prompting this action by the Washington government is the determination to protect the proposed canal route across Nicaragua, for which the United States paid $3,000,000, and also to protect our leased naval base on the Gulf of Fonseca. Support of the Diaz government is a part of this policy. Fully as important as the landing of the marines was the decision of President Coolidge to lift the embargo on the shipment of arms and to permit Diaz to get the 1,000 rifles, 160 machine guns and several million rounds of ammunition which he purchased in the United States. This was not pleasing to Senator Borah, who declared that under existing conditions it was intervention. The foreign relations committee of the senate, which has before it a resolution by Senator Wheeler calling for immediate withdrawal of American naval forces from Nicaragua, decided to ask Secretary Kellogg to explain to it this week the entire Nicaraguan situation.

PRESIDENT CALLES of Mexico has begun the enforcement of the petroleum law, involving the prosecution of the foreign oil companies operating on lands to which they have, under that law, no legal right, having failed to apply for concessions confirming their titles. The lands will be forfeited to the government. It is expected that the oil companies will seek injunctions against the dispossession proceedings. Automatically the dispute between them and the Mexican government will thus be thrown into the Supreme court. There it may wage for many months, if not for years. Meanwhile, if they continue to extract oil from the properties they occupy illegally, they face federal suits for indemnification.

TWO important manifestoes emanated from Premier Mussolini of Italy last week. In one the duce orders the prefects of all provinces to suppress ruthlessly all illegalism and violence by Fascists, especially when directed against the representatives in Italy of foreign nations. Particularly Mussolini referred to "squadrism," a word coined recently in Italy to describe the act of "squadristi," or little bands of Fascist strong-arm men, who, while important in the days immediately preceding the establishment of the Fascist regime, have now outlived their usefulness.

At the same time the duce announced that Fascism henceforth meant the Italian state, and, through the cabinet, further fascistized the state by extending to all employees of the public administration the law providing for the dismissal of employees hitherto applicable to the central political departments.

BRIG. GEN. RAFAEL CRAME, chief of the Philippine constabulary, died a few days ago, and another conflict over his successor is due between Governor General Wood and the Philippine senate under the leadership of Manuel Quezon. It is regarded as certain that General Wood will name an American for the post, and Quezon says the senate will not confirm the appointment of an American. General Crame, who was appointed by former Gov. Gen. Francis Burton Harrison, was of Spanish-Filipino descent. He was considered fairly efficient as chief, but the organization, which is thoroughly Philippinized except for about a dozen American field officers, is admittedly not up to the standard set when American army officers headed it.

IN A report to the President, the United States St. Lawrence river commission advocated the immediate construction of the St. Lawrence shipway as a measure of transportation relief for the Middle West. The conclusions of the commission are thus summarized:

"First: The construction of the shipway from the Great Lakes to the sea is imperative both for the relief and for the future development of a vast area in the interior of the continent.

"Second: The shipway should be constructed on the St. Lawrence route, provided suitable agreement can be made for its joint undertaking with the Dominion of Canada.

"Third: The development of the power resources of the St. Lawrence should be undertaken by appropriate agencies.

"Fourth: Negotiations should be entered into with Canada in an endeavor to arrive at agreement upon all these subjects. In such negotiations the United States should recognize the proper relations of New York to the power development in the international section."

Senator Shipstead of Minnesota introduced a resolution requesting the President to enter into the necessary negotiations with Canada. It was indicated at the White House that President Coolidge regards the reports favoring the St. Lawrence project as representing the judgment of the best experts available, but that he has not yet given his own indorsement.

After that the "line" was thrown open for general service and there was plenty of that, for applications had been coming in for many days.

"HARD LUCK" MINER LET FORTUNE SLIP

Claim Worth Half-Million Sold for $150.

The death at Quesnel, B. C., of Abe Stott, characterized as the original "hard luck" miner, recalls the story of how he sold for $150 a claim which brought its purchaser a cool half-million, says the Los Angeles Times.

Since Stott's death the story of his early adventures in the Cariboo country has been told by old timers who knew him well and were in the territory when he listened to wiseacres who told him there could not be gold in his holdings and witnessed him sell his birthright for a mess of pottage.

Pat McKenna, a young Irish policeman, fresh from the Chicago blue-coated force, gets a place in this story because if he had not made Stott's acquaintance the Englishman probably never would have made his strike.

McKenna made his way up to Barkerville, then the headquarters of the Cariboo miners, and after a week of trying to drink the hardened miners under the table he decided to seek a quieter spot. He ran into Stott, who told him of the quietude around Eight-Mile lake, where the fish bit well.

A week in the new atmosphere was enough for the young Irishman to throw off the effect of his drinking bout and give him his fill of fishing. He decided he would do some prospecting. He did not know how to go about it and Stott, a window dresser, could give him little assistance. So Pat decided to start right at the camp.

He dug a hole in front of the tent in which they lived. Presently he discovered nuggets in the bottom of his pan, even though practical miners said formation of the ground barred gold. Yet the partners turned up gold nuggets whenever they felt like panning a barrowful. Occasionally they went out and fished a day or two and replenished their pokes for months at a time.

Even then the scientists wouldn't admit gold was there in paying quantities. Eventually Stott became disheartened and sold his share in the claim to Billy Ogden, an old-time prospector, for $150.

Ogden and McKenna worked their claim for a while and when a Minneapolis man named Hannah offered them $16,000 for their property they grabbed it before the buyer could change his mind. Hannah began intensive work on the mine and when he got through with it he had taken gold to the value of $500,000 from the claim.

Woman Good Organizer

American genius for organization evinced by Countess Felix von Voss, formerly Esther Lawrence of New York, has revolutionized one of the richest landed estates in the former grand duchy of Mecklenburg. Countess Voss, the only American in the titled aristocracy of this province, has identified herself with her husband's agrarian interests. The poultry farm and the horticulture of the estate, are personally managed by her. Both have been brought up to date. It was the countess' idea, too, to provide a market for her own and neighboring products. She organized a sort of producers' co-operative store, from which the products are in turn sold to more distant places.

Fortunate Accident

When a painter carelessly upset his bucket in the ore bins of a California mining company recently, he unwittingly exposed an improved method for precipitating the iron pyrites in the minerals, a process which is expected to yield the mining company as much as $50,000 a year. The paint caused the "foam" on the bins to disappear and the effect was at first considered serious, as the form has been thought necessary to separate mineral concentrates. Recoveries that day, however, ran 12 per cent higher than usual, for the paint contained linseed oil and kerosene, ingredients that proved effective agents in the process.—Popular Mechanics Magazine.

Modern Crusoe

Twenty-five years on a tropical island under ideal, almost paradisial circumstances, was the lot of one E. J. Banfield, a former London newspaper man, and his wife. A posthumous book on his experiences has just been published. It's the account of a modern Robinson Crusoe, only the circumstances were happier than in those in which the hero of Defoe is pictured. His retreat to his "isle of Eden" followed a breakdown "due to the weariness, the fever and the fret of crowded years of newspaper work." For most journalists there is no such earthly paradise in store; they must still "sit and hear one another, groan!"

Unselfish-Carelessness

Selfishness always brings its own revenge. It cannot be escaped. And the men and women—especially the women—who succumb to the fetish for self-expression, which is merely a nervous indulgence in self-exploitation—will always find that in the long run they pay for their futile freedom with self-torture and remorse. Be unselfish. That is the first and the final commandment for those who would be useful, and happy in their usefulness. Have no fear for the future. It will take care of itself if we take care of ourselves.—Montreal Family Herald.

THE WORLD'S GREAT EVENTS

ALBERT PAYSON TERHUNE

(© by Dodd, Mead & Company.)

Henry of Navarre

A COUNTRY boy—long rather than tall, high of forehead, with a great hooked beak of a nose, a tanned face and wiry frame—came up to Paris, against his mother's will, one day in the latter part of the Sixteenth century. He was the penniless Prince Henry of Bearn, son of stupid old Antony of Bourbon, king of Navarre. In coming to Paris he was walking into the very jaws of death.

Catherine de Medici, widow of Henry II, was practically ruler of France in spite of the fact that her weak son, Charles IX sat on the throne. She had four sons. They were all childless. Should they chance to die without direct heirs, the royal line of Valois would end, and the crown must pass, by succession, to their cousin, the king of Navarre. Catherine was an ardent Catholic, as were her sons and her adherents. Navarre, a little subsidiary province near the Spanish frontier of France, was the center of the Huguenot (Protestant) movement. The rulers of Navarre were the chiefs of the Huguenots. Hence, if the king of Navarre should inherit the throne, France would probably become a Huguenot country. So Catherine cast uneasy eyes towards the little kingdom and began to plot measures for averting such a possibility.

Jeanne d'Albret, wife of Antony de Bourbon and mother of young Henry of Navarre, was also doing some plotting, but along wholly different lines. She was one of the noblest, best women in history. Her husband had been a weak, dissipated, thick-headed fellow, and all her hopes were centered in her boy. She accordingly had Henry brought up as a rigid Protestant, sought to turn his mind to high thoughts, to honor and personal rectitude, urged him to outdoor life and exposure to toughen and strengthen him, and confided his military training to the famous Admiral Coligny.

In the midst of this course of training Jeanne was horrified to receive a request from Catherine that Henry visit the gay court at Paris. She well knew that such an invitation amounted to a royal command, and that it could not with impunity be disobeyed. Yet she foresaw the terrible influences a woman like Catherine could exert on her pleasure-loving son. Henry, delighted to be free from such close discipline, hurried to Paris and plunged at once into the dissolute gayety of the court. Jeanne in vain tried to retain her influence over him by writing him long letters full of advice and of news of his old home. Catherine dreaded the effect of these letters, so she sent Jeanne a pair of poisoned gloves. Jeanne wore them and died.

Every decent influence being thus removed, Henry wallowed deeper daily in the infamies of Catherine's contrivance. He was now king of Navarre, nominal head of the Huguenots, but too steeped in the pleasures of court to give much thought to his responsibilities. To wipe out the Huguenots Catherine arranged the massacre of St. Bartholomew within a week after Henry's marriage to her daughter Margaret. Henry, seeing his life was in danger, renounced Protestantism and became a Catholic. Three years later he escaped from Paris, where he was treated more like a prisoner than a king, and fled to Navarre, where his Huguenot adherents were awaiting him. On the way he stopped long enough to renounce Catholicism and declare himself a faithful Huguenot. For the next few years he indulged in as gay a life as his impoverished little kingdom could afford.

Meantime, on Charles IX's death, his younger brother, Henry III, had come to the throne of France. He was frivolous and weak. The Parisians worshiped the duke of Guise, who openly declared himself a claimant to the throne and who started the League, an organization semi-civil, semi-religious, made up from all classes and devoted to the Guise family. Henry III, to check this rising revolt, had Guise assassinated. The League in fury rose to avenge its leader's death and drove the king out of Paris. The dispossessed monarch joined forces with Henry of Navarre against the League, but was himself assassinated in 1589. This left Henry of Navarre rightful king of France.

Henry boldly laid siege to Paris to enforce his claims. He beat the League's armies at Arques in 1589 and at Ivry in 1590. Henry was tired of warfare and poverty. He wanted to be a king, not a guerilla leader. So he abjured Protestantism and for the second time declared himself a true Catholic. This removed the last barrier to his success and all France gladly acclaimed him king.

So in 1593 he entered Paris in triumph, apparently in no way abashed at having twice deceived his earlier followers by such ready changes of faith. He drove the Spanish out of France, put down the League, and in 1598, by the edict of Nantes, assured privilege and religious toleration to all Protestants. Under him modern France had its birth. He ruled wisely and for the good of the people.

At the height of his career, May 14, 1610, he was murdered by Ravaillac, a fanatic, his young son, Louis XIII, succeeding him.

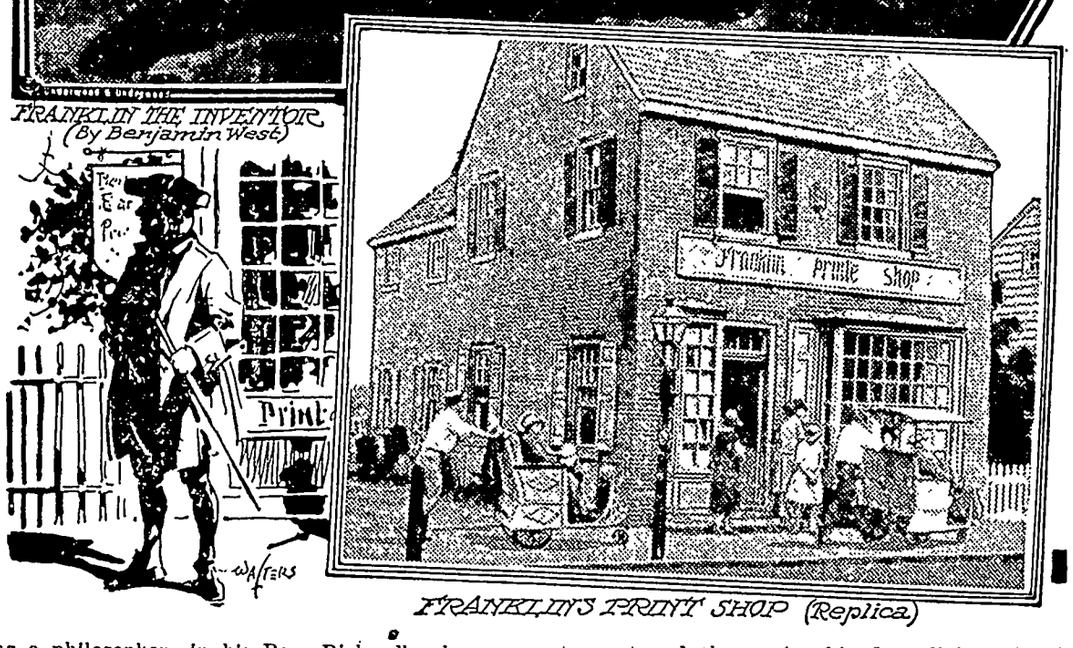
The Most Versatile American

BUST OF BENJAMIN FRANKLIN

FRANKLIN THE INVENTOR (By Benjamin West)



FRANKLIN'S PRINT SHOP (Replica)

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

RECENT biographer of Benjamin Franklin has characterized him as "the first civilized American" because "at an American period eminent for narrowness, superstition and bleak beliefs he was mirthful, generous, open-minded, learned, tolerant, humor-loving, and because he was the first American man of the world in the sense that he was the first American worldman." Although this biographer does not add to this lot of characteristics the word "versatile" it is that quality in this "first civilized American" which strikes you most forcibly as you read the story of his life.

Franklin, as the first outstanding printer and newspaper publisher, has come to be regarded as a sort of "patron saint" of the art preservative in this country, and January 17, his birthday, is a red-letter day in the calendar of all printers and publishers. This year it is being observed all over the country as "Newspaper Day" and the week of January 15 to 22 as "Thrift Week," because it was Franklin who, even long before Americans became noted for their spendthrift ways, began to preach the gospel of "the penny saved."

However much printers and publishers may claim Franklin for their own, they must share him with other professions in whose activities this many-sided man took part. Besides being a printer and publisher, Franklin was an inventor, philosopher, scientist, writer of literature, diplomat, politician, military expert and business man. Taken as an individual in any one of these roles, Franklin is interesting, for he could not only do many things, but he could do many things well. Consider him in all of them, and he becomes not only "the first civilized American" and the "most versatile American" but one of the really great men of all time.

Franklin's life story, as revealed in his autobiography, which is rated as real "literature," is familiar in its general outlines to nearly all Americans. But not all Americans know about the innumerable little "human interest" incidents of his career which, taken together, make him such a fascinating figure as he emerges from the shadows of legend and tradition of two hundred years ago and becomes a living, breathing personality.

Through his autobiography we learn of his early history—how he is apprenticed at the age of twelve to his brother James, a printer in Boston; how he becomes a newspaper writer by slipping his anonymously-signed contributions under the door of his brother's printshop and enjoying with secret delight the praise of his works; how, at the age of seventeen he becomes a publisher when his brother falls under the displeasure of the authorities and upon him devolves the duty of issuing the New England Courant and how he makes that newspaper such a lively and readable one, because its young editor is such a free thinker and foe of intolerance, that it is constantly in trouble with the powers-that-be.

Then follows Benjamin's quarrel with his brother, his migration to Philadelphia, there, as the story-book tale goes, to walk down the street with the huge roll of bread under his arm and to be laughed at by pretty Deborah Read who is later to become his wife. After various vicissitudes of fortune, including a wild-goose chase to England, the young printer becomes foreman in the printing plant of one Samuel Keimer, who appears to have been a shiftless sort of person. There is a sad lack of new type in the shop and young Franklin casts it—the first made in America.

Next we find him starting "on his own" by issuing the Pennsylvania Gazette from the printing plant in which he and Hugh Meredith are partners. As publisher of the Gazette we discover Franklin as the shrewd editor who knows how to build reader interest in his paper (and circulation). He originates the practice of writing letters to the editor and engaging in disputes with himself in order to get his readers to "write in to the paper" and then buy many copies of the paper in which their names were printed.

But these are only a few of the historical "firsts" in journalism which can be credited to Ben Franklin. When his competitor, Bradford, the public printer, does a sloppy job of printing a legislative address, Ben reprints it carefully and sends a copy to each legislator. This subtle bit of advertising has the desired effect. Franklin's firm is the first to take the legal printing away from a competitor, for the legislature transfers the work from Bradford to Franklin and Meredith. Then Franklin buys out his partner and becomes sole owner of the business. He is the first to put newspaper work on a business basis and not content with running a paper in his own city, he sets up publishers in other colonies under a partnership arrangement, from all of which he profits.

At about this time, too, begins Franklin's career as a philosopher—in his Poor Richard's almanac (first issued in 1732) and in his formation of the Junto, a club at which Ben and his fellows discuss all manner of philosophical questions. Next he enters public life, gets himself elected clerk of the assembly and afterwards a member of it. So he becomes the first publisher to dip into politics. Science next attracts this many-sided individual, for it is an easy transfer of interest from the abstract questions of human conduct, talked over at the Junto, to the concrete questions of natural phenomena. He is fascinated by the Leyden jars. So he makes a kite of a silk handkerchief, sends it up in a rainstorm and a charge of electricity travels down the twine to the key tied on it and a spark leaps off to his hand. He has not "discovered" electricity, but he has dramatized it and when he writes monographs on his experiments, Europe begins to take notice of this American colonial. A dislike for the open fireplace which bakes his face and allows his back to freeze leads to the invention of the Franklin stove which has been called "one of the first contrivances to banish barbarism from the American home and give it a civilizing comfort marveled at by the world."

At the age of forty-two, Franklin sells his printing business and resolves to devote himself to science and invention. But he decides as suddenly to return to politics and becomes postmaster general of the colonies. Here, it seems, he overlooks a chance to become the originator of a convenience, for he neglected the opportunity to invent the postage stamp. In those days the receiver, not the sender, paid the postage upon receipt of the letter.

In 1754 Franklin is urging the formation of an American congress to consider means of protection against the French and Indians, using the device of the snake cut into 13 pieces, representing the Thirteen Colonies, and the celebrated motto of "Join or Die." When the congress does convene at Albany, Franklin lays before it his plan for the union of the colonies. Even though it is turned down, the germ of the idea of unity in purpose, so necessary for the Revolutionary struggle which is to follow, has been planted in the minds of Americans.

When Braddock sets forth upon his unhappy expedition it is Franklin who raises the army of wagoners necessary to haul Braddock's supplies and Franklin and young George Washington are the only two men in the colonies for whom the haughty general has much respect, even though he does disregard the advice of both about the dangers of falling into an ambuscade. It is during this war that Franklin has his first and only taste of military life. He becomes General Franklin and leads an expedition against the Indians. But after two months of this life he retires from it and returns to Philadelphia.

He needs no military laurels to add to his fame for he soon embarks upon his career as a diplomat which brings him his greatest renown. He goes to England and appears at a hearing before the house of commons on the much disputed stamp tax act and there wins his first diplomatic victories. For ten years he works for the interests of the colonies in the mother country and then returns to America on the eve of the Revolution. He is among the signers of the Declaration of Independence and helps found the new republic.

Then arises the necessity for some one to go to France to secure aid for the rebellious colonies. Franklin, now past seventy-one, is delegated to go. He lands in France, wearing the quaint fur cap which he "clapped on his head whenever he had to gratify public curiosity in France and show himself a real American pioneer." In thus dramatizing himself he catches the public fancy (the women of the gay French court begin dressing their hair, a la Franklin, in imitation of the fur cap) and wins sympathy (and the necessary aid) for his country's cause. As one writer has put it, one of the really great figures of the Revolution is "our grandfather Franklin, who trotted through a perfectly cold and selfishly contemptuous French court, aged, alert, cheerful to the end" and made himself the best-loved American, even to this day, in France. In fact, over in the Paris of today (on December 0, 1926), the sesquicentennial anniversary of Franklin's arrival in France, observed at the annual dinner of the Anglo-American Press Association of Paris, was a love-feast of three nations, honoring the first and most famous American newspaper man and "Paris correspondent"—Benjamin Franklin.

When the Revolutionary struggle ends Franklin is still in France and has a hand in the preliminary negotiations for signing the peace treaty. Then, after eight years in France, he begins to long for home. So Thomas Jefferson is sent to relieve him. When Jefferson is presented to Count de Vergennes, the French foreign minister, the Frenchman asks, "Is it you, monsieur, who replaces Dr. Franklin?" "I am only his successor, sir," replies Jefferson. "No one can replace him."

Work still awaits Franklin upon his return home. He participates in the constitutional convention in Philadelphia and much of his wisdom is written into our Constitution. He is elected governor of Pennsylvania for the third time. Then he retires finally from public life. On April 17, 1790, "the most versatile American" dies in his sleep. Scientist, diplomat, philosopher, world figure—when the end approached his thoughts turned to his first love—the printing art. So this was the epitaph which he wrote for himself:

The body of
B. Franklin
Printer
Like the cover of an old book
Its contents torn out
And stript of its lettering and gilding
Lies here food for worms.
But the work shall not be wholly lost
For it will, as he believed, appear once more
In a new and more perfect edition
Corrected and amended
By the author.

ROAD BUILDING

TEST IMPACT OF DIFFERENT TIRES

The United States bureau of public roads, in a statement just issued on a series of recent tests to determine the magnitude of the impact of different kinds of motor truck tires over a period of four years, declares that thickness and narrowness of tread rubber are desirable in reducing road impact and that increasing the thickness or profile height of rubber has a very marked effect in reducing road impact in both single and dual mountings.

The experiment in finding out the relative amounts of impact exerted on road surfaces by different kinds of motor truck tires was called the "static test." It consisted, according to the bureau, in mounting of a tire in a machine and slowly applying loads, noting the vertical deflections as indications for sketching deformation curves. The hardness of the tread rubber was measured by an instrument known as a durometer.

The bureau, in using the test machine, stated that in applying the test data it should be remembered that an impact force, expressed in pound units, does not necessarily have the same effect upon materials as a static force of the same numerical value in pounds. The "important conclusions to date" are given in full text as follows:

1. Maximum impact forces obtained with motor truck tires in service can be measured with an accuracy sufficient for the needs of this investigation.

2. As static load increases, road impact reaction increases.

3. As static load increases, the ratio of road impact reaction to static load decreases.

4. Thickness and narrowness of tread rubber are desirable in reducing road impact reaction.

5. Increasing the thickness or profile height of rubber has a very marked effect in reducing road impact reaction in both single and dual mountings.

6. In the tire equipments tested, all of which were standard at the time of the tests, dual mounting caused heavier impact forces than the corresponding single mounting of the same total load-carrying capacity. (This was determined on a pneumatic-tired, two-ton truck and a solid-tired, five-ton truck.)

7. Appreciable variation of cross-sectional rubber, or breaks in its continuity, cause heavy repeated impacts to be delivered to the road.

8. Dual-mounted tires should always be mounted with the tread design staggered.

Ohio City Plants Trees Along Lincoln Highway

The suggestion that the Lincoln Way east and west of Delphos, Ohio, be lined with shade trees has found a responsive chord in a number of Delphos people. It is suggested by one of these that a committee take this in hand and learn just what it would cost per tree to furnish and plant along the highway.

It is contended that a sufficient number of Delphos people would be willing to assist in making the highway extending from Delphos east to the Auglaize river and the same distance west an attractive appearing memorial to Lincoln.

Delphos is noted for her beautiful shade trees. It is safe to say that few cities in Ohio can boast of streets more generally shaded than those in that city. If the Lincoln highway could be lined with shade trees both east and west of the city, it would leave a lasting impression upon the many tourists who will travel this road after the improvement is completed to the east.

The method suggested would not cost any individual a great sum and the trees would stand as a monument to Lincoln for many years to come.

Good Roads Notes

The Lincoln highway always will be the main thoroughfare, as between East and West, in Pennsylvania.

Duncan, Neb., has rerouted the Lincoln highway through a section of the town and thereby removed several dangerous railway crossings.

As the only billion-dollar "highway nation" in the world, the United States now leads all the rest of the countries with 500,000 miles of good roads.

Traffic congestion is costing the United States $10,500,000 every day or $3,832,500,000 annually, the American Road Builders' association estimates.

The Finnish government plans to spend about $1,500,000 for improvement and maintenance of roads during 1927, according to a report received by the United States Department of Commerce.

Because of the thousands of American cars entering Canada from New York there is a movement on foot to establish a service that will insure a clear road from New York city to Montreal throughout the winter, regardless of heavy snowfall.

A water hydrant near the home of Mrs. August Lau was found to be frozen up when Marshall Lietzinger coupled a hose to it Tuesday to use in flushing the sewer. Mr. Leitzinger attempted to thaw it out by loosening the caps, building a good fire around it and putting salt down the case. The process was slow so Harold went home to supper while he waited for the hydrant to thaw. During his absence the ice broke loose and the hydrant spouted water like a high pressure fountain. The city water was then turned off while repairs were made. This explains why the city water was shut off on Tuesday night.

Purebred Cows Lead

In a study of 48,000 yearly individual production records of dairy cows, a comparison was made of purebreds and grades of the same breed. The grades averaged 6,999 pounds of milk per cow, whereas purebreds exceeded by 668 pounds, or about 9½ per cent. In production of butterfat, gross income per cow, and income over feed cost, the purebreds excelled the grades by about 10 per cent. It should be remembered also that the average production of the grades was so high largely because of the influeuce of their purebred ancestry.

Treaty Left Portion of Spain in France

Llivia, the geographical and political curiosity of Europe, is a tiny islet of land which belongs geographically to Spain, but, nevertheless, is entirely surrounded by French territory. The origin of this remarkable anomaly provides a good story of the ways and methods of medieval diplomacy. It dates from the treaty of the Pyrenees, concluded between France and Spain in 1659—a treaty drawn up by delegates who possessed the most imperfect knowledge of local geography.

So Llivia remains Spanish territory, a triangle of four square miles, with about 1,400 inhabitants. To reach Spain they must pass by a neutral road constructed to obviate customs and other difficulties. But, as with Andorra, the passage of various goods through Spanish and French territory affords an opportunity to vary the monotony of life there—and, incidentally, swell the local exchequer.—London Sketch.

THE CHRISTIAN'S USE OF HIS BIBLE

LESSON TEXT—Deut. 6:4-9; II Tim. 3:14-17.

GOLDEN TEXT—Thy word is a lamp unto my feet and a light unto my path.

PRIMARY TOPIC—The Best Book in the World.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Studying our Marching Orders

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—How to Read and Study the Bible.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—How to Get Help From the Bible.

I. God's Instructions to Israel as to the Use of the Scriptures (Deut. 6:4-9).

1. The central truths to be taught (vv. 4, 5).

(1) The unity of God (v. 4).

"The Lord our God is one Lord." This was a testimony against the polytheism existing among the Gentiles of that day.

(2) Man's supreme obligation (v. 5).

"Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, soul and might." God should be loved with all the heart, soul and might because He is the alone and supreme God. This being the first and great commandment, we know what is man's supreme duty.

2. How these truths are to be kept alive (vv. 6-9).

"These words which I command thee this day shall be in thine heart." In order that God's Word might be in the heart they were enjoined—

(1) To teach them diligently unto thy children (v. 7).

The most important part of a child's education is that given in the home in the Word of God.

(2) "Shall talk of them when thou sittest in thine house" (v. 7).

This is the right kind of home life.

(3) Shall talk of them when walking with our children and friends (v. 7).

What more interesting, important and uplifting topic upon which to converse with our friends.

(4) Shall talk of them when retiring for the night (v. 7).

The last thing upon which the mind should rest before going to sleep should be God and His truth.

(5) Talk of them when rising in the morning (v. 7).

How fitting that God should speak to us through His Word the first thing when we awake.

(6) "Bind them upon thine hand for a sign" (v. 8).

This was literally done by the Jews as portions of the Scriptures were worn upon their wrists.

(7) "They shall be as frontlets between thine eyes" (v. 8).

This also was literally done by the Jews even to wearing portions of the Scriptures in little boxes between eyes.

(8) "Thou shalt write them on the posts of thy house and on thy gates" (v. 9). They were to be constantly before their eyes.

II. Paul's Instruction to Timothy as to the Scriptures (II Tim. 3:14-17).

In this chapter Paul makes clear to Timothy that perilous times would come. False teachers would arise within the church and lead astray sentimental and unsuspecting people as neurotic women. People professing godliness would deny its power by godless living. So awful will the condition be that those who live godly lives shall suffer persecution. Paul's own life of suffering was an example of what fidelity and testimony would bring. In the last days he predicts that this attitude on the part of these false teachers would be intensified, for "evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse."

In the face of such trying circumstances Paul exhorts Timothy—

1. To remain steadfast, to abide in the eternal truths which had been taught to him (v. 14).

He assures him that though trying times would come and violent storms of opposition would beat heavily upon him, Timothy would find the Word of God an abiding, unshaken foundation. The Holy Scriptures will abide even when heaven and earth have passed away; therefore the necessary thing is to abide in them.

2. The knowledge furnished by the Word of God was sufficient for the perplexing and trying times through which he was to pass (v. 15). The Bible furnishes wisdom which can be found in no other place. This wisdom, as all true wisdom, leads straight to Jesus Christ, who gives salvation.

3. The Scriptures are inspired of God (v. 16).

Inspiration here means "God breathed." Because of this fact they should be held with confidence.

Abiding in the Scriptures will perfectly equip the minister for his work (v. 17).

How Jesus Saw Men

Jesus divided men into two classes and no more; either on the narrow or on the broad way; either a good tree or a bad tree; either a wise or a foolish builder; in a word, either for Christ or against Him.—Plummer.

Service

The quality of the service is the measure of the result. It is not length of service, but intensity, sincerity, enthusiasm that tells.—R. J. Campbell.

PLAIDED RAYON FEATURED; QUAINT FLOWING SLEEVES

IF IT be your pleasure to be initiated into the secret of "what's new" in materials for the dainty morning and frock dresses, now that spring sewing time is at hand, "rayon" is the magic key which will open the door of knowledge. Rayon is a word which, spoken to salesfolk, causes them to enthusiastically display to your admiring eyes choicest weaves, lovely in coloring and exquisitely patterned—the sort which makes the prospect of sewing become a genuine pleasure.

Among the prettiest new rayon wash fabrics are handsome plaids delicately wrought with interweavings of lustrous rayon, on soft sheer backgrounds, some in lavender, rose, maize, the popular blues and in fact every desirable new color. Some introduce the suggestion of a jacquard patterning like the material employed for the charming porch frock in the picture to the left.

Whether one makes one's own or buys ready-made one's daytime washable frocks, the two models here portrayed cannot but prove of interest. From the standpoint of fabric they are inspirational, for each is fashioned of rayon novelty goods, the kind which launders to perfection.

In the styling of these frocks many interesting trends of the mode are revealed. One realizes that the simple bungalow apron-frock is being displaced by dresses of careful and finished design such as may be appropriately and becomingly worn at any hour of the day.

Among style points observed in the early collection of washable daytime frocks, are such items as the blouse effect, the bolero, skirts with subtle plaitings to gain fullness, and, good news to all, short sleeves are considered as proper as long ones for the coming season.

Pipings of contrasting color finish many a neat made dress. The compose theme is being exploited in the realm of wash frocks, such as a solid-color material with a print or a plaid.

Midseason and early spring frock arrivals convey the interesting style message that sleeves have again been elected to serve as a foremost interpreter of the mode. Especially is the quaint gracefully flowing sleeve being featured. Because of their unaffected simplicity the new flowing sleeves are of beguiling charm. The naive manner of seaming the lower flowing portion at the elbow, is accented in two of the frocks in this picture. In each instance flat crepe is the selected fabric for the gown. The model to the right adopts the popular redingote styling. Very girlish is the dress to the left, which is in rose-beige trimmed with ribbon ruching.

Two Smart Washable Frocks.

Of a more sophisticated styling is the afternoon dress of green and black silk velvet. In this handsome French creation Jean Magnin combines the medieval with the modern, in that the flowing sleeves are reminiscent of the Middle ages, while the scalloped and tiered skirt, also the bloused waistline, is of the present.

So much a part of the season's styling is the sleeve, that even in tailored cloth models a slight bell effect is introduced at the wrist.

Another method of achieving novelty for the sleeve is that of adding cuffs oddly designed and conspicuous because of their hugeness, some reaching more than half-way to the elbow.

When the fullness is gathered into the wristband, as it often is, then elaborate embroidery emphasizes these puff effects. Outwork embroidery is the newest whim. It is employed for many lovely resort frocks such as are adding such zest to the mode.

Sleeves pin-tucked at the top, released at the elbow so as to allow fullness to the wrist, feature the incoming soft crepe frocks.

Now that slave bracelets encircling to the elbow are the late fad, the flowing sleeve should be welcomed, especially when left open at the forearm, for it will charmingly display this item of smart costume jewelry.

JULIA BOTTOMLEY.

APPLE OUTLOOK FOR THE FUTURE

From a long time viewpoint apple growers appear to have turned the corner, even though the present price situation is not particularly satisfactory. With the decrease in bearing trees as shown by the last census figures, growers can expect marketing conditions to be reasonably satisfactory during the next 10 or 15 years. In the Eastern and Central states, it appears that if the commercial producing acreage is held at the present level reasonably satisfactory returns may be expected over a period of years. In the Northwest, where trees reach bearing age more quickly, there seems to be little reason for increasing the bearing acreage at present, though apples probably will continue to be profitable in most sections now yielding adequate returns.

In considering the present situation, it should be remembered that profits from apples since 1913 have not been sufficiently great to stimulate plantings. The number of bearing trees is steadily decreasing, the 18 leading apple producing states showing a decrease of 0,500,000 trees, or approximately 8 per cent, during the past five years, according to preliminary census figures, says the Michigan Farmer. In Eastern and Central states, most of the decrease has been in scattered orchards that are either outside of the main commercial sections or are too small or too unproductive to justify the use of efficient spraying equipment. Some unproductive orchards also have been abandoned in the boxed apple states, and the tendency has been to replace the poorer varieties in the older orchards. For the country as a whole, the number of trees not yet bearing is about the same as five years ago, and is not sufficient to maintain the present number in bearing.

So far as commercial production is concerned, the decrease in the number of bearing trees in the scattered farm orchards has been more than offset by increased production in the commercial sections. The rate of increase in the commercial sections seems, however, to be slowing up, and in the boxed apple states, the point of maximum production seems to have been nearly reached.

Looking ahead, it seems that the yearly increase in population will be sufficient to take care of such increase in production of commercial apples as is to be expected from the present orchards.

Suitable Varieties and Kinds of Orchard Trees

The following list of fruit trees should be very satisfactory for the home orchard: Nineteen apple—2 Yellow Transparent, 2 Duchess, 2 Wealthy, 2 Grimes Golden, 3 Jonathan, 2 Delicious, 2 Stayman, 4 Winesap; 6 Cherry—2 Early Richmond, 2 Montmorency, 2 English Morello; 9 Peach—2 Greensboro, 2 Champion, 3 Elberta, 2 Heath Cling; 3 Pear—1 Kieffer, 1 Garber, 1 Seckel; 3 Plum—1 Wild Goose, 1 Green Gage, 1 Shropshire Damson; 12 Grape—2 Moore's Early, 4 Concord, 2 Brighton, 2 Goethe, 2 Catawba; 12 Blackberry—4 Early Harvest, 4 Robinson, 4 Snyder; 12 Raspberry—4 Kansas, 4 Cumberland, 4 Cardinal; 6 Gooseberry—3 Downing, 3 Houghton; 6 Currants—3 Perfection, 3 Fay; 60 Strawberry—12 Premier, 18 Dunlap, 18 Aroma, 12 Gandy. The strawberries may be planted between the rows of apple, pear, peach and plum trees, and should do very well until the trees come into bearing.

There are many other varieties of the various fruits listed above that under the conditions of the producer might be equally as good or better than some of those listed. As a rule, however, the grower should find that the varieties mentioned will give satisfaction.

Make Ready Now for Gardening

Never Too Soon to Get Equipment Ready for Growing Early Plants.

The vegetable gardening department at Cornell says that everything should be made ready to grow early plants long before the equipment is really needed. The equipment includes plenty of good soil, flats, pots, spotting boards, hot bed sash, mats to protect the frames, and manure suited for hot bed use.

Equipment Short Lived.

All of these things are exposed constantly to warmth and moisture when they are used, and so have a short life at best. Flats may need re-nailing, sash possibly should be re-glazed, and other small items of carpentry be done to good advantage.

Soil for growing plants should be well mixed and screened so that lumps, stone and trash are removed. Soil too rich tends to produce plants which are spindly and thus easily susceptible to damping-off disease. Compost consisting of well-rotted manure, loam, and sand added makes a good mixture. The sand keeps the soil from baking and crusting and will prevent puddling when the soil is watered.

Spacing Device Helps.

A device for spacing the plants in the flats or beds is a labor saver for transplanting seedling plants. The state college uses spotting boards with pegs spaced one and a half by one and a half and two by two inches. This device can be made of pine lumber by any one. "Cut a board of three-fourths inch material the length and width of your flats," says the college. "Drill five-eighths-inch holes in this board the desired distance apart (one and a half by one and a half or two by two inches) and into these holes set pegs about two inches long which have been tapered down to one-fourth inch diameter at the tip. Cleats nailed on the ends will insure even spacing of the spotting board provided all your flats are of the same size. In one operation you firm the soil and mark the flat with a series of holes evenly spaced to receive the seedling. Even spacing in the flat gives more uniform growth of the seedlings, and the straight rows aid in cultivating the seedlings."

Use of Rotted Manure for Enrichment of Soil

Rotted manure has its place in certain forms of soil enrichment but it should be remembered that manure cannot rot without a distinct loss in fertility elements. A ton of rotten manure may represent anywhere from a ton and a half to two tons of fresh manure, depending on how long the rotting has been going on. For the quick starting and rapid growth of trucking crops farm waste in well-rotted form is commercially helpful since a few days' difference in getting the truck to market may make a great difference in the price received for it. But in the case of dairy and general farming the best place for manure to rot is under the soil. The fertility elements which the rotting releases are then taken up by plant roots or otherwise conserved. There is never any loss when manure rots underground.

Attention to New Rams Will Prove Profitable

A little attention to the new rams may be very profitable both from the standpoint of the individual and the attention given. A large percentage of rams which change hands during the fall go direct from the raisers and fitters to the farm flock owner. Sheep on the average farm are usually considered a side line, and sometimes receive very little attention.

The rams need flesh and should be purchased in good breeding condition, not overlooking the conformation and make-up. As a rule breeding animals are thin and underfed, a condition which should not exist.

Some breeders discriminate against a heavy fleece on the ram, and it is indeed burdensome if he lugs it around during the breeding season. This difficulty, however, can easily be remedied by clipping the ram at breeding time.

FARM FACTS

Drink Water If Back or Kidneys Hurt

Begin Taking Salts If You Feel Backachy or Have Bladder Weakness

Too much rich food forms acids which excite and overwork the kidneys in their efforts to filter it from the system. Flush the kidneys occasionally to relieve them like you relieve the bowels, removing waste and poison, else you may have a dull misery in the kidney region, sharp pains in the back or sick headache, dizziness, the stomach sour, tongue is coated, and when the weather is bad you have rheumatic twinges. The urine is cloudy, full of sediment, the channels often get irritated, obliging one to get up two or three times during the night.

To help neutralize these irritating acids and flush off the body's urinous waste, begin drinking water. Also get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any pharmacy, take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys may then act fine and bladder disorders disappear.

This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for years to help clean and stimulate sluggish kidneys and stop bladder irritation. Jad Salts is inexpensive and makes a delightful effervescent lithia water drink which millions of men and women take now and then to help prevent serious kidney and bladder disorders. By all means, drink lots of good water every day.

Long-Lived Gift

A giant salamander, thought to be almost one hundred and fifty years old, was recently presented to the prince regent of Japan by the head priest of a temple near Asakura, according to press reports. The amphibian is more than four feet long and has been living in a pond in the temple grounds for more than 130 years. This is the first time that an amphibian has been recorded as having so long a life.

This done, he held it out looked at it admiringly.

You will stay here, but you will not alone," he promised, with his wide, p-toothed grin. "This will keep company. See how the charming smiles at the prospect—"

e dropped the picture, which fell a crash on the tiled flooring ind the fireplace. The glass broke splintered. Shaw gasped and led under the strangling hold of erful fingers on his throat. Lamp table were overturned in the ggle that carried the three men a dozen times across the room back.

CHAPTER X

A Bit of Bright Ribbon.

Laurie opened his eyes black- still around him, a blackness a point of light. But as his owly cleared, the picture he his last conscious moment across his mental vision—the elit room, the struggling, figures of Shaw and the cretary. He heard again the aution, "Not too much of t up dizzily. There had been ch of that." He felt faint and nauseated. His hands, grop- he darkness, came in contact rich floor; or was it the tiling around the fireplace? He did not know. He decided to sit quite still for a moment, until he could pull himself together.

His body felt stiff and sore. There must have been a dandy fight in that dingy old room, he reflected with satisfaction. Perhaps the other two men were lying somewhere near him in the darkness. Perhaps they, too, were knocked out. He hoped they were. But no, of course not. Again he remembered the hurried caution, "Not too much of that."

He decided to light a match and see where he was, and he fumbled in his pockets with the first instinct of panic he had known. If those brutes had taken his matchbox! But they hadn't. He opened it carefully, still with a lingering suggestion of the panic. If he had been a hero of romance, he reasoned, with a dawning grin, that box would have held exactly one match; and he would have had to light that one very slowly and carefully. Then, at the last instant, the feeble flicker would have gone out, leaving it up to him to invent some method of manufacturing light.

As it was, however, his fat matchbox was comfortably filled, and his cigarette case, which he eagerly opened and examined by touch, held three, no, four cigarettes. That was luck! His spirits rose, singing. Now for a light!

He lit a match, held it up, looked around him, and felt himself grow suddenly limp with surprise. He had expected, of course, to find himself in Shaw's room. Instead, he was in a cellar, which resembled that room only in the interesting detail that it appeared to have no exit. With this discovery, his match went out. He lit another, and examined his new environment as carefully as he could in the brief interval of illumination it afforded.

The cellar was a perfectly good one, as cellars go. It was a small, square, hollow cube in the earth, not damp, not especially cold, and not evil-smelling. Its walls were brick. So was the floor, which was covered with clean straw, a discovery that made its present occupant suddenly cautious in handling his matches. He had no wish to be burned alive in this underground trap. The place was apparently used as a sort of storeroom. There was an old trunk in it, and some broken-down pieces of furniture. The second match burned out.

Affluent though he was in matches, it was no part of the young man's plan to burn his entire supply at one sitting, as it were. For half an hour he crouched in the darkness, pondering. Then, as an answer to certain persistent questions that came up in his mind, he lit a third match. He greatly desired to know where lay the outlet to that cellar, and in this third illumination he decided that he had found it. There must be some sort of a trap-door at the top, through which he had been dropped or lowered. Those wide seams in the white-washed ceiling must mean the cracks due to a set-in door. Undoubtedly that door had been bolted. Also, even assuming that it was not fastened, the ceiling was fully eight feet above him. There was no ladder, there were no stairs. His third match burned out.

In the instant of its last flicker he saw something white lying on the straw beside him. He promptly lit another match, and with rising excitement picked up the sheet of paper and read the three-line communication scrawled in pencil upon it:

"Out tomorrow. Flashlight, candles, cigarettes and matches in box at your left. Blankets in corner. Be good."

The recipient of this interesting document read it twice. Then, having secured the box at his left—a discarded collar box, judging by its shape and labels—he drew forth the flashlight, the cigarettes, the matches and the candles it contained. Lighting one of the candles, he stuck it securely on a projecting ledge of the wall. By its wan light, aided by the electric flash, he took a full though still dazed inventory of his surroundings. The ophidian Shaw had puzzled him again.

He had handled Shaw very roughly for a time. He could still feel—and he recalled the sensation with great pleasure—the thick, slippery neck of the creature, and the way it had squirmed when he got his fingers into it. Yet the serpent evidently bore no malice. Or—a searing thought struck Laurie—having things his own way, he could afford to be generous. In other words, he was now perfecting his plans, while he, Laurie, was out of the way.

The promise of release tomorrow could mean, of course, only one thing—that those plans, whatever they were, would be carried out by then. And yet—and yet— The boy put his head between his hands and groaned. What was happening to Doris? Surely nothing could happen that night! Or could it? And what would it be? Only a fool would doubt Shaw's power and venom after such an experience as Laurie had just had, and yet—Even now the skeptical interrogation point reared itself in the young man's mind.

One fact alone was clear. He must get out of this. But how? Flashlight in hand, he made the short tour of the cellar, examining and tapping every inch of the wall, the masonry and the floor-work. Could he pile up the furniture and so reach the door in the ceiling? He could not. The articles consisted of the small, battered trunk, a legless, broken-springed cot and a clock whose internal organs had been removed. Piled one on the other, they would not have borne a child's weight. Laurie decided that he was directly under Shaw's room. Perhaps the creature was there now. Perhaps he would consent to a parley. But shouts and whistles, and a rain of small objects thrown up against the trapdoor produced no response.

He began to experience the sensations of a trapped animal. So vivid were these, and so overpowering, as he measured his helplessness against the girl's possible need of him, that he used all his will power in overcoming them. Resolutely he reminded himself that he must keep cool and steady. He would leave nothing undone that could be done. He would shout at intervals. Perhaps sooner or later some night watchman would hear him. He would reach that trapdoor if the achievement were humanly possible. But first, last and all the time he would keep cool.

When he had exhausted every resource his imagination suggested, he sat in the straw, smoking and brooding, his mind incessantly seeking some way out of his plight. At intervals he shouted, pounded and whistled. He walked the floor, and re-examined it and the cellar walls. He looked at his watch. It was three o'clock in the morning. He was exhausted, and his body still ached rackingly.

Very slowly he resigned himself to the inevitable. Morning would soon come. He must sleep till then, to be in condition for the day. He found Shaw's blankets, threw himself on the straw, and fell into a slumber full of disturbing dreams. In the most vivid of these he was a little boy at school, and on the desk before him a coiled boa constrictor, with Shaw's wide and sharp-toothed grin, ordered him to copy on his slate an excellent photograph of Doris.

He awoke with a start, and in the next instant was on his feet. He had heard a sound, and now he saw a light falling from above. He looked up. A generous square opening appeared in the ceiling, and leading down from it was the gratifying vision of a small ladder. Up the ladder Laurie sprang with the swiftness of light itself. Subconsciously he realized that if he was to catch the person who had opened that door and dropped that ladder, he must be exceedingly brisk about it. But, quick as he was, he was still too slow. With a grip on each side of the opening, and a strong swing, he lifted himself into the room above. As he expected, it held no occupant. What he had not expected, and what held him staring now, was that it held not one stick of furniture.

Bare as a bone, bleak as a skeleton, it had the effect of grinning at him with Shaw's wide white grin.

His first conscious reflection was the natural one that it was not Shaw's room. He had been carried to another building. This room had a window, which, of course, might have been concealed behind the letter files. Yet, bare as it was, it looked familiar. There was the fireplace, with its charred logs. There, yes, there were the splinters of the glass that had protected Doris' photograph. And, final convincing evidence, there, forgotten in a corner, was the worn bedroom slipper he had noticed under the couch the night before.

With eyes still bewildered, still incredulous, he stared around the empty room. Before him yawned an open door, showing an uninviting vista of dingy hall. He stepped across its threshold and looked down the winding passage of the night before. But why hadn't he seen the door? He moved back into the empty room. A glance explained the little mystery. The room had been freshly papered, door and all. The surface of the door had been made level with the wall. When it was closed there was no apparent break in the pattern of the wall paper.

If there had been a chair in the room, young Mr. Devon would have sat down at this point. His body wanted to sit down. In fact, it almost insisted upon doing so. But just as he was relaxing in utter bewilderment, he received another gentle shock. Above the old-fashioned mantel was a narrow, set-in mirror, and in this mirror Laurie caught a glimpse of the features of a disheveled young ruffian, staring fixedly at him. He had time to stiffen perceptibly over this vision before he realized that the disheveled ruffian was himself, a coatless, collarless self, with shirt torn open, cuffs torn off, hair on end, features battered and dirty, and bits of straw clinging to what was left of his clothing.

For a long moment Laurie gazed at the figure in the glass, and as he gazed his mingled emotions shook down into connected thought. Yes, there had been a dandy fight in this room last night, and he had the satisfaction of knowing that his two opponents must have come out of it as disheveled as himself. He had, "had them going." Beyond doubt he could have handled them both but for their infernal chloroform. Again he recalled, with pleasure, the feeling of Shaw's thick, slippery neck as it choked and writhed under the grip of his fingers. Incidentally he had landed two blows on the secretary's jaw, sending him first into a corner and the next time to the floor. It was soon after the second blow that the episode of the chloroform occurred.

Straightening up, he began the hurried and elemental toilet which was all the conditions permitted. He removed the pieces of straw from his clothing, smoothed his hair, straightened his garments to conceal as much of the damage to them as possible, and gratefully put on his coat, which lay neatly folded on the floor, with his silk hat resting snugly upon it. It required some courage to go out into the clear light of a January morning in patent-leather pumps and wearing a silk hat. He would find some one around the place from whom he could borrow a hat and get the information he needed about the late tenants of this extraordinary office. It was half-past seven. He had slept later than he realized. He had slept while Doris was in peril. The reminder both appalled and steadied him.

With a last look around the dismantled room, he closed its door behind him and went out into the winding hall. He hurried up and down its length, poking his head into empty storerooms and dusty offices, but finding no sign of life.

Abraham Claimed by Moslems as Brother

Besides the Biblical account of Abraham there is a great deal of apocryphal and rabbinical literature concerning him, a writer in the Cleveland Plain Dealer remarks. He looms very large also in Mohammedan legend, where he appears as the most important of the Biblical personages mentioned in the Koran. Indeed he is claimed as a Moslem, and Mohammed made him the most prominent figure of pre-Mohammedan religious history. The Jewish Encyclopedia digests and interprets all of this material in its article on Abraham. There are also Tompkins' "Studies in the Time of Abraham" and W. J. Deane's "Abraham: His Life and Times."

There is a similarly large body of legend and ancient literature concerning Solomon and the queen of Sheba. The Jewish Encyclopedia deals with this also. The Abyssinians as a people do not claim to be descended from the royal pair, but their tradition is that their reigning family's ancestry may be traced directly to Solomon and the queen.

Discovery an Accident

Charles Goodyear, who discovered the process of vulcanizing rubber, expended all his means in experiments with various mixtures and processes which should remedy the fatal defects of India rubber in its natural state, since it is brittle in cold weather and sticky in warm weather. The great secret of vulcanizing, a process in which the two substances, submitted to a high temperature, are converted into elastic, enduring, heat and cold-defying material, now in use, was an accidental discovery made by Goodyear while standing by a stove and idly subjecting a mixture of rubber and sulphur to its heat.

RENWICK GAME WAS REAL BATTLE

FAST GAME HERE FRIDAY RESULTED IN TIE

Both Teams Showed Good Skill On Basket Ball Court

The basket ball game here Friday evening was fast and furious from start to finish and resulted in a tie of 14 to 14, according to Mr. Pals, of Swaledale, who refereed the cage battle on the local floor.

The score by quarters was as follows and which appeared on the score board: Ist quarter, Renwick 3, Klemme, 4; 2nd quarter, Renwick, 9, Klemme, 5; 3rd quarter, Renwick 11, Klemme, 9; 4th quarter Renwick 16, Klemme 14 However, there was a difference in the score books of the two score keepers, and in a case of this kind it was up to the official in charge to make a decision, and after much thought and comparing records Mr. Pals ruled it a 14 to 14 tie game. As all of the players had changed clothing and gone home it was too late to play off the tie. A field basket was made by Renwick on a "dead" ball and which was counted in on the board. This score should not have counted but we do not know whether or not this had any bearing on the final decision.

Crowd Caused Disturbance

The game would have been perfect had it not been for the actions of the crowd and which is too bad as both teams displayed good sportsmanship and played a clean game. At the close of the first quarter Mr. Hockey ordered the crowd off the playing floor as they were interfering with the plays of both teams The Klemme fans vacated the floor at once and found seats elsewhere The Renwick fans were a little reluctant in losing their good positions and did not take the hint to move to the balcony seats. Mr. Pals also told them to get off the court, but it did not seem to have any effect on them. At the close of the half some Klemme girls went back on the floor and made room for themselves with the Renwick crowd. We don't know who started the argument but things happened quick and a near free-for-all just about took place before school officers could quiet the crowd and get everybody off the floor for good, and allowing only officials and substitutes on the side lines. Hereafter this rule will be strictly observed We like to treat our visitors right, but we also expect them to observe rules as laid out by the basketball officials. The Renwick fans should ahve observed the rules and vacated the floor.

We are not casting reflections on the entire crowd of Renwick fans. There are always one or two "ring leaders" in almost every town who want to 'run things" and who cause such disturbances and this is to be regretted by the true sportsman.

The thing to learn in all kinds of athletics is to BE A GOOD SPORT at all times The two basketball teams displayed good sportsmanship thruout the game and both teams played a good clean game As a rule the basket ball teams have learned to be good sportsmen and to smile even in the face of certain defeat. It is no disgrace to be defeated in a good, clean game. Fans who follow the sport must learn this same principal, to be good sports no matter how the game goes. The fan must remember that the referee is "the law" in a game. His decisions should not be disputed, he should not be sneered at. He may make a wrong decision in the eyes of the spectators (who see the play from a different angle) but he calls the play as he sees it from his position on the floor According to basket ball rules it is required to have an umpire to assist the referee on the basketball court. He can call plays that the referee does not see. So, to referee a game without an umpire is a real job and mistakes made by the referee should not be doubted by the crowd.

Another thing the fan must learn is to be absolutely QUIET when a boy is trying for a free throw. This rule is violated more here than any

DOINGS AT SCHOOL DURING PAST WEEK

FRIDAY NIGHT GAME ENDS IN TIE, RULED

Spectators Not To Be Allowed On Floor Hereafter

Our boys had a battle royal with Renwick last Friday night, the game ending with a disputed score and declared a tie by the official in charge. It was too late to play off the tie Renwick still insists they won. It is not what they claim that counts but what the official announces that stands. We are sorry our visitors did not recognize the rules of the game and vacate the playing court when requested by both Mr Hockey and our official. Hereafter the game will not be started until the floor is cleared of spectators. This we shall insist upon in the interests of the playres. Our playing space is very limited as it is and when spectators are permitted to occupy a part of it the game is cramped and the players are hampered.

It is regretted that more desirable space is not available for spectators but our Board has provided as much as it is perhaps possible to provide without injury to our building.

Ventura Here Friday Night

Our boys play Ventura here next Friday night. Ventura has a very fast team and the game will be very close. Our boys will give their best and if it is not good enough they will congratulate their victors. We believe, however, that this task will not be required of them, but of Ventura. The game will begin as soon after 8:00 o'clock as Ventura is ready to play A preliminary game of grade boys will play from 7:30 until 8:00 o'clock. Doors will be open at 7:00 P. M. Mr. Mounce, of Garner will be the official.

P. T. A. Had Fine Meeting

Rev. Grosshuesch and Harvey Nelson both gave us splendid discussions of their subjects at the P T A. program on Tueday night of this week. We wish more could have been present to hear them. Ethel Wellemeyer and Ruth Bailey provided us with a pretty violin duet. Virginia and Miriam Stille sang three very cute little songs. Mrs. Gary and Miss Wheatman accompanied for the musical numbers Miss Kidder also sang with one of the male members of the faculty. (Editor's note: The red-headed one.)

It was voted to again renew our affiliation with the state and national P. T. A. by remitting the state and national dues of ten cents per member.

First Week Of New Semester

This week is the first of the new semester. A new daily schedule has been provided after hours of labor to provide for all of the irregularities on the part of students.

Milo Patet Gives Paintings

We should have mentioned before that through the courtesy of Milo Patet our high school has received some pretty paintings which this last year's Senior student has painted at the Chicago Art School. Milo has long exhibited an interest in drawing and has boldly started to equip himself along this line. We believe he will succeed well in his chosen work.

School Faculty Entertained

Mr. Patet, our capable janitor, provided our faculty with a wonderful meal at his home on Thursday night of last week. He and Mrs. Patet enjoyed the misery of many of the pedagogs who indulged too freely their appetites and were unable to either play or sing for some minutes after the meal. Toward 10 or 10:30 o'clock some of them began to appear normal again. If any of our instructors have been sluggish since, blame the appetizing victuals which they could not resist at Emil Patet's last week.

M. O. BARR IS PUTTING ON FINE PICTURE PROGRAMS

Pictures He Is Showing Rank With The Best On The Market

There is nothing cheap about the class of pictures Mr. M. O. Barr, the new manager of the Idle Hour has been putting on. The pictures he is showing are all new, high class productions, and he is receiving a lot of compliment on his excellent shows.

Those who missed the picture on Wednesday evening of this week. "Irene," missed one of the best picture ever shown in Klemme.

The picture was full of comedy pathetic instances and seemed to please everyone. Part of the reels were in color which added to the attractiveness of the scenes.

Saturday night Mr. Barr has another good feature, "Rainbow Riley," a seven reel picture, with two reels of Pathe comedy.

Another talked of picture is 'The Wilderness Woman," an eight reel feature for next week Wednesday A two reel comedy will also be on the silver screen, giving a big ten reel show.

SHIP 10 CARS STOCK

TEN CAR LOADS OF LIVE STOCK SHIPPED SATURDAY NIGHT

Klemme Shipping Association Leads With Six Car Loads Of Stock

Live stock shipments Saturday night went well above the average weekly shipments when ten cars were loaded for the Chicago Markets.

The Klemme Shipping Association lead the list this week with six car loads, consisting of three car loads of hogs, two car loads of cattle, and one mixed car load of hogs and cattle.

C. A. Larsen, who has been a big shipper this winter had four car loads of live stock, consisting of two car loads of cattle and two car loads of hogs.

All stock shipments were billed for the U. S. Yards, Chicago.

Stock shipments have been brisk in Klemme for several weeks. The "peak" was reached a few weeks ago with seventeen car loads, which also equalled the record shipment last winter.

Kanawha Shipping Association Reports Good Business

The annual report of the Kanawha Shipping Association shows that 92 carloads of live stock were shipped, valued at $128,787.34. 142 farmers took advantage of this cooperative organization. The management of the association is under the diretion of Wallae Darrah who took over the management the fore part of the year. Mr. Darrah has been very sucessful and the association will no doubt continue. to improve under his direction.

The French now say the British owe them billions for the care of war prisoners back in 1803. Now the British will doubtless reply by sending a bill for the board and lodging of William the Conqueror and his soldiers, due since 1066.

MRS. L. SAMPSON BURIED HERE TODAY

CAME TO IOWA IN PRAIRIE SCHOONER

Has Been Resident Of County For Many Years

Mrs. Mary Sophia Sampson, nee George, was born June 4, 1864, at Madison, Wisconsin.

When she was still very young her parents moved to Iowa They traveled by the only mode of transportation available at that time—the prairie schooner. Though very young, she vividly remembered incidents connected with this laborious journey and in after years related them, especially the crossing of the Mississippi river from Prairie Du Chien to McGregor by ferry.

The family located in Floyd county, in the township of Ulster where they resided until the later seventies. At that place they became affiliated with the Flood Creek Methodist church. Here too deceased remembered things and incidents of interest connected with her church life that she recounted in after years

Leaving Floyd Co, the family moved to Hancock County, and located a short distance east of the center school house in Liberty township. As no church was erected that vicinity at that time but services were regularly held in said school house, the neighboring families worshipped there for many a year Most interesting and touching things can be and were related of these years when people had and were real neighbors.

On December 9, 1882, deceased was married to Mr. Lewis Sampson. They were priveleged to journey together for over forty four years They lived on a farm a short distance west of Liberty church until they moved to Klemme some years ago.

Eight children were born to them. our sons and four daughters. The sons all preceded their mother in death, two in infancy, Fred sixteen years ago and Clarence twelve years ago. The daughters are: Mrs. Chas Lenz of Spooner, Wis, Mrs. Levi Klotzbach of Klemme with whom Father and Mother Sampson made their home during the last while, Mrs. Florence Smith of Klemme, and Mrs Wm Belstner of Fort Atkinson, Wis. She is likewise survived by five brothers, William and John George, of Minneapolis, Frank of Lake Mills, Wis, Fred of Oshkosh, Wis, and Lewis.

Mrs Sampson first began to fail in the autumn of 1925 when she had a stroke. She fairly recovered from this until she was again stricken last August when but a slight thread of life seemed to remain which threatened to snap on the least provocation. Partial recovery however was hers until on Christmas day she turned worse and from that time life slowly ebbed away She died January 18, 1927, at the age of 62 years, 7 mouths and 17 days.

"The night is gone, and with the morn those angel faces smile—which I have loved long since, and lost a-while."

Funeral services were conducted in the Methodist Church of Klemme this afternoon by Rev. A. W. Gauger the pastor of the family. Interment was made in the Klemme cemetery

THE WORLD'S GREAT EVENTS

ALBERT PAYSON TERHUNE

Gustavus Adolphus

A CONFLICT that involved nine nations, lasted for three decades, killed a king, worried an emperor to death, put a total check on all German progress and industry, and bred more barbarous cruelty than any event in many centuries—such, in a nutshell, was the famous "Thirty Years' war." Like most horrors of its sort and time, it had its origin in religious disputes. It endured from 1618 to 1648.

The war had its beginning between the Protestant states of northern Germany and Austria. Within a few years it had extended until it included, on one side, Austria, Spain, south Germany and France, and the Protestant countries of Europe on the other. In 1618 Bohemia threw off imperial authority. The North German states had formed a union, and this union took Bohemia's part. Together they drove the imperial troops from Bohemia and invaded Austria up to the very gates of Vienna. There famine and bad weather forced them to halt and turn back.

The king of Bohemia became emperor of Germany under the title of Ferdinand II. The Bohemians hated him and asked the Elector Frederick V to rule them. Frederick was already head of the Union and was son-in-law of James I of England. Ferdinand made short work of his pretensions, for he utterly routed him at Wissemberg, November 8, 1620, and at the same time crushed out Protestantism in Bohemia.

But the Union quickly recovered. With money donated by England, an army from Holland, and with King Christian IV of Denmark for ally, they again took the field. But the imperial general, Wallenstein, beat them at Dessau, in 1626; while his associate, General Tilly, overcame King Christian and drove him back to his own territory. Wallenstein continued his conquests, annexing the land of Denmark's Mecklenburg allies, and sweeping on to the Baltic. There the coast towns held out bravely against him, and he was superseded by Tilly. The latter besieged Magdeburg, capital of Saxony, and, after seven months' fighting, took it. The most horrible butchery followed the capture of the city.

Gustavus Adolphus, king of Sweden, had won for himself the title "The Lion of the North." He had raised Sweden to a world power and had revolutionized her warfare. He had successfully invaded Denmark, Poland and Russia, and his name was a terror to Sweden's foes. Now he cast in his lot with the Union; and, with the avowed purpose of protecting Protestantism in Germany, landed a Swedish army on the Pomeranian coast, June 24, 1630. He was not wholly disinterested in this invasion. He also desired to impede Austria's growing power and to establish Swedish territory on the Baltic coast. In his plan to check Austria he was secretly aided by France.

No sooner had Gustavus Adolphus landed than he began to make his dominant presence felt. He defeated Tilly, near Leipsic, and, everywhere victorious, advanced on the lower Palatinate and the Rhine towns. Tilly again opposed him in 1632, near the River Lech. "The Lion of the North" defeated and killed him and advanced on Munich. Wallenstein, with a mighty army, confronted him near Nuremburg and succeeded in repulsing him. Gustavus retired into Saxony. Wallenstein followed him. The armies met at Lutzen, November 6, 1632, in a great battle. The Swedes won a decisive victory, but at fearful cost for the gallant Gustavus Adolphus was killed.

Yet the death of this empire-changing general and king had the effect of maddening, instead of disheartening, his troops. Hot for vengeance, the Swedes swept onward, rivaling the Austrians themselves in barbarity. They laid waste all Bavaria. Wallenstein was assassinated, but the emperor sent an army against the Swedes, beating them at Nordlingen, September 6, 1634. After this setback, the German Union was quite ready for peace; but the Swedes would not hear of such a thing. They felt their slain king was not yet avenged. They devastated Saxony and Thuringia, defeated a German army at Breitenfeld, then thrashed Christian of Denmark, who had gone over to the emperor's side. They followed up these successes by winning victories over two more imperial armies.

France and England had by this time been drawn into the war as Sweden's allies, and Saxony and Bavaria were once more successfully invaded. The allies swept all before them. Ferdinand II was dead and his successor was only too eager to make terms of peace with the all-conquering invaders.

So, in 1648, ended the Thirty Years' war, and the sorely distressed German states rested, exhausted and impoverished, from their long struggle. The plain people were chief sufferers. Literature, art, industry—civilization itself—were set back throughout all Germany. Barbarism, heavy taxes, stoppage of every refining and higher influence, devastation of entire provinces and wholesale slaughter of helpless noncombatants had been the chief features of the struggle.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

President Justifies His Nicaragua Policy and Accuses Mexico.

EXPLAINING and justifying his Latin American policy, President Coolidge in a special message to congress related the events that have led up to the administration's action in the case of Nicaragua, and directly accused the Mexican government of promoting the revolution in that country that, he said, is endangering the lives and property of American citizens and the interests of the United States in Nicaragua—the latter being the canal route rights and the lease of a navy base on the Gulf of Fonseca. These rights and American investments, Mr. Coolidge asserted, placed a "peculiar responsibility" on the United States in Central America.

While disclaiming any desire of intervention in their internal affairs, the President declared that "the stability, prosperity, and independence" of the Central American republics "can never be a matter of indifference to us," and served notice on President Calles of Mexico and all others concerned that the United States will not tolerate "the jeopardizing of American interests" and impairment of constitutional government in that region.

"I have the most conclusive evidence," said President Coolidge, "that arms and munitions in large quantities have been on several occasions since August, 1926, shipped to the revolutionists in Nicaragua.

"Boats carrying these munitions have been fitted out in Mexican ports and some of the munitions bear evidence of having belonged to the Mexican government. It also appears that the ships were fitted out with the full knowledge of and, in some cases, with the encouragement of Mexican officials, and were, in one instance, at least, commanded by a Mexican naval reserve officer."

The President told of the starting of the revolution and the election of Adolfo Diaz as president-designate by the congress, arguing that that election was quite constitutional. On Wednesday Secretary of State Kellogg, appearing before the senate foreign relations committee, presented the same arguments, amplified the administration policy and then declared his department was in possession of documentary proof that the Mexican government had been active not only in arming the Nicaraguan revolutionists but also in plotting the bolshevik penetration of Central America to the injury of the United States.

Senator Borah, chairman of the committee, was unconvinced and made a long speech attacking the administration's policy. It was predicted in Washington, however, that the message and Mr. Kellogg's statement would serve to bring a majority of congress to the support of the President in the course he is pursuing. The house committee on foreign affairs also undertook an examination of the situation but spent much of its time in partisan squabbling.

Meanwhile efforts were being made in Nicaragua to bring about peace. Leading liberals proposed a conference and the conservatives seemed willing to hold such a meeting with Rear Admiral Latimer as arbitrator. Sacasa vetoed the plan but it seemed he might be ignored by a large faction of his party. Considerable reinforcements to the American naval forces in Nicaraguan waters were on their way, and Admiral Latimer established new neutral zones.

FROM the Mexican government came a denial, in general terms, of the accusations in President Coolidge's message concerning anti-American plotting in Central America. With this disclaimer was a suggestion that any American aggrieved by enforcement of the oil and alien land laws file a claim for compensation with the Mexican-American mixed claims commission constituted while Mr. Hughes was secretary of state.

However defiant he may seem to be, it is certain President Calles is not looking for trouble with the United States, for he has enough of that already within his own country. There was a new outbreak of Catholic uprisings in various regions in which scores were killed in street fighting and other scores were executed by the government. Bishop Pascual Diaz, secretary of the Catholic episcopate, and other prelates were arrested on charges of sedition, and Monsignor Diaz was taken to Vera Cruz, presumably to be exported. These arrests immediately followed the proclamation, issued in El Paso, Texas, of a state of revolution in Mexico, and the setting up of a government with Rene Capistrano Garza, a Catholic leader, as provisional president. Jose F. Gandara, "chief of military operations," said fifteen thousand rebels were under arms in Mexico, not including various independent groups in the south. Durango and other towns were reported captured by the revolutionists, and an American correspondent says the rebel bands are burning bridges and ranch houses, wrecking railways and generally harassing the government forces.

OVER in China, where our naval forces are active or ready to become so at need, matters seemed to have quieted down a little pending the expected movement of the Cantonese armies against Shanghai. The foreign authorities in that city have formally warned the Chinese against invading the foreign concessions and their police force and volunteer units have been ordered to keep them out by force of arms. Warcraft of the several foreign nations concerned, including the United States, are concentrating at Shanghai. Admiral Williams went from Manila on the U. S. S. Pittsburgh and resumed command of eight American destroyers already there, and Admiral Sir Reginald Tyrwhitt arrived to command the British squadron. All up the Yangtse, whence foreigners were fleeing, the anti-foreign feeling was growing stronger and the prospects for a serious conflict at Shanghai were good.

Eugene Chen, foreign minister of the Cantonese government, urges the United States to take no part in the opposition to the occupation of Shanghai by the Nationalist forces, saying the Cantonese would enter that city, not as conquerors, but as conservers of the work done by the foreigners during the last century. The British authorities in Hankow are reported to have demanded the speedy return of the British concession there. Representatives of the Peking government are said to have "suggested" that the foreign concessions in that city be handed over to the Chinese.

DEFEATED in all their efforts for a "big navy" except a provision for the construction of a new dirigible, the advocates of strong national defenses last week turned their attention to the War department supply bill, seeking to boost the budget bureau figures by about $8,000,000. Here is what they wanted to do:

1. To increase the army's enlisted personnel from 115,000 to 118,750.
2. To increase the daily ration allowance 5 cents a day per man.
3. To increase the allowance for the National Guard establishment by $800,000 and that for the officers' organized reserves by $400,000.
4. To provide increased funds for the reconditioning of the army transport grant and the purchases of 725 additional mules and 15,000 horses.
5. To provide $310,000 for the erection of sorely needed buildings at West Point.

The house committee rejected most of the budget bureau economies.

FULL indorsement of the new McNary-Haugen farm relief bill was laid before the house agriculture committee by four farm organizations—the American Farm Bureau federation, the Cotton Growers' exchange, the Corn Belt federation and the executive committee of twenty-two. In view of this organized action Chairman Haugen said his committee might not wish to consider further either the Aswell or Curtis-Crisp bills, particularly since the equalization fee, which has been the center of farm-relief controversy, was approved by a 13-to-6 vote.

OSTENSIBLY because of his connection with railway and coal companies, the appointment of Cyrus E. Woods of Pennsylvania to the interstate commerce commission was disapproved by the senate committee on interstate commerce by a vote of 8 to 6. The contest thus was transferred to the floor of the senate, where it was expected the senators from Virginia, West Virginia, Tennessee and Kentucky would lead the opposition to Woods and those from Pennsylvania would support the nomination.

The committee held to be unfounded the charge, made by Senator Steck of Iowa, that Senator-elect Brookhart of Iowa had been a paid lobbyist for Woods. Mr. Steck already had withdrawn the charge.

THOROUGH investigation of reported graft and scandal in the operation of the "under cover" branch of the prohibition service will be made by the senate, which adopted a resolution to that effect introduced by Reed of Missouri. Mellon, Andrews and Blair are instructed to furnish all the correspondence in the department relating to the special agents, their orders and their expenditures. This inquiry is expected to bring out the facts concerning the operation by A. Bruce Bielaski of a speak-easy club in New York to trap bootleggers and patrons, and also concerning the reported operation of stills by dry agents.

GOVERNOR RITCHIE of Maryland, on his third inauguration, reaffirmed his stand for the rights of states against "encroachment of centralized federal government" and decried sumptuary laws regulating personal practices and relations. He didn't mention next year's Presidential campaign and its possibilities, but all through the hall were gold banners bearing the words: "Ritchie for President."

Governor Moore of New Jersey in his annual message advocated a state prohibition referendum and repeal of the state enforcement act.

GOVERNOR PINCHOT of Pennsylvania has refused to certify, in the usual form, the election of W. S. Vare as senator, according to a letter from him read to the senate. Certifying "that on the face of the returns Vare appears to have been chosen by the qualified electorate," Governor Pinchot expressed the opinion that his nomination was "partly bought and partly stolen" and that the election, as well as the primary, were tainted with frauds.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA may be relied on to keep the country supplied with scandals. Just as the Aimee Semple McPherson sensation died with the dismissal of the charges against her, Mrs. Charlie Chaplin began suit for divorce from the famous screen star, whom she accused of all sorts of things, including cruelty and infidelity. Charlie had left Los Angeles, whereupon a court there appointed receivers for all his property and his palatial residence and movie studio. Mrs. Chaplin in her bill estimated her husband's wealth at $16,000,000, of which she declared $10,000,000 is community property; from which it is seen that she will demand approximately $5,000,000 if a decree is granted.

DR. JULIUS CURTIUS, former minister of economics and member of the People's party, has been appointed chancellor of Germany by President von Hindenburg and is trying to form a new cabinet based on a coalition of the bourgeois parties. He has the support of Foreign Minister Stresemann, the chief figure today in German politics, but Berlin is skeptical about his prospects of forming a government that will stand up.

SEVENTY-FIVE children were killed and many others injured as the result of a blaze in a moving picture theater in Montreal. When the flames broke out the children rushed in panic for a door leading from a balcony, and in less than ten minutes the tragedy was over, most of the deaths being from smoke asphyxiation and suffocation.

COEDS HAVE MADE CHANGE AT OXFORD

Claim Standard of Scholarship Is Declining.

Those who sit in the high places of Oxford are concerned about the future of that seat of learning. Some of them are wondering whether they were not mistaken when they welcomed women to their lecture rooms and examination halls and later allowed them to compete on equal terms with men students in all the schools of the university.

When the first women's colleges were founded at Oxford it was supposed that they would be rather small. It was not believed that many girls would be allowed by their parents to spend three or four years in study and residence at a university town. The handful of young blue stockings would scarcely leaven the mass. Oxford would remain, as it had been for centuries, a community of men.

It was like that up to the later Victorian days. When I was an undergraduate in those times the flavor of monasticism and medievalism still hung about its gray walls and quiet streets.

But when I go to Oxford nowadays I find myself in a noisy, bustling modern town. Tramway bells ring, motor horns clang, bicycles whizz by, crowds beset the pavements. The undergraduate is everywhere.

You see her, with cap and gown and notebook, going to lecture; you meet her of afternoons in the teashops, in the quads, on the country roads, on the towpaths, often with attendant men. You would think there were more women than men in the 'varsity.

Assuredly, these maidens have worked changes upon Oxford. Some of them are regarded doubtfully by fellows and tutors of a conservative temper. One of these, a great scholar himself, said that the standard of scholarship at Oxford was steadily declining. The sterner studies were shirked in favor of the lighter and easier subjects, such as English literature and modern history, which do not demand a strict preliminary training in classics or mathematics.

The lectures are made more popular, especially by some of the young tutors, in order to attract the girls. And the lads and lassies are too conscious of one another to pay proper attention to the teacher. That, at least, is what my friend averred, though it is true he is elderly and a bachelor.

Then there is that matter of sports and games. Whereas at Oxford the girls are to the men as one in five, at Cambridge they are only one to ten, and are kept rather more to themselves. Is that one reason why the Dark Blues make so poor a show against their rivals in almost every kind of athletic contest?

Women ought to be enabled to enjoy the benefits of a college education. In America they do so, but at their own exclusive feminine academies, like Vassar and Bryn Mawr, where they can study and play without any disturbing male element. That seems to me the better way.—From the Continental Edition of the London Daily Mail.

More Rubaiyat

Lovers of Omar Khayyam and his Rubaiyat (may their tribe increase!) will be delighted to learn that some more Rubaiyat of the astronomer poet of Persia have been recently discovered. A correspondent of the Daily Gazette of Sind states that during the course of the construction of a new government building at Schwan, in the Larkhana district of Sind, while excavations for the foundations were being made, a brass case was unearthed which contained a manuscript with many hitherto unknown Rubiayat of Omar Khayyam. Translations of some of the quatrains have already been made, the cadence and rhyme being said to be as in the classic translation of the Rubaiyat by Fitzgerald. The Rubiayat are gems of "purest ray serene," and the discovery of even a few more will be hailed with delight the world over.—Bombay Chronicle.

Photos of Brain Messages

Photographic records of messages sent to the brain by nerves are taken with an adaptation of radio apparatus by a European scientist. The instrument is fitted with an amplifier by means of which the nerve impulses are magnified and the impressions are translated into code-like dots and dashes on a photographic plate. The outfit is said to be so sensitive that it records the messages sent to the brain of a frog when the creature's skin is pressed or pricked, and it is being used to study the results of nerve stimulations in human beings, as in the case of a nerve fiber at the end of the finger being pricked with a needle.—Popular Mechanics Magazine.

Truthful Bill

Bill Wright used to be a newspaper man and one of his first assignments was a fire at a fashionable house where a ball was in progress.

Bill wrote a colorful story, but was called on the carpet by the hawk-eyed city editor who said sourly:

"I believe you have overlooked a sensational scandal here. I see that you say the guests fled in scanty attire. Were they in their night gowns or something?"

"Oh, no," said Bill, "they were evening gowns!"

If Back Hurts Flush Kidneys

Drink Plenty of Water and Take Glass of Salts Before Breakfast Occasionally

When your kidneys hurt and your back feels sore, don't get scared and proceed to load your stomach with a lot of drugs that excite the kidneys and irritate the entire urinary tract. Keep your kidneys clean like you keep your bowels clean, by flushing them with a mild, harmless salt which helps to remove the body's urinous waste and stimulate them to their normal activity.

The function of the kidneys is to filter the blood. In 24 hours they strain from it 500 grains of acid and waste, so we can readily understand the vital importance of keeping the kidneys active.

Drink lots of good water—you can't drink too much; also get from your pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts. Take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast each morning for a few days and your kidneys may then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for years to help clean and stimulate clogged kidneys, also to neutralize the acids in the system so they are no longer a source of irritation, thus often relieving bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive; cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which everybody should take now and then to help keep their kidneys clean and active. Try this; also keep up the water drinking, and no doubt you will wonder what became of your kidney trouble and backache.

At last a cheerful whistle in the lower regions drew him down a flight of stairs to what appeared to be an underground storeroom. Here a bulky, overalled individual, looming large in the semi-darkness, stopped in his labor of pushing about some boxes and regarded Laurie with surprise.

"Are you the watchman?" asked the latter, briskly.

"I am that."

"Were you here last night?"

"I was."

"Was anyone else here?"

"Divil a wan."

"Did you hear any noise during the night?"

"Divil a bit."

"Were you asleep?"

"I was," admitted the watchman, simply. His voice was Hibernian, and rich with tolerant good humor.

"I want to make a trade with you." The newcomer held out his silk hat. "Will you give me your hat, or any old hat you've got around the place, for this?"

"I will," said the watchman calmly. Though good-humored, he seemed a man of few words. "And who might you be?" he added.

"I came in last night with Mr. Shaw, and I spent the night here. When I woke up," added Laurie dryly, "I found that my host had moved."

The watchman sadly shook his head. "You're a young lad," he said, with friendly sympathy. "'Tis a pity you've got into these habits."

Laurie grinned at him. He had discovered that his money, like his watch, was safe in his pockets. Taking out a bill, he showed it to his companion. "Do you like the looks of that?" he inquired.

"I do," admitted the watchman warmly.

"Tell me all you know about Shaw, and take it for your trouble."

"I will," promptly agreed the other, but 'tis not much you'll get for your money, for 'tis little enough I know. The man you're talkin' about, I suppose, is the fat fella with eyes you could hang yer hat on, that had the back room on the ground floor."

"That's the one."

"Then all I know is, he moved in three days ago, and he moved out two hours ago. What he did between times I don't know, but he paid for the room for a month in advance, so nobody's mournin' his loss."

"Did he say why he was going, or where?"

"Divil a word did he say. He was in a hurry, that lad. He had a gang of three men with him, and they had the place empty in ten minutes. I lent 'em a hand, an' he gave me a dollar, and that's the last I saw of him."

A sudden thought struck the watchman. "Where was you all the time?" he asked with interest.

"In the cellar."

The watchman nodded, understandingly.

"You're too young for that sort of thing, me boy. Now, I'm no teetotaler meself," he went on argumentatively. "A glass once in a while is all right if a man knows whin to stop. But—"

"How about that hat?" interrupted the festive victim of this homily. "Have you got one handy?"

"I have."

The watchman disappeared into a shadowy corner and returned with a battered derby.

"An' a fine grand hat it is!" he earnestly assured the newcomer, as he handed it over.

Laurie took the hat and put it on his head, where, being too small for him, it perched at a rakish angle. He dropped the bank note into his own silk hat, and handed them to his companion, who accepted them without visible emotion. Evidently, brief though his stay in the building had been, Herbert Ransome Shaw had accustomed its watchman to surprises. Laurie's last glimpse of the man as he hurried away showed him, with extreme efficiency and the swift simultaneous use of two well-trained hands, putting the silk hat on his head and the bill in his pocket.

Laurie rushed through the early East side streets. He was not often abroad at this hour, and even in his anxiety it surprised him to discover how many were abroad so early in the morning. The streets seemed full of pretty girls, hastening to factories and offices, and of briskly stepping men and women, representing types that also would ordinarily catch the attention of the young playwright. But now he had neither thought nor eyes for them.

His urgent needs were first the assurance that Doris was safe, and next the privacy of his own rooms, a bath, and a change of clothing. Obviously, he could not present himself to Doris in the sketchy ensemble he presented now; or could he? He decided that he could, and must. To remain in his present state of suspense a moment longer than he need do was unthinkable.

In a surprisingly short time he was in the studio building, facing the man Sam had called Henry, a yawning night elevator man who regarded him and his questions with a pessimism partly due to the lack of sleep and fatigue. These combined influences led him to making short work of getting rid of this unkempt and unseasonable caller.

"No, sah," he said. "Miss Mayo don' receive no callers at dis yere hour. No, sah, Sam don' come on tell eight o'clock. No, sah, I cain't take no messages to no ladies what ain't out dey beds yit. I got to perteck dese yere folks, I has," he ended austerely.

The caller peeled a bill from his ever-ready roll, and the face of the building's guardian angel changed and softened.

"P'haps I could jes' knock on Miss Mayo's do'," he suggested after a thought-filled interval.

"That's all I want," agreed Laurie. "Knock at her door and ask her if Mr. Devon may call at nine and take her out to breakfast. Tell her he has something very important to say to her."

"Yaas, sah."

The guardian was all humility. He accepted the bill, and almost simultaneously the elevator rose out of sight. The interval before its return was surprisingly short, but too long for the nerves of the caller. Laurie, pacing the lower hall, filled it with apprehensions and visions which drove the blood from his heart. He could have embraced Henry when the latter appeared, wearing an expansively reassuring grin.

"Miss Mayo she say, 'Yaas,' he briefly reported.

Under the force of the nervous reaction he experienced, Laurie actually caught the man's arm.

"She's there?" he jerked out. "You're sure of it?"

"Yaas, sah." Henry spoke soothingly. By this time he had made a diagnosis of the caller's condition which agreed with that of the night-watchman Laurie had just interviewed.

"She say, 'Yaas,'" he repeated. "I done say what you tol' me, and she say, 'Tell de genman, Yaas,' jes like dat."

"All right." Laurie nodded and strode off. For the first time he was breathing naturally and freely. She was there. She was safe. In a little more than an hour he would see her. In the meantime his urgent needs were a bath and a change of clothing. As soon as he was dressed he would go back to the studio building and keep watch in the corridors until she was ready. Then, after breakfast, he would personally conduct her to the security of Louise Ordway's home. Louise need not see her, if she did not feel up to it, but she would surely give her asylum after hearing Laurie's experiences of the night.

That was his plan. It seemed a good one. He did not admit even to himself that under the air of sang-froid he wore as a garment, every instinct in him was crying out for the sound of Doris' voice. Also, as he hurried along, he was conscious that a definite change was taking place in his attitude toward Herbert Ransome Shaw. Slowly, reluctantly, but fully, he had now accepted the fact that "Bertie" represented a force that must be reckoned with.

He inserted the latch-key into the door of his apartment with an inward prayer that Bangs would not be visible, and for a moment he hoped it had been granted. But when he entered their common dressing-room he found his chum there, in the last stages of his usual careful toilet. He greeted Laurie without surprise or comment, in the detached, absent manner he had assumed of late, and Laurie hurried into the bathroom and turned on the hot water, glad of the excuse to escape even a tete-a-tete.

That greeting of Bangs' added the final notes to the minor symphony life was playing for him this morning. As he lay back in the hot water, relaxing his stiff, bruised body, the thought came that possibly he and Rodney were really approaching the final breaking point. Bangs was not ordinarily a patient chap. He was too impetuous and high-strung for that. But he had been wonderfully patient with this friend of his heart. If it were true that the friendship was dying under the strain put upon it, and Laurie knew how possible this was, and how swift and intense were Bangs' reactions, life henceforth, however full it might be, would lack an element that had been singularly vital and comforting. He tried to think of what future days would be without Bangs' exuberant personality to fill them with work and color; but he could not picture them; and as the effort merely added to the gloom that enveloped him, he abandoned it and again gave himself up to thoughts of Doris.

As he hurried into his clothes a strong temptation came to him to tell Bangs the whole story. Then Bangs would understand everything, and he, Laurie, would have the benefit of Rodney's advice and help in untying Doris' tangle.

Doris! Again she swam into the foreground of his consciousness with a vividness that made his senses tingle. He was sitting on a low chair, lacing his shoes, and his fingers shook as he finished the task. He dressed with almost frantic haste, urged on by a fear that, despite his efforts, was shaping itself into a mental panic. Then, hair-brushes in hand, he faced his familiar mirror, and recoiled with an exclamation.

Doris was not there, but her window was, and hanging from its center catch was something bright that caught his eye and instantaneous recognition.

It was a small Roman scarf, with a narrow, vivid stripe.

CHAPTER XI

Doris Takes a Journey

Within five minutes he was in the studio building across the square, frantically punching the elevator bell. Outwardly he showed no signs of the anxiety that racked him, but presented to Sam, when that appreciative youth stopped his elevator at the ground floor, the sartorial perfection which Sam always vastly admired and sometimes dreamed of imitating. But for such perfection Sam had no eyes today.

At this early hour—it was not much more than half-past eight—he had brought down only two passengers, and no one but Laurie was waiting for the upward journey. When the two tenants of the building had walked far enough toward its front entrance to be out of earshot, Sam grasped Laurie's arm and almost dragged him into the car. As he did so, he hissed four words:

"She gone, Mist' Devon!"

"Gone! Where? When?"

Laurie had not expected this. He realized now that he should have done so. His failure to take in the possibility of her going was part of his infernal optimism, of his inability even now to take her situation at its face value. Sam was answering his questions:

"'Bout eight, jes' after Henry went and I come on. An aut'mobile stop in front de do', an' dat man wid de eyes he come in. I try stop him fum takin' de car, but he push me on one side an' order me up, like he was Wilson hisself. So I took him to de top flo'. But when we got dere an' he went to Miss Mayo's do', I jes' kep' de car right dere an' watch him."

"Good boy. What happened?"

"He knock an' nuffin' happen. Den he call out, 'Doris, Doris.' jes' like dat, an' she come an' talk to him; but she didn't open de do'."

"Could you hear what else he said?"

"No, sah. After dat he whisper to her, hissin' like a snake."

Laurie set his teeth. Even Sam felt the ophidian in Shaw.

"Go on," he ordered.

"Den I reckon Miss Mayo she put on a coat, an' dat man wait. I t'ought he was gwine leave, an' I sho' was glad. But he stood dere, waitin' an' grinnin' nuff to split his haid."

Laurie recognized the grin.

"'Bout two-three minutes she come out," Sam went on. "She had a big fur coat an' a veil on. She look awful pale, an' when dey got in de el'vator she didn' say a word. Dey was'n' nobody else in de car, an' it seem lak I couldn't let her go off nohow, without sayin' somethin'. So I say, 'You gwine away, Miss Mayo?' De man he look at me mighty cold an' hard, an' she only nod."

"Didn't she speak at all?"

"No, sah. She ain't say a word. She jes' stood stiff an' still, an' he took her out to de car, an' dey bofe got in."

"Was it a limousine, a closed car?"

"Yaas, sah."

"Did the man himself drive it?"

"No, sah. He sat inside wid Miss Mayo. The man what drove it was younger."

"What did he look like?"

"I couldn't see much o' him. He had a big coat on, an' a cap. But his hair was yallah."

Laurie recognized the secretary.

"Which way did they go?"

"East."

They were standing on the top landing by this time, and Laurie strode forward.

Sam accompanied him, and though he had not desired this continued companionship, Laurie found a certain solace in it. In his humble way this black boy was Doris' friend. He was doing his small part now to help her, if, as he evidently suspected, there was something sinister in her departure.

Entering the familiar studio, Laurie looked around it with a pang. Unlike the quarters of Shaw, it remained unchanged. The room, facing north as it did, looked a little cold in the early light, but it was still stamped with the impress of its former occupant. The flowers he had given her only yesterday hung their heads in modest welcome, and half a dozen eye-flashes revealed half a dozen homely little details that were full of reassurance. Here, open and face down on the reading-table, was a book she might have dropped that minute. There was the long mirror before which she brushed her wonderful hair and, yes, the silver-backed brushes with which she brushed it. On the writing-table were a pencil and a torn sheet of paper, as if she had just dashed off a hurried note.

In short, everything in the room suggested that the owner, whose presence still hung about it, might return at any instant. And yet, there in the window, where he had half jokingly told her to place it, hung the brilliant symbol of danger which he himself had selected.

He walked over and took it from the latch. In doing this, he discovered that only half the scarf hung there, and that one end was jagged, as if roughly and hastily cut off. He put the scarf into his pocket. As he did so, his pulses leaped. Pinned to its folds was a bit of paper, so small and soft that even the inquisitive eye of Sam, following his every motion, failed to detect it. Laurie turned to the black boy.

"We'd better get out of here," he suggested, trying to speak carelessly and leading the way as he spoke. "Miss Mayo may be back at any moment."

Sam's eyes bulged till they rivaled Shaw's.

"You don' t'ink she gone?" he stammered.

"Why should we think she has gone?" Laurie tried to grin at him. "Perhaps she's merely taking an automobile ride, or an early train for a day in the country. Certainly nothing here looks as if she had gone away for good. People usually pack, don't they?"

Sam dropped his eyes. His face, human till now, took on its familiar, sphinxlike look. He followed "Mist' Devon" into the elevator in silence, and started the car on its downward journey. But as his passenger was about to depart with a nod, Sam presented him with a reflection to take away with him.

Fox Fires No Longer Cause Childish Fear

Boys and girls nowadays seldom experience the thrill of seeing a mysterious light glowing dimly in the depths of the forest or gleaming from some half-buried rotten log in a lonely swamp. The cutting away of the forests and the draining of swampy land have cleared from much of the landscape the causes which produce fox fire. In early days, however, the feet of pioneer children often were sent scampering home in the twilight when their owners came unexpectedly upon a light which seemed to have no source, says the Indianapolis News.

Ghosts and goblins and all sorts of evil omens ever have been associated with the appearance of fox fire and will-o'-the-wisps. There long has been a difference of opinion regarding the cause of fox fire, but now it is generally conceded to be due to a living fungus growth which permeates decaying vegetable matter and which possesses the power of emitting waves of light. No sensible heat waves are thrown out, and in this respect fox fire resembles the light emitted by fireflies and glowworms. Many a ghost might have been traced to its lair had the origin of phosphorescence been understood better, especially in the countries where the will-o'-the-wisps are reputed to be of frequent occurrence.

High Winds on Peak

Half a century ago a group of hardy observers of the weather spent their winters on Mount Washington. They lived in a low stone house, chained to the solid rock, says a writer in the American Magazine. They found that the wind on the peak often blew 150 miles an hour. On one occasion it romped across the summit at the rate of 186 miles an hour; three or four times as fast as an express train.

Nearly $3,000,000 in postal money orders were sent from America to Sweden in the last year.

PEAR BLIGHT IS EASY TO CONTROL

Cutting out and destroying in winter, the twigs and limbs of pear trees killed by blight during the growing season will control the destructive "fire blight" and eliminate the source of infection for the following year.

"Pear blight is produced by a bacterial germ," says G. W. Fant, extension plant disease specialist at the North Carolina state college. "This disease causes much concern to growers during the growing season, although it is during the winter months only that effective control measures can be put into practice. The disease is characterized by a death of the blossoms, young twigs and, later, the larger limbs, giving twigs of affected trees the appearance of having been scorched by fire. No method of control by spraying has yet been found due to the manner in which the disease works beneath the surface of the bark."

Twigs affected with fire blight can be distinguished in winter by the adhering dead leaves, and Mr. Fant states that it is a good practice to go over all affected trees during the dormant season and cut out, as far as possible, all blighted twigs. The cuts, he explains, must be made several inches below the lower limit of the canker in order to cut out all diseased wood. It is advisable also to disinfect the pruning implement after making each cut by dipping the implement into a solution of bichloride of mercury prepared in the proportion of one part of the material to 1,000 parts of water. This solution should be prepared in an earthen or wooden vessel. Pruning can be accomplished more easily if two sets of tools are used, keeping one set in the solution while the other is used for cutting. Pruning during the summer months has little value, states Mr. Fant.

Fire blight is not confined entirely to pears, although it is most prevalent on this tree. Apple trees are sometimes severely injured, however.

Prune All Fruit Trees During Dormant Season

It is best to prune fruit trees during the dormant season any time after the leaves have fallen. Pruning done then has an invigorating effect on the trees, whereas an equal amount of pruning done in the summer weakens them, because it deprives the trees of foliage before that foliage has an opportunity to contribute to the fruit growth of the tree, according to Prof. Joseph Oskamp at the New York State College of Agriculture at Ithaca, N. Y. Ill effects from pruning when the wood is frozen are usually considered unimportant because the wood is seldom injured from it.

The way the cut is made has a direct bearing on the healing of the wound. If a stub is left, decay is likely to start before the wound heals, so branches should be cut flush. Small wounds need no protection, but large ones should be painted with a thick white lead and oil paint. Here, too, the winter is most desirable, because during the summer the caustic action of the paint may hinder the healing of the wound.

Many different kinds of tools are available for pruning, but the most satisfactory work is done with those that are strong and sharp, regardless of the kind.

Prevent Orchard Damage From Mice Gnawing Bark

Where the orchard has a heavy growth of grass or some crop around the trees, there is likely to be much damage during the winter from mice gnawing the bark. The first thing to do to prevent such damage is to clear away all the grass and rubbish from around the trunk of the tree. Some orchardists put a few shovelfuls of clean cinders in a circle of a foot or more around the base of the tree.

Another method of keeping down the mice in the orchard is the maintenance of poison stations which are kept baited throughout the year, and which are examined frequently.

The following special method of preparing bait for these orchard pests is suggested. Mix dry one-eighth of an ounce of powdered strychnine, one-eighth of an ounce of baking soda. Sift this mixture over one quart of rolled oats, heat oats in an oven until thoroughly warm, and pour over it six tablespoonfuls of a mixture of three parts melted beef fat and one part melted paraffin. When this mixture cools it is ready for use.

If rabbits cause much damage enclose lower part of the trunk with a piece of wire screen or wood veneer.

Fruit Testing Association

The New York Fruit Testing association has just held its annual meeting at the New York state experiment station at Geneva. The association was formed to test out under a wide range of soil and climatic conditions the new varieties of fruit originated by the fruit breeders at the state experiment station and believed by them to be worthy of further test by fruit growers. A new and promising fruit may not be a profitable fruit just because it is new.

NEW CORN BORER QUARANTINE ESTABLISHED

Iowa Has Most Complete Quarantine Against New Pest

Des Moines, January 20.—New outbreaks of the corn borer in Illinois, Indiana and Michigan, which are not covered by the federal quarantine, have been met by a rigid state quarantine which was issued on January 12th by Dr. C. J. Drake, State Entomologist, with the approval of M. G. Thornburg, Secretary of Agriculture, and Governor John Hammill.

The new quarantine is issued in two sections. The first section establishes a state quarantine against districts which have been recently infested with the European corn borer and which are not covered by the federal quarantine. The second portion of the quarantine reaffirms the present federal quarantine.

All products from infested areas which may harbor the corn borer are barred entrance into the state unless they are accompanied by a federal certificate showing that the articles are free from corn borer, that they have originated outside of the corn borer territory or that they have been disinfected or treated in such a manner as to kill all borers. The Iowa quarantine is perhaps the most complete quarantine that has been issued against the corn borer by any state.

Friday the thermometer read around 10 below zero, Saturday t informed us it was about 15 below and then Saturday night the temperature began to rise until by Sunday afternoon it was thawing weather. Some change!

JULIUS AHRENKEIL DIED AT GOODELL SUNDAY

Funeral Services Were Held Tuesday Afternoon

Julius Ahrenkeil was born at Stabbum, Denmark, November 16. 1862, and died at Goodell, Iowa, Jan 16, 1927, aged 64 years and 2 months.

He leaves two brothers, George of Goodell, and August of Denver, Colorado. He was not married. Mr. Ahrenkeil came to this country when about sixteen years of age, and lived at first near Cedar Falls. He farmed seven years near New Hartford, following which he came to Goodell where he resided until his death.

At Goodell he lived with his brother John, and after his brother's death, continued to live with the family For some years he has conducted a grocery store in the same building where he had clerked for a number of years.

He was confirmed in the Lutheran church in Denmark, but united with the U B Church at Goodell in 1915. He was a faithful member, always present at the services of the church, unless prevented by very good reasons. He was a liberal supporter of the church and its organizations.

In the community he was a friend to all. He will be greatly missed by both Church and community.

Funeral service was conducted at the U. B. Church of Goodell, by the pastor, Rev. F. C. Scott, on Tuesday afternoon, January 18th. Interment was made in Amsterdam Cemetery, near Goodell.

EGG MARKETING LEGISLATION SUGGESTED

Would Give Farmers More Money For Good Eggs Sold

Des Moines, Jan 20.—"Farmers should receive more money when good eggs are sold, than for eggs of average quality, and consumers should be able to know what kind of eggs they are buying," stated Mr. Carl N. Kennedy, Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, in discussing the egg marketing question.

"Changes of this kind will make poultry raising more profitable, as it will increase the average price received for the product, and it will improve the confidence of the public in good eggs, thereby increasing consumption," said Mr. Kennedy.

"The general poultry trade is slowly making some improvement along these lines but such work could undoubtedly be aided by constructive legislation. A law establishing egg grades would stimulate buying on grade, while a law requiring eggs to be graded when sold would make it impossible to pan poor eggs off on unsuspecting consumers as fresh eggs."

Engineers are told that in 1931 it will be possible to run an automobile fifty miles for five cents, provided of course, that room can be found on the roads.

A scientist at Philadelphia traces man back to a primitive fish. And sometimes we think that most of us haven't got far away from the home plate even yet.

An air service expert says that flying is safer than standing behind the business end of a mule. But that statement if true doesn't prove that aviation is particularly healthful.

"And Another Redskin Bit the Dust!"

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

IT WAS Kin Hubbard, the genial Hoosier philosopher who utters his epigrams through the mouthpiece of "Abe Martin of Brown county, Indiana," who declared the other day that "lots o' things are awful high, but I don't believe anything has gone up like th' dime novel, some o' which sell for $3." It is not certain whether Abe was making this sly insinuation against the quality of some of our modern fiction or against a new development in American writing in which the exploits of dime novel heroes are being preserved in such formal biographies as "The Saga of Billy the Kid" by Walter N. Burns, "The Rise and Fall of Jesse James" by Robertus F. Love, and "Wild Bill, the Prince of Pistoleers" by Walter J. Wilstach.

Whichever it was that Abe had in mind, he was, in reality, doing the dime novel an injustice, in monetary if not in literary value. For the old ten-cent thrillers which were devoured, swapped and secreted by the boys of 40 years ago and which were then considered the source of all juvenile crime have in late years become eminently respectable and extremely valuable possessions to have. Remember the days when you spent your whole week's allowance for a copy of "Deadly Eye"; or "The Prairie Rover," by Buffalo Bill (William F. Cody); or "Arkansaw, the Man With the Knife"; or "The Queen of Fate's Revenge," by T. C. Harbaugh, to be read surreptitiously behind your "joggerfy book" at school or in the hayloft at home when you were certain that dad would not appear unexpectedly? After you had read this treasure to the last hair-raising page, perhaps you traded it off to a crony for his copy of "Arizona Joe, the Boy Pard of Texas Jack" or "California Joe; or, The Angel of the Wilderness: A Story of the War in Virginia."

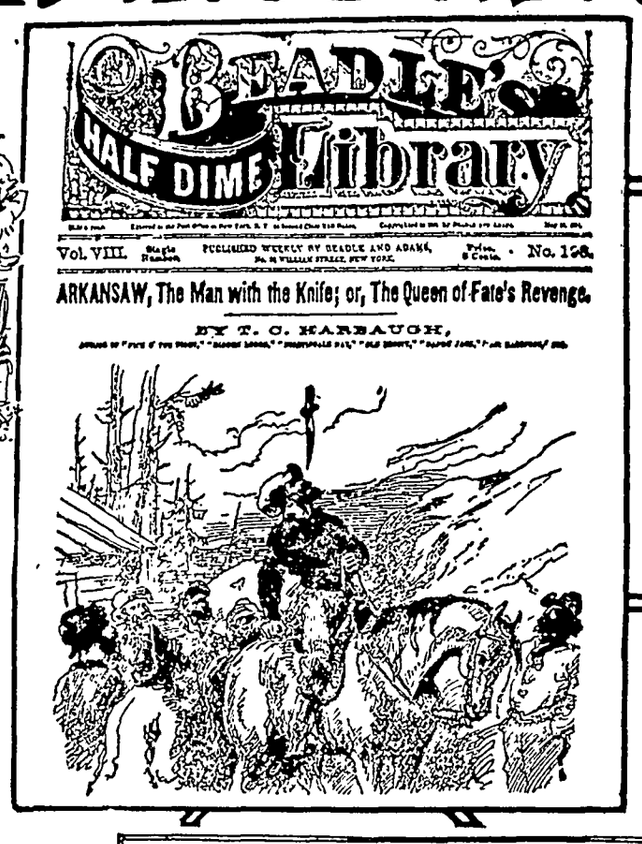
For all of these were titles in Beadle's Dime library or Beadle's Half Dime library, published by those eminent instructors of American youth in the ways of the wild and woolly West—Beadle and Adams of New York. If you had a copy of them now, you wouldn't need to hide it away as you once did. You could exhibit it proudly to your friends as "collector's item" or "rare Americana" which has "taken a place in American literature" and which not so long ago was the thesis subject by which a student won his Ph.D. degree in the English department of one of our largest universities. If you wanted to sell your copy, you could probably get anywhere from five to ten dollars for what originally sold for five or ten cents.

At least, if the prices paid for Dr. Frank P. O'Brien's library of dime novels in New York only a few years ago is any criterion, you could. His collection of 310 volumes of thrillers, which represented 20 years of searching through 30 states in order to secure these rapidly disappearing little books and pamphlets relating to pioneer American life, were auctioned off for a total of $3,198.20. Individual volumes brought various prices but the top price was $1,025 for 28 volumes of Beadle & Co.'s weekly magazine, the Saturday Star Journal. It is not likely that another such collection will ever again appear in the auction rooms but from time to time individual volumes bob up somewhere and they are quickly snapped up by collectors who know their value.

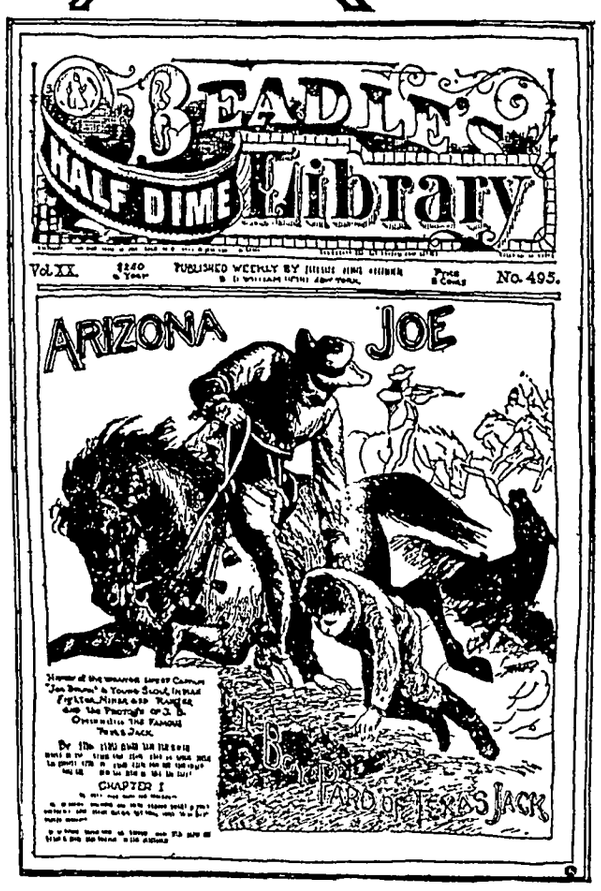
Other echoes of the old dime novel days are heard occasionally to recall to the boys of yesterday the favorite literature of their youth. One of them was heard a year or so ago when press dispatches carried the news that T. C. Harbaugh had sold off his meager possessions and entered an Ohio poorhouse, there to spend his declining years. This T. C. Harbaugh was one of the most prolific of Beadle's dime novelists and between 1869 and 1897 he wrote nearly a thousand volumes of this type of fiction, or more than 5,000,000 words of thrills, of which it was once said, "There are ten thousand shudders in his writings, but not one blush." Harbaugh was paid $250 each for the dime novels and $150 for the half-dime novels, and he made a fortune at the work, only to end his days in poverty.

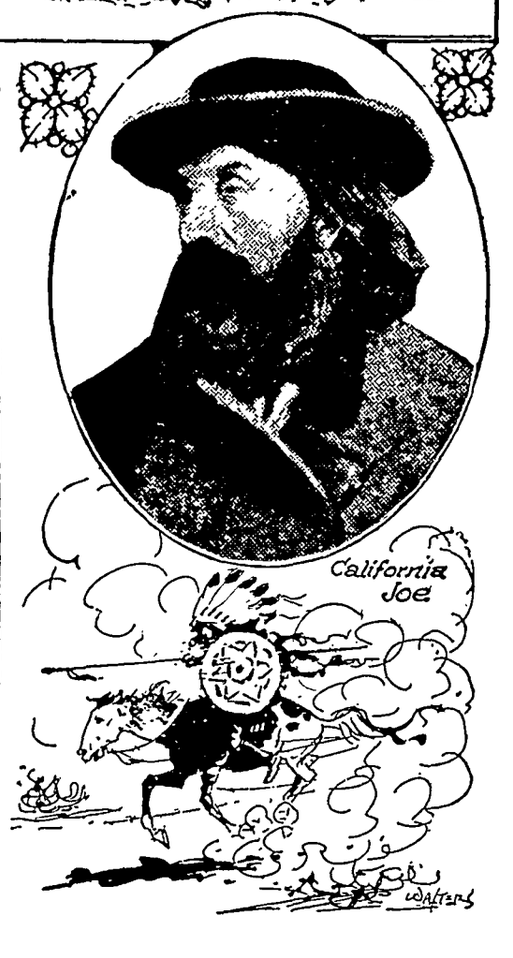
Other echoes were heard in more recent press dispatches when the original "Deadwood Dick," whose real name is Richard Clark and who lives near Whitewood, S. D., was quoted as protesting against the news that he was dead, as it had been reported from California, and when, from Norfolk, Neb., came the news that the original "Diamond Dick" was still living there. He's not known as Diamond Dick, however, by the people of Norfolk, but as Dr. Richard J Tanner, one of the foremost physicians in the county. Although neither Deadwood Dick, nor Diamond Dick, had one-tenth of the thrilling adventures credited to them in the dime novels, both have lived sufficiently interesting lives and had more than their share of narrow escapes from death. Deadwood Dick was a miner and stage driver in the Black Hills of 50 years ago. Diamond Dick also had a varied career in that country in the old Indian-fighting days but he was best known for his later career as a fancy rifle and pistol shot with a circus until he gave this up to study medicine.

In fact, a great many of the dime novel heroes were real persons and in some cases the events narrated in the books were autobiographical, since the authors themselves had lived on the frontier and had their share of thrilling experiences. Certainly Buffalo Bill (Col. W. F. Cody), who was both a dime novel hero and author, was a real person, as history will testify. Other heroes who are not so well known were California Joe, Texas Jack, Arizona Joe, "The Evil Spirit of the Plains," Roving Joe, Buckskin Sam, Fancy Frank, the Iron Face; Old Grizzly, the Bear Tamer; Bruin Adams, Captain Jack, the Poet Scout, and Ned Buntline.



Dime New York Library
Vol. XVIII. No. 225
ROCKY MOUNTAIN AL; or, Nugget Nell, the Waif of the Range.
BY "BUCKSKIN SAM"—Major Sam S. Hall,





California Joe is often referred to as a man, "the riddle of whose identity, like that of the man in the iron mask, is still unsolved." As a matter of fact, it was solved long ago and whatever mystery there was about it arose from a confusion of two men—a member of Berdan's Sharpshooters in the Civil war, who bore the name of California Joe, and Joseph E. Milner, the real California Joe, who was a native of Kentucky, a scout for Generals Sheridan and Custer during the plains Indian wars after the Civil war and a miner in the Black hills where he was assassinated in 1876.

Texas Jack's real name was J. B. Omohundro, a Virginian who emigrated to Texas at an early age where he distinguished himself by extinguishing several bad men who made the mistake of thinking that this quiet young fellow wouldn't fight. He served in the Confederate army during the Civil war and was a guide, rancher, mustang-breaker, hunter, scout and Indian fighter afterwards. He and Buffalo Bill were the guides for the earl of Dunraven when that adventure-seeking Englishman penetrated the Yellowstone country in the seventies and the earl speaks highly of the character and ability of both men. Texas Jack is said to have died in Leadville, Colo., in 1880.

Wild Bill is also a historic character, as any number of authoritative works will testify. His real name was James Butler Hickok and he was born in Illinois in 1837. He was a scout for the Union forces in the Civil war, an overland stage driver and a scout for Custer in the Indian wars but he won his greatest fame as marshal of Hays City, Kans., and Abilene in the days when they were typical of the wide-open and roaring frontier town. Like his friend, California Joe, Wild Bill was also assassinated, shot down from behind, in the Black hills, in 1870.

Buffalo Bill, Wild Bill and Texas Jack are the triumvirate of heroes in Col. Prentiss Ingraham's "The League of Three; or, Buffalo Bill's Pledge," which gives an interesting and accurate picture of the city of Omaha as it was in the sixties. Colonel Ingraham was also the biographer of Bruin Adams, who was the nephew and biographer of the famous "Old Grizzly" Adams. James Capon Adams ("Old Grizzly") was one of the most remarkable characters in the history of the West. He was born in New York but went West at an early day. Of him Doctor O'Brien has said, "In future millenniums the quaint figure who went about the country riding an enormous grizzly bear, with a second similar beast for a bodyguard, will probably become a legend and finally a myth." But he was a real person, all right, even though it is difficult to pick out the truth from the fiction in the accounts of his life as written by Fancy Frank, the Iron Face (Dr. D. Frank Powell, who was also known as "White Beaver" and who was associated with Buffalo Bill at one time) and his nephew, Bruin Adams, who joined him in the Rockies at an early age.

Arizona Joe's real name was Capt. Joe Bruce, and Captain Jack, the Poet Scout, was John Wallace Crawford, who fought in the Civil war as a boy and later became noted as a scout in the Sioux Indian wars, a miner in the Black hills and a friend of Wild Bill, California Joe and other worthies in the old Black hills gold rush days.

Roving Joe was Joseph E. Badger, Jr., and his biography, although written as a dime novel by A. H. Post, under the title of "Roving Joe: The History of a Young Border Ruffian," is in the main an accurate historical record of Badger's career as a hunter, trapper, Indian fighter and miner in the Pikes Peak gold regions. Buckskin Sam was Maj. Sam S. Hall, author of "Kit Carson, Junior, the Crack Shot of the West" which was a narrative of events in 1860 which came under his personal observation. His recital of the campaign of a party of Texas rangers in pursuit of Cortina, the Mexican outlaw, has been called "a real contribution to American history." "The Evil Spirit of the Plains" was Dr. William Frank Carver, noted as a crack shot, a scout, hunter and a companion of Buffalo Bill.

Most interesting of all, perhaps, is Ned Buntline (Col. E. Z. C. Judson), because he has some claim to being the author of the first true dime novel. Judson, when only sixteen years of age, wrote his first story which appeared in the Knickerbocker Magazine in 1838. In 1848 he became editor of a magazine called "Ned Buntline's Own Weekly." He was arrested for inciting the Astor Place riots in his magazine, fired $250 and spent a year in prison. Upon his release from prison in 1850 he began writing more voluminously than ever before. In 1860 he visited Jim Bridger, the famous mountain man and guide, on Bridger's farm at Westport, Mo. Bridger liked Judson and took him on a trip to the plains with him. In return Judson made Bridger the hero of a series of his dime novels which brought even greater fame to this remarkable character.

From that time on Judson continued as a writer of dime novels and was soon making $20,000 a year with such thrillers as "The Red Right Hand," "The Comanche's Dream," "Life on the Prairies," "Wild Bill's Last Fight," and various other narratives of the deeds of Buffalo Bill, Wrestling Joe, Mountain Tom, Big Foot Wallace, and Rattlesnake Ned.

Buntline's great fame, however, came from his ventures in the theatrical world when he transferred the dime novel idea to the stage and brought before the American public the wild West in the form of Buffalo Bill, Texas Jack and Wild Bill.

Although Ned Buntline may be credited with starting the dime novel, it was Erastus Beadle who made them most famous and made the name "Beadle's Dime Novel" a universally known trademark. Beadle may have got the idea from Buntline or have seen the possibilities of giving readers a new type of fiction based upon some of the stirring scenes he witnessed during a trip from Buffalo, N. Y., to some of his pre-empted lands in Omaha, Neb., in 1857. At any rate, the firm of Beadle and Adams began issuing the dime novels in 1859. But it was not until the following year, when their novel "Malaeska; or, The Indian Wife of the White Hunter" by Mrs. Anna S. Stevens, was such an enormous success, that they began production on a big scale. Some of their novels bore the imprint of "Frank Starr & Co., 41 Platt Street, N. Y." Starr was a foreman in Beadle's printing shop and the address of the Starr company was the rear entrance of the Beadle establishment. Beadle and Adams ceased issuing their dime novels in 1897, the last one being Colonel Ingraham's "Buffalo Bill's Tough Tussle; or, The Buckskin Boss Boy."

Flexibility Is Big Crop Factor

Rotation Is Long Recognized Principle of Farming Economy.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Flexibility in crop rotation is a long recognized principle of farming economy. Agricultural history contains many illustrations of the use that has been made of this idea from the Middle ages to the present time, especially in Europe. It is commonly observed, however, says the bureau of soils of the United States Department of Agriculture, that uniformity of soil, even on a single farm, is most unusual, and that one field may require an entirely different rotation of crops from another adjoining it. A rotation best suited to a low-producing sandy soil is unlikely to be suited to a highly productive silt loam. Again, a hillside field, subject to soil washing calls for different rotation management from a field on a flat area.

Each Farm Has Problems.

Each farm presents its own problems. The farmer who farms more or less with live stock is not so much concerned with rotation as with the acreage of crops necessary to meet his feeding requirement. The truck grower is concerned primarily with the question of crops in relation to market conditions. In either case rotation is a means to an end, with two aspects: The growing of the desired crops in a manner, or in different rotations, best suited to the soil and crop conditions; and the dovetailing of the different rotations so as to enable the farmer to realize annually the required acreage of each crop he desires.

Influencing Conditions.

Still greater flexibility in crop rotation may be needed, owing to local conditions which may arise, such as insect pests, crop diseases, or weeds. Changing the common fixed rotation may reduce army worm injury, or an additional intertilled crop may help combat some obnoxious weed. Changes in economic or market conditions may compel rotation changes. Any cropping system which will permit of easy alternation is preferable to one that does not possess this quality of elasticity.

Hardiest Alfalfa Seed Is Brought From Canada

For many years it was thought that Grimm was the hardiest known variety of alfalfa and, for that reason, was most desirable for this region, but recently Ontario Variegated, although not a new variety, has come into prominence and has proved itself fully as hardy as Grimm, according to Prof. L. A. Dalton at the New York state college of agriculture at Ithaca, N. Y.

When Grimm was considered the only good variety to plant, the farmers had to pay high prices, and, frequently, they resorted to common alfalfa as a substitute. The common alfalfa, however, came from many sources where the climate was mild, and therefore the seed was unadapted to our severe winters.

Although Ontario Variegated has been grown in Canada for half a century, the production has not been large enough to meet the demand from the United States until during the past five years.

Ontario Variegated is like Grimm so far as one can tell, says Professor Dalton, and this has a bearing on the question of Grimm versus Ontario Variegated. Grimm is higher priced, and in some instances the Ontario Variegated is purchased and resold as Grimm.

The best way for farmers to get genuine hardy Ontario Variegated alfalfa seed, he says, is to buy from reliable seed men and insist on this variety.

Value of Horse Manure When Properly Cared For

Experiments at Purdue university indicate that when properly cared for, the manure from a well-fed horse is worth $14.75 per year; from a dairy cow $18.75; from other cattle $11.60; from a sheep $2.25; and from a hog $2.10. At present, however, only a few farmers are realizing these values because they do not care for the manure properly.

Over half the total fertilizing value of the manure, solid and liquid, is contained in the urine; therefore every reasonable precaution should be taken to prevent its loss. The urine usually contains about three-fourths of the total nitrogen and four-fifths of the total potash. And these are two of the most important elements needed for plant growth.

PRAYER IN CHRISTIAN LIFE

LESSON TEXT—Mark 1:35; 14:32-42; Matt. 6:9-13

GOLDEN TEXT—Ask and it shall be given you; seek and ye shall find; knock and it shall be opened unto you.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Talking to God.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Jesus Teaches Us How to Pray.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Learning From Jesus How to Pray.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—What Jesus Taught by Prayer.

I. Jesus Praying in a Solitary Place (Mark 1:35).

After a series of most strenuous efforts Jesus retired to a lonely place to pray. He who the day before had shown His mighty power in casting out devils and banishing disease now needed to be alone with God. In order to do this He arose a long time before daylight. The very best time to pray is in the morning when our physical powers have been renewed. If the Son of God needed this time for prayer, this renewal of spiritual strength in communion with the Heavenly Father, how much more should we seek help by retiring to the solitary place.

II. Jesus Praying in Gethsemane (Mark 14:32-42)

In this time of crisis He took with him Peter, James and John.

1. The first prayer (vv. 35-38).

(1) His posture (v. 35).

He fell on his face prostrate on the ground. In the hour of great need we naturally prostrate ourselves before God.

(2) His petition (v. 36).

"Take away this cup from me." By the cup is meant His death on the cross. No doubt it was most grievous for Him to face this shame, but He pressed on, knowing that for this cause He had come into the world (John 12:27, 28, cf. Heb. 2:14).

(3) His resignation (v. 36).

His will was in subjection to the Father. He knew that His death on the cross was the will of God, the Father, for He was the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world.

(4) The disciples rebuked (v. 37).

He singled out Peter since he had been the most conspicuous in proclaiming his loyalty (John 13:38).

(5) Exhortation to the disciples (v. 38).

"Watch and pray lest ye enter into temptation." The only way to be able to stand in the time of trial is to be watching and praying.

2. The second prayer (vv. 39, 40).

He withdrew the second time from the disciples and uttered the same words in prayer. This was not vain repetition. It is proper to repeat our requests. He found the disciples asleep again. Their shame and confusion were more marked than at first.

3. The third prayer (vv. 41, 42).

He uttered the same words in the third prayer (Matt. 26:44).

He tells the disciples to sleep on and take their rest as the hour had now come for His betrayal. There is such a thing as being asleep when wanted and awakening when it is too late. If the disciples had been praying they would not have fallen asleep.

III. Jesus Giving a Model Prayer (Matt. 6:9-13).

This model was given in response to the disciples' request that the Lord would teach them how to pray (Luke 11:10). It is not therefore the Lord's prayer, but the model prayer for the disciples. It involves:

1. A right relationship (v. 9).

"Our Father." Only those who become children of God by faith in Jesus Christ (Gal. 3:26) can pray right. One must be a child of God before he can be in communion with God.

2. A right attitude (vv. 9, 10).

"Hallowed be Thy name." When one realizes that he has been delivered from the power of darkness and translated into the kingdom of His son (Col. 1:13) by being made a child of God, he cannot help pouring out his soul in gratitude and praise, intensely longing for the kingdom, the righteous rule of Christ to come on the earth.

3. A right spirit (vv. 11-13).

(1) That of trust which looks to God for the supply of daily bread. We are dependent upon Him for our daily food. With all man's boasted progress he cannot make a harvest. The marvels of modern chemistry are insufficient for this.

(2) That of love which results in kindness of others. God will not listen to the prayer of one who has an unforgiving spirit.

(3) That of holiness which moves us to pray not to be led into temptation and longs to be delivered from the evil one.

BLOUSE FOR SPORTSWEAR; SHORT JACKET ENSEMBLE

SENTENCED to wear stripes! It is the verdict of the mode. The decree issues from the highest style courts. So it's the wearin' o' stripes for women of fashion for the coming term of spring and summer.

The newer materials, silks, cottons and woolens, all exploit stripes—stripes colorful, and of exceptional novelty. It is well, therefore, when choosing the fabric for your spring frock or blouse, to keep in mind that stripes are "it," especially those that run in a horizontal way.

The subject of stripes, as interpreted in the spring fabric showings, is an inexhaustible one. They include narrow and wide versions, definite and indefinite types, pastel or vivid tones, and the very latest is ombre coloring.

Effectiveness of the new striping is largely due to the artful blending or contrasting of color. Exquisite combinations such as rose, brown, tan and cream or perhaps Madonna blue, beige and old rose compete with brilliant Roman stripes and the last word in startling effects is for bright yellows, greens, blues and reds variously striped on a white background.

For spring the blouse of striped flannel will pose over a skirt of the same material in solid coloring. The picture shows the result of the compose of a striped and plain fabric. Tan, brown and red-striped flannel for the blouse with plain tan flannel makes this smart sports frock. Notice that the stripes run horizontally, which is the fashionable thing for them to do. The new materials lend themselves to this horizontal design, in that the stripes are woven across the width of this season's piece goods.

Of outstanding interest are stripes placed in groups of three on cashmere ground in pure silk interweavings.

Striped taffetas subscribe to the new mode, and the latest ginghams are also striped—which all goes to show the prominent role stripes are playing in the season's fashions.

Nearly every couturier in Paris is exploiting the short jacket theme for midseason and early spring. For immediate wear the velvet jacket with wool checks or plaid for the skirt is the outstanding idea. So interesting have compose costumes of skirt and jacket become, Paris predicts a tremendous vogue for them with the arrival of spring.

Appropriate for the present is the velvet jacket with contrasting skirt, and for later on satin is appointed to take its place. Types such as are shown in the picture are being highlighted by Parisian stylists. Seen at Longchamp was this sports tailleur of black satin shown to the left. The jacket is cut along very soft and feminizing lines. The fact that the skirt is enriched with bands of velvet, shows how loathe is the designer to absent this beloved fabric from the style program. Which leads to an interesting bit of information, namely that midseason frocks of both cloth and silk retain velvet as a trimming.

Navy blue suede cloth is the chosen medium for the jacket pictured to the right. Here, too, is the trend of the vogue forespoken, for navy blue is down on the calendar of coming color events. The skirt is plaited in navy and beige.

Molyneux carries out the jacket costume in velveteen posed over woolen in matching color for the skirt, adding to this a jumper of rich brocade, thus creating an afternoon costume rich of fabric, and adaptable to varied occasion. Thus again does the short jacket mode involve a new style movement, namely, that of the blouse. All signs point to a coming season wherein the blouse will be of outstanding importance.

As for the short jacket, not only is it the personification of youth, but its possibilities are endless.

Virginia Still Rich in Colonial Mansions

Old Virginia homesteads in which were born and reared the makers of Virginia and the United States stand today, mute evidences of the simplicity and genteel dignity which surrounded those men and women pioneers.

Just as the cradle of America has often been said to have been at Jamestown, so the oldest mansions in Virginia are to be found there. And extending slowly, as did these early settlers over Virginia and the rest of the country, these palatial homes dotted the state. Naturally, this expanding movement followed the rivers, and so most of Virginia's colonial residences are to be found close by the banks of the York, James, the Potomac and the Rapahannock rivers.

Included among the several hundred colonial residences are scores whose histories pre-date Revolutionary days. Many of them are national shrines.

Monticello, Arlington, Mt. Vernon, Kenmore—symbolic of Thomas Jefferson, the Custisses and Lees, George Washington and the Lewises—all have become hallowed and have been dedicated to the nation. Four palaces representing as many distinct types of architectural beauty, these colonial mansions would be famous for their beauty alone.

Brandon, Westover, Berkeley, Shirley, garden spots along the James, once housed the Harrisons, Byrds and Carters, all prominent in the early life of Virginia and the United States. Around Williamsburg are the homes of President Tyler and many others who helped make history, while few sections of Virginia cannot claim one or more of these palatial residences of colonial times.

In this advanced civilization which crowds homes almost one upon another, these picturesque, spacious manors, free of gaudy ornaments and serene in in their large settings, serve to recall the simple wholesome environment which made for the firm foundation of the United States.

History in a Bag

A Budapest newspaper relates that a schoolboy at Navyvarad, in the Hungarian territory transferred to Rumania, found on buying some fruit that the paper bag into which it had been placed was made of an old document belonging to the municipal archives and giving an official account of the Battle of Magenta. His curiosity being aroused he secured another bag, which was made from an original decree of the Emperor Joseph, dated 1780, permitting the Protestant inhabitants of Navyvarad to bury their dead to funeral chants. Investigation showed that the new Hungarian authorities had been selling the old archives in bulk as waste paper. The Hungarian inhabitants of the town have now taken steps to save whatever can yet be recovered.—Pierre Van Paassen, in the Atlanta Constitution.

Under Bolshevism

"The Bolsheviks were going to give the world a new race. They were going to train the children into supermen. Well—"

Max Eastman was describing his visit to Russia. He went on:

"Well, the Bolsheviks, instead of elevating the children of Russia, have degraded them to unbelievable depths.

"Astonished at the filth of Russian children, I said one day to a Leningrad boy:

"'How many collars do you wear a week?'

"The boy gave me a puzzled frown.

"'I suppose,' he said, 'you mean how many weeks do I wear a collar?'"

Modern Whaling

Whaling is now handled with modern machinery. A specially built ship is used equipped with a false bow. When a whale has been killed by the machine harpoon guns, of the ship or of her power tender, the false bow is lifted, leaving a gaping hole into which the carcass entire is drawn by power machinery. There in the hull of the vessel it is carved and dissected by other power machinery into the trying vats and ultimately the oil is run off through pipes into vast tanks below, that in one ship's case will hold 67,000 barrels of oil.

Men of Firm Convictions

After 54 years of controversy Charles Keough of Douglas, Kan., paid up. One Charles Lamb had insisted that Keough owed him $75. Keough said it was $40, the price of cutting and stacking wheat back in 1872. They went to law about it and a jury said that Keough owed Lamb nothing. But Keough, now seventy-six years old, wished to settle. He admitted that he owed the $40 and sent the money. Lamb said that he would take the money and say no more about it, except that he had not altered his position, either, in the 54 years.

Irish Poets Have Status

Poets are not fined in the District court at Milford county, Donegal, Ireland. When a local poet appeared for having an unlicensed dog the justice said he would not inflict a penalty on the condition that a license be immediately secured. "Poets are never fined in this court," he said. "To be able to write poetry is almost as good a defense as it is to speak Irish." In a similar case the defendent could not speak Irish. The justice: "I'm sorry I cannot fine you for the dog in this case and also sorry I cannot fine you for not knowing Irish."

DR. W. B. CALDWELL AT THE AGE OF 83

Constipation! How to Keep Bowels Regular

To Dr. W. B. Caldwell, of Monticello, Ill., a practicing physician for 47 years, it seemed cruel that so many constipated men, women, children, and particularly old folks, had to be kept constantly "stirred up" and half sick by taking cathartic pills, tablets, salts, calomel and nasty oils.

While he knew that constipation was the cause of nearly all headaches, biliousness, indigestion and stomach misery, he did not believe that a sickening "purge" or "physic" was necessary.

In Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin he discovered a laxative which helps to establish natural bowel "regularity" even for those chronically constipated. Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin not only causes a gentle, easy bowel movement but, best of all, it never gripes, sickens, or upsets the system. Besides, it is absolutely harmless, and so pleasant that even a cross, feverish, bilious, sick child gladly takes it.

Buy a large 60-cent bottle at any store that sells medicine or write "Syrup Pepsin," Monticello, Illinois, for a FREE SAMPLE BOTTLE and just see for yourself.

Poker Not Entirely According to Hoyle

The traveling agent of a liver pill concern in the East struck this town to contract for an advertisement in the Torchlight, remarks the editor of the Snagtown (Ark.) Torchlight. Finding that he was an old newspaper man and that he purposed remaining two or three days to take in the town, we set out to post him on some of the idioms and customs. He thought he knew it all, however, and that's the reason he is in bedroom No. 48 in the hotel with a bullet in his groin.

It seems that he dropped into the White Eagle still and took a hand in a game of poker. The game is rather eccentric in this town Sometimes two pairs beat four of a kind, and sometimes not It is a good deal according to who is playing and how much there is up It seems that our friend got a royal flush and was called by three jacks. He at once jumped to the conclusion that he had won the jackpot, but he was sadly mistaken Tom Fr and Smith was in the game, and it was on occasion when a pair of sixes, if held by Tom, would beat four aces While raking in the pot the liver pill man was stopped by a bullet and even if he gets well he will have a limp in his left leg This town isn't as big as Chicago or New York, nor as wicked as St. Louis or Detroit, but we have our customs and idioms just the same, and the stranger who can't tumble to them must take the consequences.

Financial Deal Made Miser's Passing Easy

'Arnold Bennett' said a New York writer wrote a book about a Riceyman Steps,' and when I started to tell him that there were no steps nowadays, he told an anecdote to contradict me

He told a chap named Scrooge was dying and when the doctor let him know he had only an hour more to live he passed his weak hand over his bristly chin and said in his weak voice

'Send for—a barber.'

When the barber arrived Scrooge said to him

'How much—to shave me?'

'Sixpence, sir,' said the barber.

'And how much to shave a corpse?' asked Scrooge

'Oh, shillin' to shave a corpse, sir,' the barber answered.

'Shave me, then, said Scrooge.

The barber shaved him, and when the job was over Scrooge smiled and nodded and muttered:

'Two and six to the good.'

Then his head fell back and he breathed his last.' Pittsburgh Chronicle Telegraph

Birth of an Idea

Lenore Meller told at a dinner in New York a story about Bernhardt.

'Sarah Bernhardt," she said, "once complained to a friend that she was so hard up she didn't know which way to turn

'Sell your jewels,' her friend suggested

'I have none—I detest jewels,' said Bernhardt, and this was a well known fact Then suddenly she clapped her hands and laughed. 'But there isn't a jeweler in Paris,' she went on, 'who wouldn't jump at the chance of auctioning off his stock as the collection of the divine Sarah'

"A week or two later there was an immense sale of Sarah Bernhardt's jewels at the Salle Drouot, and Sarah was once more on her feet."

Marionettes in History

Puppets belong to the present as to the past There are some 30 puppet directors now owning theaters in this country, without counting certain immigrants who present their folk plays in their own language.

In the future, one can only suppose, with Gordon Craig, that they will live on In his textbook, "The Marionette," he said: "Burattini are magical When a framework of a film machine one day found by curiosity hunters in the ruins of a cellar and marveled over, the Burattini will still be alive and kicking."

Why not? They ushered in the earliest civilization. They may bow out the last.—George S. Brooks, In the Century Magazine.

First Atlantic Cable

In July, 1866, the first permanent Atlantic cable was laid from Valentia bay, Ireland, to Trinity bay, Newfoundland, and in September of the same year a cable that had been lost in 1865 was recovered and its laying completed These lines were known as the Anglo-American cable, and were managed by a company of the same name. Messages are transmitted by submarine cable by means of electric currents in much the same way as messages are transmitted by land telegraph lines, but the sending and receiving instruments of the cable are more delicate and more complicated.

Map Hunting Good Game

Increase in vocabulary and fresh interest in geography are products of the interesting game of map hunting. Problems may be selected from the news of the day or from the map itself, says the Pathfinder Magazine. For instance, what does Peking mean to the Chinese?

Equidistant from Peking are Nanyuan and Pelynan The syllable "pe" or "pei" is familiar in Chinese names. So is "nan," and the mention of "nan" causes one to think of Nanking as Nanyan does to Pelyuan; that is, the "pei" is north and the "nan" is south.

Foolish Beliefs Not Confined to Sailors

In defense of the supposedly superstitious fisherman, Lorenzo Sabine, in 1853, in an article on the American fisherman, wrote:

"It is said that he is credulous and superstitious. Admit that Kidd's money has been dug for in every dark nook of the coast, or talked about in every cuddy for a century and a half, and that horseshoes are nailed upon the masts of fishing vessels to keep off witches, what then? Is he the only one who has been or still is guilty of the same follies?

"In 1825 the duchess de Berri visited a watering place in France and indulged in sea bathing Salt water and fish which were afterward taken from the spot were articles of immense value and sold at enormous prices. Indeed, those persons who could not purchase a whole fish gladly possessed themselves of a few scales or a fin! The water where the 'royal person' had been washed, when bottled and offered for sale, was known as 'Berri vine' Have fishermen committed greater follies than these fashionable people of France?"

Good for Lorenzo! Today horseshoes are so scarce that fishermen no longer nail them to the masts of their schooners to keep off witches, although they do hang used automobile casings over the side to keep off other craft that might rub their planking.

Odd Masks Worn at Festivals for Dead

One of the queer and interesting customs of the Melanesians, dark-skinned inhabitants of the South Sea islands, is the festival in honor of their dead. At their festivals masks of grotesque appearance play an important part, says the Detroit News.

A collection of such masks has been made for the American Museum of Natural History One of them resembles a crested helmet. Masks of this type, it is said, must be carved in secret and presented to the public view only during the funeral ceremonies. The crest of the mask represents an earlier custom of hairdress of the natives when they were in mourning. In the early days they shaved their heads on such occasions, leaving only a single ridge of hair.

One particular type has long, wing-like processes. The face is carved from wood and the fibrous parts of plants are used in working out the other parts of the head. With such masks bark is used as a covering for the neck Masks from the Gazelle peninsula, New Britain, are made from the facial bones of skulls. The flesh is removed and replaced by sticky lumps of earth.

Will It Come to This?

Dickens' Clock

Charles Dickens once wrote to his clockmaker as follows, says the Scientific Monthly

"Since my hall clock was sent to your establishment to be cleaned it has gone (as indeed it always had) perfectly well, but has struck the hours with great reluctance, and, after enduring internal agonies of a most distressing nature, it now has ceased striking altogether. Though a happy release for the clock, this is not convenient for the household If you can send down any confidential person with whom the clock can confer. I think it may have something on its works that it would be glad to make a clean breast of."

Calling the Turn

The pastor looked over his glasses and shook his uncut locks.

"Carry out my original declaration," he said. "I am about to call the names of those persons who are now asleep in the congregation. John Haycock."

There was no response.

"John Haycock!"

The stout man stirred again.

"Be down in a minute," he drowsily murmured "Keep things hot for me."

The pastor's voice rang out:

"You're going down, all right, John Haycock, and things will be kept very hot for you, I'm sure. Let us now sing the ninety-ninth hymn."

Don't Tell It

Two little sisters were talkative to excess. Often they divulged family secrets. Their grandmother, becoming provoked by their seemingly endless chatter, chided them by telling them they should keep everything "under their hats."

In mimicry, natural with children, Katherine, the elder, on an occasion assumed the advisory role of her grandparent by repeating the same words to her sister Anne.

Anne raised her hand to her head and said: "I have no hat on."

ther rule. We know for a positive fact that one of the Klemme boys could have changed the score by several points had the crowd kept absolutely quiet when he was attempting to make free throws. He is an accurate shot when everything is quiet, but cannot do a thing if he is disturbed. Give the boys every chance to make good and help win the game by being silent when a player is about to try for a free one.

Although it is rather hard to do, the good basket ball fan will cheer the opposing team when a good play is made.

The good basket ball fan does not make personal remarks about the players on either team, or the referee. If he has nothing good to say for them he keeps still.

We do not cast any rtflections on any individuals in laying down a few "basket ball laws." The average fan will often step over the line in his enthusiasm to see his team win, but let's try to keep our shirts on and be good sportsmen whenever we root for our team here or accompany them elsewhere. And when we are visitors at another town let's observe the rules of good sports as we expect others to do when they are our visitors. We have been getting along real peacefully at games this year and have been treated right at other towns and we expect to treat our visitors right when they are here. We expect to observe the rules and do so when we are visiting other schools, and we expect our visitors to observe the same rule when they are in Klemme.

Ventura Here Friday Night

The Ventura basket ball team will play the Shamrocks here Friday night of this week. This has all the ear marks of being a fast and close game Klemme and Ventura divided honors last year and the fishermen claim they have a fast quintet this year and will give us our money's worth. They have put up some close games with teams the Shamrocks have defeated and comparing some of the games they will perhaps give the locals a stiff chase for the long end of the score.

Let's get out a big crowd for the game Friday night.

Supt Mounce, of Garner will be the referee Both teams can be assured of a fair and square deal with Mr. Mounce on the floor. He has officiated a number of games here this year and he has met with approval by both the home team and the visiting teams, who speak well of him as a capable referee.

DOINGS AS SCHOOL DURING THE PAST WEEK

Declamatory Trainer Here

Mrs. Elsie Carmichael, of Clarion, came Sunday evening to begin training our contestants for our local declamatory contest here on Thursday night of next week. There will be some special music provided for the occasion to which we invite the public. Admission will be charged to help defray the expenses of the work. The price of admission will be placed at 35 and 25 cents as it was last year. Program will begin at 8:00 o'clock There will be out of town judges to select the winners who will go to our County and State Preliminary Contests.

Parents Can Help Teachers

Reports of last semester's work will go to parents the last of this week.

We invite the counsel of parents or guardians who are not satisfied with the work done or credits received by their children. We may not always be able to do more for the success of the pupils but we wish to if we can be shown where it is posible. We would like to have every child succeed in making grade or year's work. We recognize it as our duty to interest as well as instruct children We try but many times seem unable to arouse the children's interest. Sufficient work and time is not spent on the lessons and when the final day comes a failure is recorded. Perhaps, the lack of iterest is due to inability to keep up with others of the class and to understand what others of the class grasp more easily; the pupil is discouraged and gives up, and the battle is lost. Many pupils do not realize that when the task is hard they should work all the harder and stick with it longer in order to win out. Those pupils who have average ability and with it lots of grit and patience and can hold themselves at their more or less disagreeable tasks while others are at play or reading magazines or story books usually give a splendid account of themselves both in school and in the world after school days are over. Some of the brilliant or more capable individuals never acquire a relish for hard work and go on making C's and an occasional D when they could as well be getting A's and B's. When school days are over they seldom enter any employment that requires any great effort or close application. Blessed with fine minds they are mentally lazy and the highest awards go to others less gifted but used to sterner activities.

Visitors Always Welcome

The latch string to each school room door is out and parents are always welcome. Come alone or together. Our teachers are not afraid of visitors and do not dislike them. Newer methods and newer texubooks may interest parents. Come anu see us at work, work we are trying to do for you.

RHEUMATISM

While in France with the American Army I obtained a noted French prescription for the treatment of Rheumatism and Neuritis. I have given this to thousands with wonderful results. The prescription cost me nothing. I ask nothing for it. I will mail it if you will send me your address. A postal will bring it. Write today.

Furniture Talk

For several years prices have declined and today Good Furniture can be bought for less than half of the 1920 price.

The largest furniture market building in the world is "The Furniture Mrat" located at Chicago. Here the furniture factories from near and far rent space and display their products, and the largest display of the year is during the month of January.

At such places as the "Furniture Mart" the progressive. dealers. gather to study the displays, compare the quality, and consider the prices of the Furniture being offered, then they buy such items as they feel their Customers will need.

Mr. Wellemeyer visits the Market Place each year, and his purchases for this year are beginning to arrive. Our first car load for 1927 is being unloaded this week.

Watch our wndows for New Furniture.

I was amused this year at the Market, a little Jew, a furniture dealer from Texas, walked into the Mattress Department and asked for a car load of All-Coton Mattresses to sell for $4.95 each. My! how they did figure, he and hte salesman—first the cheapest ticking, then the blackest dirtiest cotton, hen undersize and underweight and hen the cotton was to be "blown" into the ick, no run thru the felt machine.

Mattresses are cheaper this year, owing to the break in the price of Raw Cotton, and because Cotton is cheap, Wellemeyer's have had their Mattresses made of especially good felted cotton filling, with extra good ticking and Full 50 pound weight.

We recommend that our Customers burn up the old straw ticks and buy good mattresses this spring for we feel that 1927 mattress prices are the lowest we will see for possibly ten years.

In next week's Times we will continue our Furniture Talk, and tell of our Big February Sale.

DOINGS AT SCHOOL DURING PAST WEEK

KLEMME SHAMROCKS WIN OVER VENTURA IN GOOD GAME

Will Play Swaledale There Friday Of This Week

Our game with Ventura last Friday night was characterized by a much better spirit than the one with Renwick. We heartily endorse the statements by our Editor in regard to sportsmanship and conduct at our athletic games. If unwholesome attitudes are shown by adults, be they school officials, or parents, or others of influence in a community, much of the value of athletics is lost If our games are not entered into with a kindly spirit toward our opponents, if we permit defeat to arouse skepticism and ill feeling, they are missing the mark for which they have been intended.

The Ventura-Klemme game was fast and clean throughout. The half ended with Ventura leading by two points. However, our boys came back stronger than ever and the game ended in our favor 26 to 20

Will Play Swaledale Next

Our Shamrocks go to Swaledale Friday night to avenge the only defeat they have suffered this year If they can take Swaledale's measure on their own floor we shall be quite well satisfied. But should they be beaten worse than at Klemme we shall congratulate our victors and convince them we are possessed of true sportsmanhip. We hope many of our townsmen will find it possible to accompany our team and give the same enthusiastic support to them they have given all season.

Our Chances Good In Tourney

Some of our team, the coach and superintendent, saw the game between Corwith and Britt at Britt last Saturday nigh. It was a real one Two extra periods were needed to determine the winners. Two officials were employed to take care of the game which was finally won by Coriwth by but a two point margin, the score being 21 to 23. We understand Renwick defeated Corwith just the night before. Judging from the results of the game here with Renwick, and the other data just given, our Klemme boys are not inferior to the best teams of the county. The results of the County Tournament will largely depend upon the condition of the teams entered Should some of the best teams be allowed to get stale or out of condition for one cause or another, there may be some surprises at Britt on Feb 25 and 26.

Declamatory Contest Tonight

Our Declamatory Contest on this Thursday night will involve twelve contestants, four in the oratorical, three in the dramatic and five in the humorous class, 5 boys and 7 girls: 4 Seniors, 2 Juniors, 2 Sophomores and 4 Freshmen. Superintendent Williams, and Principal Hazel Thomas, of the Belmond high school, and Mr. Varland formerly in school work but now in a bank, also of Belmond, will be here to judge the contest.

P. T. A. Will Meet Mon. Feb. 7

The P. T. A. has been postponed a week in February and placed on Monday night, Feb. 7. It has been placed on Monday night with the consent of our President and the other two members of the program committee, in order t make way for the activities of the Klemme Fire Company who have arranged plans for the evening of Feb. 1, the regular P. T. A. night.

The Home Economics Girls under the direction of Miss Kidder will serve a lunch to those present at our next program. Those parents and friends of the Association who want to limber up at basket ball or volley ball will be promised the gym after 7 o'clock for a half hour or an hour before the program. This should put them in form for the lunch the girls will have prepared for them.

School Visitors Welcomed

Our welcome extended to parents and friends of the school to visit us at work was accepted by the following last week Mrs. A. D Gimer, Mrs R. A. Jorgenson, Rev. C. Grosshuesch, and Editor Jorgenson. None of them gave us any trouble. Guess they have all been to school before. We hope they may come again with others after the new semester has gotten under way, for in the rush to get reports made out of the previous semester's work we fear the work they saw was not fully up to standard. For the benefit of those who may decide to visit us we suggest that entrance may be made at any time without rapping, that guests may enter any room unheralded or unannounced, and that may take their choice of seats unoccupied, for some chairs will be available hereafter in each room.

Schedule Of Studies On Door

A schedule of studies in each room will be found on each door that our visitors may know before entering just what subjects they may see recited upon at the time of entrance Our Home Economics classes are just off the stage to the north, and our manual training classes are on the basement floor, the southeast room These classes are reciting in the morning; home economics from 9:15 to 11:55, and manual training from 10:30 to 11:55.

A schedule of other high school classes may be seen at the head of the stairs near the asembly room door, giving the subject, the hour of the class, and the instructor's name who teaches the class.

Room No. 1 is not accessable except through room No. 2, or the assembly room. It is the southeast room on the top floor. Rooms Nos. 2 and 3 are both entered from the upper corridor or hall. Each room bears its own number and schedule of classes for the day. We do not anticipate a lot of guests the same day but would be ready with enough chairs if notified several were coming the same day.

New Grade Books Here Now

The books our grade pupils gave their program to secure money for are here, and wide-awake pupils will now have an opportunity to store their minds with some of the worlds greatest stories and worthwhile information.

Boys Back At School Again

Claire West and Albert Keeper enrolled with us again this week. We are very glad to do all we can for these boys who were lured from our halls by wages offered last fall We hope they are back to complete our course.

Take In Goodell Contest

A number of our contestants attended the Goodell Declamatory Contest last Monday night, as did the Superintendent and the coach, Mrs Carmichael It was a very good contest and the winners there will be respected in later contests, in both county and state Goodell is to be congratulated on the work they are doing along this line.

Wil Enter Spelling Contest

The Des Moines Register is again promoting a state spelling contest and offering, as last year, rewards to the winners. The winner in each school will be awarded a certificate or diploma, while the winner of the county contest will be permitted to compete with the victors of other counties of our state and awarded while at Des Moines a medal for their county championship in spelling Our school will be represented and we hope our students will be benefited to the maximum thereby. Parents may help us by encouraging their grade pupils to study thoroughly their word list.

Odd Fellows To Install Next Week

The Klemme Odd Fellows Lodge will hold their installation of officers next Monday night, Jan. 31st.

They had intended to have their installation ceremony on Monday night, Jan. 24th, but on account of the bad roads there were not enough officers present.

The new list of officrs will be published in The Times next week.

FIRE FIGHTERS TO PUT ON BENEFIT

KLEMME FIRE FIGHTERS WILL PUT ON BENEFIT DANCE

Proceeds Will Be Used To Help Buy Needed Equipment

On next Tuesday night the Klemme Fire Company will put on a regular carnival dance and have engaged a five piece orchestra to furnish the music.

The boys are making big preparations and will decorate the hall for the big dance. They promise every body a good time.

The proceeds will be used for the purpose of buying needed equipment for the company.

The boys are real reasonable in their charge for the dance, the tickets being only 75 cents and spectators 15 cents. The Camp Fire Girls wil make a canvass and will sell tickets to everybody they meet. This is a community cause and will be a benefit to every citizen of the Town. Whether you dance or not you should buy a ticket—it's the cheapest insurance against fire loss you can buy. Don't turn down the Girls when they ask you to buy a ticket. Some day you may need help when your home is on fire and that 75 cents then will be the best investment you ever made. Remember, the Klemme Fire Company is made up of volunteers—they do not receive a penny for their services. If they are willing to help you when they are called, then surely every person in Klemme should subscribe to a fund to buy needed equipment to protect your own and others property.

STOCK SHIPMENTS CONTINUE STRONG

EIGHT CARS STOCK SHIPPED SATURDAY NIGHT

Linden Ranch Ships In Five Cars Of Cattle From West

Stock shipments from the Klemme yards are holding their own with nearby shipping points and well above most of them.

Saturday night eight car loads of stock left the Klemme yards, consisting of six car loads of hogs and two car loads of catlte.

The Klemme Shipping Association lead the list with four car loads of hogs this week. C. A. Larsen shipped two car loads of hogs and one car load of cattle. Dave Schwichtemberg shipped a car load of cattle

Last Thursday night C. A. Larsen shipped a load of hogs.

Linden Ranch Ships In Stock

Saturday the Linden Ranch received two car loads of feeding cattle and Sunday three more car loads arrived at the Klemme yards. The cattle were shipped in from Wyoming and Colorado. The Ranch will put the finishing touches on them at their ranch east of Klemme and then later they will be shipped into Chicago.

Here's Good Way To Clear Roads

Leave it to the farmers to solve a problem. Confronted with a way to open the roads in badly drifted places Klemme farmers have found a novel way to plow out the deep drifts. All that is necessary is to securely tie a walking plow behind a bob sled and start the team out on a good fast trot through the drift —the plow will do the rest. It is necessary to get up a little speed as this shoots the snow out from the plow to the side of the road. After one track is made go back down the line and clear out the other side.

JAY GRIGGS PROTECTING FISH IN EAST LAKE

Jay Says Fishing Will Be Good Next Spring At East Lake

Jay Griggs, farmer living southeast of Klemme, is doing a lot to conserve the fish supply at East Twin Lake, west of Goodell.

Last year it was only because of the work of Mr. Griggs and others interested that the lake was kept open by cutting air holes that the fish wintered through. By cutting large holes in the ice the fish were enabled to get a supply of air which kept them alive.

Largely through the efforts of Mr. Griggs a pumping outfit was secured from the state fish and game department for use in East Lake this winter. The outfit was installed and since the lake has frozen over solid Mr. Griggs has been putting in his time about three days a week pumping air to the fish in the lake to keep them alive.

Jay says there are some mighty fine fish in the lake and he quite frequently sees them when they swim up to the big air hole he has cut in the ice. Jay believes fishing will be good there next spring.

While he is staying on the job he resides in the cottage on the north shore of the lake.

A SOIL MANAGEMETT SYSTEM FOR HANCOCK COUNTY

Hancock county was blessed with fertile soils when the farmers first came to take up the land. After 35 or 40 years of farming the soils are beginning to show the effects of long continued cropping. Many of them are not as productive as they used to be. Farmers are beginning to realize that, unless they return some of the fertility to the land that is taken from it by growing corn and oats, the productivity will be reduced more and more each year as time goes on.

According to J. L. Boatman, Soils Specialist from the Extension Department, a soil management system must be adopted for Hancock county that includes crop rotation, manuring and green manuring, liming and the application of phosphate fertilizers when needed, if the fertility is to be maintained and built up.

A rotation must include a legume crop if it is to be a soil building one. The legume crop takes nitrogen from the air and stores it in the clover plant. If the legume is plowed under, pastured or fed to live stock the soil may be built up in nitrogen and organic matter.

Eighty per cent of the soils of Hancock county are getting low in humus (organic matter) It has been said that humus is the life of the soil. Organic matter in the soil kept is mellow, increases the moisture holding capacity, helps prevent blowing and stimulates bacterial action. All plant foods are made available by bacterial action. Since organic matter is food for bacteria, it is important that the supply of it be kept up if available plant food is produced for plant growth.

A soil must be kept free from acidity if clovers are to be grown successfully. This is especially true of alfalfa and sweet clover. Application of ground limestone corrects soil acidity. The practice of applying it about one year before the legume crop is seeded has proven to give the best results.

The last but not the least important is the application of phosphate fertilizers when needed. Fertilizers do not take the place of crop rotation, manuring or liming, but supplements them. A fertilizer is not a cure all for depleted soil fertility but is just one of the factors that must be taken care of. Acid phosphate should be applied at the rate of 150 to 200 pounds per acre when spread, broadcast and worked into the seed bed thoroughly.

Soils that are fertile are those that are kept high in organic matter, are kept free from acidity and are kept up in their supply of available phosphorus.

It seems as though every week end up here in Northern Iowa turns quite cold. Friday the thermometer hovered below zero all day. Then on Saturday it became slightly warmer and Sunday it was again quite nice weather. These little weather talks are for the special benefit of our readers in the sunny climates.

STUDY OF SOIL REVEALS REMEDY

FARM BUREAU HOLDS SERIES OF SOIL MEETINGS

Nine Meetings Were Held In Hancock County Last Week

A series of soils meetings were put on by the Farm Bureau last week. Nine meetings in all were held and the attendance was good. considering the roads and weather Mr. J. L. Boatman, Soils Specialist of the Extension Service spoke at these meetings. He took up the subject of maintaing soil fertility and brought out the fact that we must establish a definite rotation including legumes as one of the crops, as the fertility of our soils has reached the place where they are not producing the crops they formerly did. He stated that sweet clover was one of the best soil builders we have. He contended that many of our soils were getting deficient in organic matter which is the cause of blowing, washing, etc. Plowing under of green manure crops will help correct this trouble. Our soils are lacking in phosphorus and as there is no way to replenish this except by purchasing the commercial acid phosphate, he recommend that the use of this commercial material would be profitable. The use of potash fertilizer on peat and kali soils has proven beneficial in many cases. Lime should be used wherever the soils show acid test

This was the first series of meetings on the Farm Bureau Corn project. The next series of meeting which will be on Seed Corn and Testing will be held Feb. 28, March 1, 2, 3, and 4.

FARM ACCOUNTING

The Farm Bureau announces that Mr. J. C. Galloway of the Extension Service will be in the county during the week of Jan. 31 to give assistance in closing and summarizing the Farm Record books that have been kept during the past year and also to give assistance in opening new books for this year. Five groups in the county consisting of 76 have been keeping these records the past year under the supervision of Mr. Galloway. Good accurate farm records are needed and are very valuable to the farmers completing them.

Meetings will be held as follows:
Jan. 31, Britt.
Feb. 1, Kanawha.
Feb. 2, Klemme.
Feb. 3, Goodell.
Feb. 4, Garner.

Uncle Sam's War on the "Varmints"

WILLIAMS AND THE CUSTER WOLF

COYOTE, THE CHICKEN THIEF

OLD BEN LILY "KILLER of LIONS"

BRUIN STEPS IN A TRAP

THE CANADA LYNX

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

ALTHOUGH Uncle Sam is nominally at peace with all other nations, there is one war in which he has engaged for the last ten years and which is still going on. That is the war that is being waged ceaselessly and relentlessly by a body of picked men, the federal hunters of the United States biological survey, against the "varmints"—the mountain lions, wolves, bears, coyotes, lynxes and wildcats which prey upon not only the live stock on the western ranges but also upon other wild game which Uncle Sam would save from extinction.

The beginning of this war dates back to 1915 when the inroads of the "varmints" upon the live stock industry became so serious that the government appropriated $125,000 and handed over to the biological survey the job of protecting the herds and flocks in the West by a campaign of extermination against the marauders. State, county and private interests were linked up by the bureau and the resources of all pooled in a common cause.

From that beginning has grown the present organization of nearly 400 of the most expert hunters and trappers in the stock country, hired by chiefs of districts in 17 states to carry on the work of extermination. They receive $100 a month, free ammunition, traps and poison and they are on the job in every season pitting their craft and their skill against the cunning of the wiliest type of wild animal. If you would see the last traces of the vanished frontier, look for it among these federal hunters, for it is in their war on the beasts of prey that you will find the West that is still wild and woolly.

The other day Denver newspapers carried the news that a two-year campaign to kill a mountain lion which had been killing deer in the Carnero creek country near Monte Viste, Colo., ended when the animal was slain by Hunter John W. Cook. Two years may seem a long time to carry on a war against one animal but this is by no means unique in the work of the federal hunters. Just as it is proverbial of the Canadian Mounted police that "they always get their men," so is it becoming proverbial among these hunters that they always get their wolf, or cougar, or bear, and some of the stories of their long chases after these animal "killers" are as thrilling as the yarns of man-hunts in the old days of the West.

Outstanding among these is the story of the Custer wolf and of H. P. Williams, the government hunter who finally ran him to earth. For nine years the Custer wolf eluded every effort to trap him and although often sighted, no marksman was ever able to bring him down. He would eat nothing but his own kill so it was impossible to poison him. At the beginning of his depredations among the live stock on ranches for a hundred miles around Custer, S. D., a reward was raised until a price of $500 had been set upon his head. He and his mate killed wantonly, wastefully, maliciously. Finally his mate was killed, but he did not take another and carried on a lone war for awhile.

Finally the ranchers around Custer appealed to the government for help. The biological survey sent H. P. Williams, one of its best hunters, to take up the chase after the outlaw. Williams arrived at Custer in March, 1920 and at once began pitting his cunning against the wolf's. All summer long they played a game of hide-and-seek, with the wolf having several narrow escapes from the traps which Williams set. The end came October 11, 1920, when the Custer wolf stepped into one of Williams' traps. He tore it from its mooring. A hundred and fifty yards away it caught on a tree, but the frenzied strength of the animal broke the swivel In the meantime Williams was hot on the trail and three miles from the place the trap had been set he came upon the trapped animal. One shot from his rifle and the career of the Custer wolf that had cost the ranchers of South Dakota more than $25,000 in live stock ended.

It is not often that a wolf gets an extended "obituary" in the Congressional Record but such was the case with Old Three Toes, another South Dakota wolf that was an even more remarkable animal outlaw than the Custer wolf. During his career in Harding county, S. D., Old Three Toes is known to have destroyed more than $50,000 worth of live stock and although more than 150 men had been on his trail at one time or another, it was not until Junior Inspector Clyde E. Briggs of the biological survey went after him in 1925 that he was finally run to earth. Here is the story of Old Three Toes as the report of Inspector Knowles, printed in the Congressional Record last year, gives it:

The history of Three Toes is a difficult one to trace His killing career is known to have begun in 1912, thirteen years ago. Legend has him killing at a still earlier time. Mr. Briggs states that the animal is an old one and he is certain that he was fifteen years old and believed him to have been nearly twenty years of age.

Legend has it that this wolf came to Harding county from Montana, but his actual birthplace seems to have been in or close to the horse pastures of Charles Wilson, located in the bluffs on the east side of the Little Missouri river some eight or ten miles northeast of Camp Crook, S. Dak.

With the stockmen of this wolf's early days mostly gone, a reckoning of his depredations of those years, beyond the fact that he was even then notorious, cannot be made. In 1923 the Harding County Sheep and Wool Growers' association and the banks at Buffalo, S. Dak., gathered information of his killings, and at that time they advised me that the known value of his kills equaled fully $50,000. During six weeks of May and June of this year, 1925, he killed sheep to the value of $2,000 belonging to Devitt Bros. It was near the Devitt Bros.' range that he was taken He killed for other men during the spring of 1925, but I have not yet been furnished with the numbers or value of these killings. In total they exceeded Devitt Bros.' losses, so that his known depredations in 1925 alone amount to more than $4,000. His largest kill in numbers of sheep for Devitt Bros. was made in two nights during May, when 64 sheep were destroyed. They were valued at $380 and were a mixed bunch of ewes and lambs.

The story of attempts to capture Three Toes is as interesting as is the history of his depredations. More than 150 men have tried for him besides the men engaged in several big drives that were made by stockmen. No one seems to have had even the remotest chance of taking him aside from the traps that pinched off his toes, and these were, no doubt, set for coyotes and the happenings, no doubt, occurred in the early days of his career. Failing to trap this wolf, hunts were put on for him and individuals attempted to run him down. On a night following one of the hunts or drives made for him he killed one of the best saddle horses of the region. On another occasion when a hunter was attempting to run him down and had a relay of some seven top saddle horses the wolf stopped during the afternoon at a sheep corral and killed 15 sheep. The stories of his adventures with various hunters and groups of stockmen are interesting, and one soon comes to believe that Three Toes was much better versed in human lore than were his hunters versed in wolfology, as Mr Briggs puts it. Mr. Briggs' taking this wolf in 15 days' work was an achievement that men who knew the animal consider the greatest event in the annals of wolf hunting. I was stationed on the Harney National forest during all but the last two weeks of the career of the Custer wolf and know the history, written and unwritten, both of his depredations and his capture, and from this intimate acquaintance of both animals, the Custer wolf was not even in this Harding county wolf's class.

Out in Colorado Big Lefty, a three-legged leader of a wolf pack in the crested butte section of the state, terrorized a wide range of country and caused the stockmen losses running up into the thousands. In 1913 this wolf was caught in a trap but escaped by gnawing off his left front foot just above the ankle and for the next eight years, despite this handicap, he maintained his supremacy over his pack and left a trail of partly eaten carcasses wherever he roamed. Then in 1921 H. A. Roberts, a government hunter, took up the task of putting an end to Big Lefty's nefarious career. He was on the wolf's trail for three weeks but finally the animal stepped into a trap which he had set. And this time Big Lefty did not escape.

Up in Montana last summer Old Cripple Foot, a "wolf queen" who had been a much sought-after animal for ten or twelve years because of her raids on the herds and flocks in the Belt mountains country which had cost the ranchers more than $20,000, finally met her fate at the hands of a government hunter. Barney Brannin was on Old Cripple Foot's trail for eighteen months but all of the tricks of his profession were of no avail against the cunning old cattle killer. Finally he located her den in a rough mountain country. Plugging up the entrance he began to dig down into the den from above. Scarcely had an opening been made when Old Cripple Foot sprang through the new hole and made a dash for liberty, only to tumble dead as Brannin's rifle cracked.

Down in Arizona only a few months ago a wolf known as the King of Arizona Cow Killers was shot down by a government hunter, thereby saving the ranchers in that state thousands of dollars. And so it goes, in every part of the West. The outlaw wolves whose deeds give them more than local renown do not last long after one of the biological survey's hunters gets on their trail. Since they went on the job of systematic extermination of these animals, the number of wolves killed each year has steadily declined, showing that these beasts are fast disappearing. In 1925 only 352 wolves were killed by the federal hunters, as against 424 in 1916 and 523 in 1921. Only one each was taken in 1925 in the states of Colorado, Utah and Wyoming and none at all in Idaho and South Dakota. These figures are based upon the number of scalps brought into district offices of the biological survey by the government hunters. The 31 killed in Arizona, the 31 in New Mexico and the 33 in Montana for the most part came across the international boundaries from Canada and Mexico. The figures for 1926 are not yet available but it is probable that they will show a further decline from those of 1925.

What is true of Lobo is true of his younger brother, the coyote. In 1910 only 11,890 coyotes were accounted for but in 1925 a total of 25,622 of the little wolves met their deaths at the hands of the federal nimrods by gun, trap and poison, mainly the latter. In addition to the work of the federal hunters, others accounted for several thousand more and the grand total for the year was 37,255. So it is beginning to look as though the coyote as well as the big gray wolf will eventually be wiped out.

Mountain lions have never been so plentiful as wolves and coyotes so that cougar record of the biological survey is not so impressive as it is for wolves and coyotes. A total of 1,464 of these animals have been killed since the government hunters went on the job and 1925 was the big year with a record of 228. Of this number, more than half were killed in Arizona, where federal hunters accounted for 127 of the big cats. Formerly cougars were tracked with dogs, driven into a cave or treed and then shot. Trapping was difficult because no scent could be found to smear upon traps to lure them into its jaws. Then the biological survey hit upon a happy idea. Catnip, which is proverbially attractive to cats, might be attractive to these big wild felines. The drug division of the bureau of plant industry cooperated with the survey by developing oil of catnip on a large scale and the use of this scent has been so successful that it now appears as though the cougar is doomed to go the way of the wolf and the coyote.

One of the most famous and successful of the federal hunters of cougars is Old Ben Lily, who ranges over the Apache forest preserve in Arizona and who has the record of having in four years tracked to death 154 lions and 46 bears. Lily was a hunter from his childhood days in Louisiana and has hunted in all parts of the world. It was a big bear, Old Club Foot, a giant silvertip who had been killing stock in the Blue river country of Arizona, which first brought Lily to that state. Hunters down there said that Old Club Foot could not be killed. But Lily proved that they were wrong. After his success in getting this animal he stayed in Arizona and turned his attention to the mountain lions, for which the ranchers of that state are devoutly thankful

Bears are not sought by the federal hunters except when they "go bad" and become killers. Bears of this class seem to be on the increase. From 1915 to 1920 the government hunters were called upon to kill only 317 "bad bears" but in 1925 alone they had to put an end to the cattle and sheep-killing activities of 201 bears. Grizzlies are the worst offenders and one big fellow, killed by a biological survey man in 1920, had killed 32 head of cattle during the spring which preceded his death and some 50 the previous year.

Tips for Large Alfalfa Yields

Big Increase Obtained by University of Illinois Last Year.

Alfalfa grown on the Davenport plots of the college of agriculture, University of Illinois, has been made to produce what is considered a big hay yield through careful attention to six points, according to F. W. Gault, of the agronomy department. Last year, for instance, the hay yield was increased from 1.8 tons an acre up to 4.5 tons an acre of high quality alfalfa hay. This increase is a large one and offers considerable in the way of more economical production, he said.

Eye on Six Points.

Similar results no doubt could be obtained on farms in certain other sections by keeping an eye on the six points, Gault said.

In the first place, the soil must be sweet. The land which grows alfalfa successfully must have naturally a large supply of lime or else enough limestone must be applied to sweeten the soil. The land which produced the 4.5 tons was heavily limed.

In the second place, alfalfa does best on fertile land. Manure, sweet clover plowed under, and phosphate greatly aid the growth of alfalfa. The land which produced the 4.5 tons had manure, lime and phosphate applied to it. Both rock phosphate and bone phosphate were used in comparison. They were about equally successful. Sweet clover residues were also used in comparison with manure.

The land for successful alfalfa growing must be well drained. The land in the above test was thoroughly tiled.

Good Seedbed Essential.

A good seedbed is essential in getting a start at alfalfa growing. The land should be thoroughly worked down in order to destroy weeds and to furnish a fine, smooth seedbed for the germination of the alfalfa seed.

Good seed is essential. Northern-grown seed, such as South Dakota No. 12, has proven to be the best. The northern strains are winter hardy and less susceptible to disease. The rate of seeding may vary from 12 to 15 pounds of seed an acre.

Good thorough inoculation is necessary as the sixth requirement. Proper inoculation may be had by using soil which is known to carry alfalfa or sweet clover inoculation or good reliable commercial cultures may be used.

After an alfalfa stand is secured, considerable caution must be exercised in order to keep it producing to the best advantage. It is not best to cut alfalfa during its first year's growth. When cut for hay, the cuttings should be made when about one-tenth of the alfalfa is in bloom. The last cutting in the fall should not be made too late. There should be time after the last cutting to allow a growth of six to eight inches to develop. This growth allows plant food to be translocated to the roots and lessens the danger of winter killing and insures a vigorous growth the following spring.

Liberal Use of Potato Seed a Good Investment

The importance of using a liberal quantity of seed potatoes is not generally recognized by commercial potato growers. The recent accomplishment of a firm of California potato growers in producing 1,038.3 bushels of potatoes on a measured acre and an average yield of 1,001 on nine acres would not have been possible if only the usual quantity of seed had been planted. These growers consider the liberal use of seed a good investment. In the production of their phenomenal yield seed potatoes were planted at the rate of 40 bushels per acre or more than twice the quantity used by our most progressive potato growers.

Experimental results indicate there is a close correlation between the quantity of seed used and the yield per acre. Planting large-size sets insures a better germination and a larger set of tubers, therefore it is a desirable practice provided the resultant plants have an abundant supply of plant food and moisture. Large-size sets mean more stems and tubers per set, consequently more nourishment is needed to develop these tubers to market size.

United States Department of Agriculture Bulletin 1248-D discusses size of potato sets and also compares the relative value of whole and cut seed. It should prove valuable to potato growers interested in the production of maximum yields. Copies may be obtained, as long as the supply lasts, by writing the department at Washington, D. C.

Love and the Coroner

Hugh Walpole, the novelist, responding to the toast of "The Ladies," said wittily at a dinner in New York:

"Love is the quest of life. Then comes marriage—the conquest. Afterward divorce. Divorce is the inquest."

The wife plays the leading role on many a domestic stage.

Absence of worry is something to be thankful for, like absence of pain.

Drink Water If Kidneys Bother

Take a Tablespoonful of Salts If Back Pains or Bladder is Irritated

Flush your kidneys by drinking a quart of water each day, also take salts occasionally, says a noted authority, who tells us that too much rich food forms acids which almost paralyze the kidneys in their efforts to expel it from the blood. They become sluggish and weaken; then you may suffer with a dull misery in the kidney region, sharp pains in the back or sick headache, dizziness your stomach sours, tongue is coated, and when the weather is bad you have rheumatic twinges. The urine gets cloudy, full of sediment, the channels often get sore and irritated, obliging you to seek relief two or three times during the night.

To help neutralize these irritating acids; to help cleanse the kidneys and flush off the body's urinous waste, get four ounces of Jad Salts from any pharmacy here. Take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days, and your kidneys may then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for years to help flush and stimulate sluggish kidneys; also to neutralize the acids in the system so they no longer irritate, thus often relieving bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive; cannot injure and makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink.

Hatched by Electricity

It takes the combined earnest efforts of a quarter-million hens to supply enough eggs to run a single hatchery at Petaluma, Calif., where electric heat warms a "setting" of 1,800,000 eggs at a time, and electric power turns them all six times a day, hatching an average of 70,000 chicks every 24 hours.

For six months I was at the mercy of indigestion, which soon ran me down and left me weak and debilitated.

"An old soldier friend, to whom I told my troubles, advised me to take Tanlac. I did, and it made a new man of me. Tanlac banished the old half-alive feeling that had kept me in misery. It put me back in splendid shape, eating, sleeping and working as well at 63 as when I was years younger. I cannot speak too highly of the splendid results Tanlac produced in me."

Midget Pony

A pony in Baltimore is so small that it is feared that its hoofs would split if shoes were put on it. The animal, though eighteen months old, weighs only 56 pounds and is only 18 inches high, rivaling in size the extinct five-toed horses whose bones have been found in the West, according to Popular Mechanics Magazine.

ADDS CHARM TO VELVET HAT; GORGEOUS EVENING WRAPS

UNDER the magic touch of scissors, behold the erstwhile "simple little felt" take on the airs of a "dress-up" chapeau. Perhaps the fetching felt models in this picture will best tell the story of what is being accomplished through the cunning of scissor-art as employed by the milliner.

By cutting a felt hood in deep points and bringing it down over a felt foundation of blended coloring the result is a chic and charming hat as shown first in this group.

A featured trimming of the late-winter felt hat is metal brocade. For the attractive chapeau shown in the upper right corner of this "nifty" felt collection a muchly "scissored" crown is posed over a colorful metal brocade brim and side crown with charming effect.

The gleam of silver cloth through the artistic cut-out work which distinguishes the hat with the ripple brim in this picture glorifies felt in a most enchanting way.

Then there is that handsome basket-woven hat posed to the right in the illustration. To accomplish this the felt shape is slashed diagonally around the entire side crown. Strips of felt in contrasting color are then interwoven as you see. Metal ribbon or velvet thus interworked would be equally as effective.

Not even the humble felt hat has escaped the influence of the vogue for beaded embellishment. Very cleverly is a wide grosgrain ribbon "starred" with cut steel nailheads in the model shown last in the group. The idea is unique and charming as well.

It is interesting to note that metallic bandings, almost always woven ribbons, enhance the felt hats which are being accorded a conspicuous place in winter resort millinery. Novelty creasings and handsome colorings add newness to incoming felt models.

A touch of straw braid characterizes latest felt hats for midseason wear. The very narrow straw beading is patterned very interestingly on the felt background. This gives opportunity for charming color effects.

The promise is for many unique combinations of not only straw and felt, but straw and fabric as well.

While the style calendar is "rushing" the coming of spring, society's midseason festivities are keeping on with unabated enthusiasm. Which means that women of fashion are still centering their thoughts on pretty clothes tuned to late winter dance, dinner and theater parties.

In this era of the limousine and the taxi the handsome evening wrap finds a very proper setting. For formal wear, milady is expressing preference for gorgeous velvet coats or capes such as are pictured herewith.

From the atelier of Jean Magnin comes the charming theater coat of ruby velvet shown to the left. It is cut along surplice lines with long deep sleeves emblazoned with silver braid. A long scarf is attached to the right shoulder and ends in a festoon of brilliants.

The cape, as an evening wrap, has become an item of genuine importance. Silver-gray velvet embroidered in shaded tones of gray and blue was selected for the developing of the lovely cape in the picture, which, by the way, is a French creation. Sable in conjunction with beautiful shaded gray willow ostrich trims this lovely costume.

For evening wear in the Southland where "summer spends the winter" come direct from Paris adorable capes of white velvet hand-painted in all-over futurist designs and colorings.

Quilted matelasse, whose floral pattern is traced with gold-thread stitchery, is a newly arrived coating designed for the spring and summer formal wrap, but whose debut is taking place among fashions for Southern resort wear.

It is said also that the taffeta wrap elaborately garnitured in plaitings, pinked edges and shirring will take its place among the near-future fashions.

Fur as a trimming for the spring coats meets with the mode's approval.

Varieties of Growth in Tropical Forests

In the republic of Haiti, with an area of 10,000 square miles, there are over 100 species of trees, ranging from ones as well known as mahogany and lignumvitae down to those which are so rare that they are scarcely known even in Haiti.

The forests of the tropics are never composed of just one species but of a mixture of many kinds, only one or two of which may be of any commercial importance. Usually the growth is very dense with lots of underbrush, twining vines, low bushes, and so forth, which make the forest hard to penetrate.

Tropical trees may be divided into several classes: those whose wood yields dyes, such as logwood and fustic; trees which yield tanning material; trees yielding special products, such as rubber; trees valuable for cabinetwork, such as mahogany, and trees with fairly light and soft wood suitable for general construction.—Mr. Barbour, in Adventure Magazine.

Rabbit Skins in Demand

Thirty million rabbit skins were imported into the United States last year to be made up into coats and other fur articles. The most valuable of all the species is the pelt of the chinchilla rabbit, a breed which is said to have originated in France.

NEAT RETORT THAT LEFT HONORS EVEN

Randolph, "Randy" Quilliam, the beach censor of Ocean City, said on his return from Europe:

"I visited Deauville, Dinard, the Lido and all the European bathing centers. Well, we wouldn't tolerate here in Ocean City the bathing suits the females—I can't call them ladies—wear in those resorts.

"I gave a female a good calling down at the Lido. I knew she could talk English, for I'd overheard her talking to an Englishman. She was pretty, I'll say that for her, and as she lay on the sand sunburning herself in that shocking bathing suit of her's, she made a pretty picture.

"I was feeling lonesome, all alone over there and so I sat down beside her and said, very polite:

"'It's a fine day, sister.'

"She flew into a rage. Took me for a common masher, you see.

"'How dare you speak to me, you cad!' she says. 'Beat it! Get out! I don't know you from Adam.'

"Well, then, as the fellow says, I rose to the occasion. I got up and I looked her over; and then I give a quiet laugh and said:

"'You don t know me from Adam, hey? Well,' I said, 'I'd hardly know you from Eve.'"—Detroit Free Press.

AIR EMPLOYED IN FIRST THERMOMETER

There are not many people who, at some time or another, have not had their temperature taken. The little glass tube with its shining thread of mercury is one of the first instruments used by doctors and nurses in their fight against disease; while in science and industry the thermometer plays an important part.

Many types have been evolved since the first one was invented in 1592 by the Italian scientist Galileo, who is also credited with the invention of the microscope.

As first invented, the thermometer was an air thermometer; there was no liquid in the bulb itself, wine or water serving as an indicator in the tube. M. Rey, a Frenchman, was the first to find out how to fill the thermometer with liquid, and in 1622 Rey wrote to Father Marsenne, a theologian, telling how he had used wine for this purpose.

After Many Years

"You remember that watch I lost five years ago?" said Twitter.

"Yes," said his friend.

"You remember how I looked high and low for it? Well, yesterday I put on a vest I had not worn for years, and what do you think I found in the pocket?"

"Your watch—splendid!"

"No. I found the hole it must have dropped through."

Cajun Justices Not Ruled by Blackstone

The old cajun justices of southwestern Louisiana were important personages. The trials, which were held at the justices' homes, were made all-day affairs, the neighbors driving in from miles around. Evidence was taken interminably, although the verdict was usually based upon the justice's point of view rather than upon any mere point of law.

For example, I know of a planter who brought suit against one of his tenants for the recovery of a calf. His ownership being proved, he was awarded possession of the animal. Next he was ordered to pay the costs of the court.

"But," objected the planter, "I have won my case. The loser should pay."

"True," agreed the justice. "But then, m'sieu, you have the money, whereas the other has not."

However, it was in domestic matters that these "prairie judges" really shone. One of them declared proudly that he could marry and divorce quicker than any other man in the state.

"It is quite simple," said he. "Gobbie wishes to tie up with some girl. That is all right. He gives me $5 and I write down his marriage in my book.

"After a while he don't like it? He wants to be free? That is all right again. For $10 more I tear out the page."—Nevil Henshaw in Adventure Magazine.

Kruger's Idea Was to Make Camp on Ocean

The sight of the trackless ocean and a ship punching the waves, always brings back to this writer the authentic story of Paul Kruger, the president of the Transvaal republic, and his attempt to teach a group of Hottentot children the story of America's discovery, Pierre Van Passen writes, in the Atlanta Constitution. His representation of a ship conjured up a mental picture of a floating covered wagon. Oom Paul's imagination may have been magnificent, but it failed him miserably on the occasion when he was traveling from Capetown to Southampton in the pathetic mission of seeking aid for his country at the chancelleries of Europe. When night descended Oom Paul, who in his youth had slain an African lion with his bare hands, became nervous and agitated. Finally, he could hold out no longer. Briskly he climbed the ladder to the captain's bridge. The officer saluted. "Tell me," said the Boer president, "where do you plan to unhitch tonight. It's getting dark, you know, and I think we had better make camp." When reassured by the skipper he went back to his cabin, read the story of St. Paul's shipwreck, drank a stein of beer and fell asleep.

The Dirty Work

The helplessness of mere man in the presence of ordinary domestic tasks was illustrated in the case of the old miner, who explained that he had once tried to improve his cooking by studying a book of recipes. "It was no use," he said sadly, "because every one of them receipts starts off with 'take a clean dish.'"

He was kin to one of the sons of a Mrs. MacLeod. She was called away from home one day just after dinner. As she was leaving she said to one of the boys:

"One of you must wash the dishes and the other wipe them and put them away, so that everything will be tidy when I get back."

"All right, mother," said Jack, "but Will's got to wipe them. I'm willing to wash, but wiping is such greasy work."

Cosmopolitan South Africa

South Africa is among the most cosmopolitan places in the world, according to L. Kee, writing in the Sydney Bulletin.

"I saw a suitcase in the window of a shop in Durban and decided to buy it," says Kee. "A pleasant Hindu took my order and requisitioned a negro boy to get the article from the window. A girl (race unascertainable because only her eyes were visible; but they had a suspicious blue Chinese tint in their whites) typed the sale note, and an aged white man took my cash. Finally a Zulu, dressed like Beelzebub, 'rickshawed me and the case to the hotel. Each addressed the other in a different lingo."

Land in Extreme North?

The theory that land exists between Alaska and the pole has persisted for hundreds of years, and Dr. R. A. Harris, an American geographer, won considerable notice a few years ago by offering Arctic tide tables as proof of the existence of a large land mass north of Alaska, says Burt M. McConnel, in the Independent. There is also the fact that geese and ducks have been observed flying directly northward from Point Barrow during the early summer, and returning with their young a few months later from the same point of the compass. These are a few of the interesting theories in favor of the existence of land.

THE WORLD'S GREAT EVENTS

ALBERT PAYSON TERHUNE

Richelieu

TYRANT and patriot, conspirator and foe to conspiracies, priest and man of blood, soldier and cardinal, great statesman and greater oppressor, generous patron of literature and personally a literary failure. These, in brief, are the chief characteristics of Armand Jean du Plessis, cardinal and Duke de Richelieu, the man who held all France in the hollow of his hand for a quarter century, and who did more than his share towards changing the destiny and history of the world

Henry IV had quieted the quarrels between Catholics and Huguenots, had built up the nation that had been so severely battered by long civil war, and had paved the way for modern progress. But in the height of his career he had been murdered His infant son, Louis XIII, succeeded him, and, during the lad's minority the queen mother, Marie de Medici, and the latter's Italian friends were in practical control. As a result, the great nobles waxed unduly powerful, arrogant and rebellious of royal command; abuses of many sorts crept into the state; the glorious realm built up by Henry IV threatened to weaken and fall prey to foreign influences.

When Louis XIII grew to manhood there seemed scant chance for betterment. He was weak, dissolute, lazy, stupid, with little thought or care for his country's best interests. It was at this critical moment that Richelieu appeared on the scene.

Richelieu had been educated for the army, but on his elder brother's death, in 1606, had become bishop of Lucon, at the age of twenty-one. But the church, except as its offices furthered his ambitions, held no attractions for the boy bishop. Far away, in Paris, glittered the gay court, and that court became his goal Thither he went as clerical deputy for the states general, in 1614, and there he stayed. He won the interest of the queen mother, and by her influence was made secretary of state for war and foreign affairs. Barely had he begun his political climb when, owing to court politics, he was disgraced and banished from Paris. But in 1620 he returned, and two years later became cardinal. From thence on he was the foremost power in the state.

He set to work at once tearing to pieces France's flimsy political fabric and remodeling it on a new basis. By execution, banishment and imprisonment he cut down the privileges and growing strength of the great nobles. He demolished their mighty fortresses and curtailed their feudal rights. The power thus snatched from them was added to the crown. Next he assailed the Huguenots, besieging the city of Rochelle, their stronghold and rallying place England sent provisions to the besieged, but Richelieu cut off the supply, forcing a surrender.

By thus adding to the might of the crown and cutting away all forces that threatened to rival or weaken it, Richelieu was really strengthening himself. For he, and not the puppet, Louis XIII, was actual ruler of France. Having disposed of foes at home, Richelieu next moved to check the power of the Hapsburgs in Austria and Spain, aiding the German and Swedish Protestants in the Thirty Years' war, with a cheerful disregard to the fact that he had just tried to wreck Protestantism in France. It was also by his contrivance that Portugal, in 1640, separated from Spain.

Meantime, Louis XIII feared and hated Richelieu and would gladly have rid the earth of him had he been able to govern France without the cardinal's aid. But he could not get on without Richelieu, and it was pleasant, while leading an idle, dissipated life, to know another was making his kingdom the greatest in all Europe.

The nobles whose privileges the cardinal had curtailed, the soldiery and gallants whose duels he had forbidden on pain of death, the court and the king, all detested Richelieu. The queen mother, who had launched him in his career, turned against him. He wrecked her political power at one blow. The nobles again and again conspired to overthrow or assassinate him. He cut off the conspirators' heads. The clergy and parliament murmured at his tyranny. He put additional checks on them. Two noblemen, Cinq Mars and De Thou, plotted his downfall, and there can be little doubt King Louis was privy to their plot. Richelieu had the two executed, and the king dared not defend them.

With iron hand, relentlessly, arrogantly, yet ever wisely, this strange man swayed the destinies of France, making her powerful at home and terrible abroad, crushing out feudalism, building up a centralized royal power, conducting an incredibly brilliant foreign policy. He was an ardent patron of arts and culture and was author of some of the most poorly written poems and dramas of his day. Yet of these wretched literary efforts he is said to have been prouder than of his wondrous statecraft.

In December, 1642, he died, having placed France on a pinnacle of greatness that was the envy of the world His puppet and dupe, Louis XIII, deprived of the man who had so long been his master and who had made his reign famous, died a few months later, leaving a son—Louis XIV—whose future greatness was largely due to the achievements of that relentless genius. Cardinal Richelieu, the man who was greater than the king.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Smith of Illinois Is Barred From the Senate—More Money for Army.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

FRANK L. SMITH, senator-elect and senator-designate from Illinois, is not to be permitted to take a seat in the senate, at least until the committee on privileges and elections has passed on his qualifications. By a vote of 48 to 33 the senate on Thursday withheld the oath of office from him. Twenty-nine Republicans and four Democrats voted in favor of seating Smith, and 15 Republicans and 32 Democrats against him. Mr. Smith appeared in the senate chamber Wednesday and submitted his credentials in the form of an appointment by Governor Small. Senator Deneen of Illinois at once moved that Smith be sworn in pending reference of the charges against him to the privileges and elections committee. Senator Reed of Missouri moved that the oath be withheld temporarily, contending that Smith's disqualification already had been established by the investigation of the Illinois primary slush fund scandal conducted by the special committee of which Reed is chairman.

General debate on the matter was thus opened, and for hours the senators discussed the problem, some holding that the senate had no power over Smith until he became a member, and others demanding that he be refused the oath of office. Constitutional points were argued and precedents brought forward; and while naturally no one defended Smith's acceptance of campaign funds from Sam Insull, public utilities magnate, the number of those who defended his right to be sworn in was rather surprising. Next day the debate was resumed and a vote taken, with the result noted above. The committee's inquiry may not be completed for several weeks, possibly not before March 4, so there is little chance for Smith to get in this session. The vote seemed to make it certain he will be barred also by the new senate.

PRESIDENT COOLIDGE'S economy program for the army was knocked galley-west by the house, which approved of appropriations totaling $286,612,674 for the strictly military activities of the War department. This makes available $6,477,000 more than was recommended by the budget bureau. One provision maintains the enlisted personnel strength of the army at 118,750. Other sections increase the army ration allowance from 33.74 cents a day per man to approximately 40 cents a day by adding $2,688,539 to the budget's estimates, provide for the purchase of 1,500 more horses and 725 more mules than the budget would have allowed, provide $942,530 more for National Guard activities, $446,878 more for the organized reserves, and $382,410 more for the operation of citizens' military training camps than the budget recommended.

"Big navy" advocates in the senate appropriations committee carried on the fight for construction of three light cruisers, that was just barely lost in the house, and the committee amended the house navy supply bill by including that feature, increasing the total voted by the lower chamber by $5,267,854.

This was highly pleasing to the strong national defense advocates, but word came promptly from the White House that the President would veto the bill if it went to him carrying the provision for building additional cruisers this year. He still feels that this would be a step toward precipitating another naval armament race and would be a violation of the spirit of the Washington arms treaty.

BY A vote of 50 to 34, six short of the necessary two-thirds, the senate rejected the Lausanne treaty with Turkey, for the ratification of which a long and earnest campaign had been carried on and which had been debated for many hours in executive session. The treaty was sponsored by the administration and supported by Senator Borah, chairman of the foreign relations committee. Senators Swanson and King led the opposition, contending that the pact gives up historic guarantees of justice for Americans in Turkey without securing adequate safeguards in their place, that it in effect acquiesces in the Turkish refusal to recognize American naturalization laws in so far as they affect Turks who return to their native land; that it fails adequately to protect the charitable and philanthropic enterprises of Americans in Turkey, and that it abandons Armenia, notwithstanding pledges that its independence would be secured.

Nearly all other nations have made similar treaties with Turkey, and there have been warnings of retaliatory action against American interests in that country if the treaty were not ratified.

DECLARING that governmental assistance is necessary in dealing with the agricultural problem, the house committee on agriculture reported favorably the Haugen farm relief bill. Speaking for the committee, Chairman Haugen said: "The big problems of American agriculture today are beyond the power of individual farmers or of their relatively small organizations to solve. These problems arise because the prices of farm products are uncertain and unprofitable due (1) to seasonal variations in yield and (2) to competition with the products of European and Asiatic peasant labor and of new lands with low production costs.

"The best judgment is that the remedy will be found (1) in carrying products over from fat years to lean years and equating a price based on supply and demand over a period of years rather than for one year, and (2) in managing the surplus so as to make the tariff on agricultural products effective when necessary to maintain stable markets.

"To do these things requires a reservoir of money and credit after the manner of the capital stock of the federal reserve banks."

REVERSING the finding of an Ohio Federal District court, the Supreme court of the United States in a unanimous opinion affirmed the right of the senate to compel the appearance of witnesses before its committees, to force the production of books and records and to punish for contempt those witnesses who refuse to testify. The opinion was in the case of Mal S. Daugherty, brother of the former attorney general, and he was remanded to the custody of the senate's sergeant at arms. Members of the senate interpreted the finding as ample grounds for the punishment of Samuel Insull, utilities magnate; State's Attorney Robert E. Crowe, and Edward H. Wright, colored member of the Illinois state commerce commission, all of Chicago, for their refusal to testify during the investigation of the recent Illinois senatorial primary.

WHATEVER may be the outcome of his other troubles, President Calles of Mexico has succeeded in one of his aims. He has conquered the hitherto unconquerable Yaqui Indians of Sonora. Their leaders, including Chief Luis Matus and eight governors of pueblos, presented to General Manzo, commander of the federal troops, a document offering to surrender unconditionally, to give up their arms and to support the government in its fight against its enemies. This offer was accepted by President Calles and Minister of War Amaro. The Yaquis, who were short of money, food and ammunition, said they had been deceived by the De la Huerta party and by agents in the United States and induced to rebel. The war against them lasted six months and the government built a great military road 300 miles long that completely surrounded the Indians in the Bacatete mountain region.

Catholic rebels in the state of Jalisco sustained a severe defeat by the federal troops under General Ferera at Atotonilco and lost that town. It was asserted in Mexico City that these rebels were lead by Bishop Orozco y Jiminez of Guadalajara, but this is doubted by the close friends of that prelate. In the state of Zacatecas the rebels were reported as making a strong attack on Nochistan.

This matter of the "Catholic rebellion" caused a lively debate in the United States senate when Heflin of Alabama made an attack on the Knights of Columbus, asserting they were trying to involve the United States in war with Mexico because of that country's treatment of the Catholic church. His charges were strongly assailed by Walsh of Massachusetts, Ransdell of Louisiana and Ashurst of Arizona, all Democrats and all Catholics; by Bruce of Maryland and Reed of Missouri, who also are Democrats.

The senate also took cognizance of the dispute over the Mexican oil and land laws. Senator Robinson of Arkansas offered a resolution declaring it the sense of the senate that the dispute should be settled by arbitration, and Secretary of State Kellogg promptly issued a statement declaring that he welcomed Robinson's suggestion and had already been considering the possibility of applying the principle of arbitration to the question. The Mexican government accepted arbitration "in principle."

Alberto J. Pani, Mexican minister of finance and the close friend of Wall street leaders, resigned his portfolio last week after a long struggle against the more radical men in the Calles government. It was understood he would be appointed ambassador to Paris.

DISPATCHES from Nicaragua say Dr. Juan B. Sacasa, leader of the liberal rebels of Nicaragua, has rejected an offer from President Diaz for a peace conference. Reports from Puerto Cabezas, the liberal headquarters, are that the revolutionists are planning new attacks against President Diaz' forces along the Escondido river. Possibly to head off this movement, Admiral Latimer landed more American marines under the command of Capt. John W. Thomasson, the author of "Fix Bayonets." Sacasa said his troops had defeated the conservatives at San Pedro. In an interview he termed ridiculous and absurd the statements that he has bolshevistic tendencies.

ANTI-FOREIGN sentiment in China is increasing to an alarming extent and the foreigners are being removed from the danger zones as rapidly as possible. The week started with a serious riot in Foochow where foreign women were beaten and dragged through the streets and several ministers were roughly treated. All the foreign schools, churches and hospitals were plundered, and a lot of Chinese orphan girls were abducted. The British government is frankly apprehensive and is hurrying large reinforcements to Shanghai. Assurances have been given that France will cooperate in the defense of the foreign concessions there and elsewhere. The French concession in Shanghai houses more than a thousand Americans. Preparations are being made to withstand a native strike and boycott like that at Hankow. The northern troops under Marshal Sun still control Shanghai and its environs but probably cannot stand against the attack which the Cantonese are planning to make immediately. So far the American naval forces over there have only been called on to rescue endangered Americans.

FEDERAL JUDGE WILKERSON in Chicago approved the sale of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul railway and control of the company passed from federal receivership and into the hands of the National City company of New York and Kuhn, Loeb & Co. The court also approved the reorganization plans but these must have the consent of the Interstate Commerce commission.

Coincident with Judge Wilkerson's decree, announcement was made by Ralph Budd, president of the Great Northern railway, that plans are being concluded for a closer alliance among the Great Northern, the Burlington, and the Northern Pacific roads, so-called Hill lines, dominated by the Morgan financial interests.

ALMOST before it was in print, the prediction that Doctor Curtius would fail in forming a German cabinet was fulfilled. He gave up the attempt and President von Hindenburg again called on Doctor Marx to undertake the job. He accepted, despite the open opposition of the Nationalists under the leadership of Count Westarp, who have renewed their fight against the republic. On Thursday Marx told the president that his efforts had been fruitless.

THE CHRISTIAN OVERCOMING TEMPTATION

LESSON TEXT—Luke 4:1-13; I Cor. 10:12, 13.

GOLDEN TEXT—In that He Himself hath suffered being tempted, He is able to succor them that are tempted.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Obeying God Always.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—How Christ Helps the Tempted.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—How to Overcomo Temptation.

Christ's temptation was Messianic. No one has ever been tempted just like He was—led into the wilderness by the Holy Spirit to be tempted of the devil (Matt. 4:11). While we are not tempted as He was, the devil uses the same methods on us. This temptation was not:

1. A preparation for His work, but rather its first conflict. In His baptism we have the symbolic act of the dedication of Himself to the work of redemption through the cross—the making full a righteousness.

2. It was not to see if Christ would stand fast, nor to see if He would fail under the most crucial test. He could not have failed.

3. It was to show Christ as an object upon which we may rest our faith with unshaken confidence. He came as the second man, the head of the new race. The temptation therefore was a demonstration of the inseparableness of the divine and human natures in the incarnation.

I. The Temptation of Christ (Luke 4:1-13).

1. The place (v. 1).

The wilderness of Judea. The first man, Adam, was tempted in a garden with the most pleasant surroundings. The second man, Jesus Christ, was tempted in a barren wilderness surrounded by wild beasts (Mark 1:13).

2. The method (vv. 2-12).

Christ as the world's Redeemer sustained a three-fold relationship—Son of Man, the Messiah and Son of God, therefore Satan made each one a ground of attack.

(1) As Son of Man (vv. 2-4).

Satan made his first assault upon Him as a man by appealing to the instinct of hunger. Satan urged Him to use His divine power and convert a stone into bread. Hunger is natural and sinless. Real human life experiences hunger. The temptation was in satisfying a right hunger in a wrong way. To have yielded in this case though His hunger was desperate, would have been to renounce the human limitations which He had taken for our sins. In the incarnation He became identified with humanity, so He chose to abide in fellowship with man.

(2) As Messiah (vv. 5-8).

Here the temptation was to grasp His rightful dominions by false means. The devil offered to surrender unto Him the world if He would adopt his methods—worship him. The force of this temptation was in the fact that the kingdoms of the world are Christ's by God's covenant with Him. God's method by which Jesus was to possess the world was the sacrificial death on the cross.

(3) As Son of God (vv. 9-12).

Here Satan tries to induce Christ to presume upon God's care. He quotes a Messianic Psalm to induce Him to so act. To do the spectacular thing in order to get notice is to fall into Satan's temptation. For Jesus to have placed Himself in danger in order to get God's special help in delivering Him would have been to sin.

(4) Christ's defense (vv. 4, 8, 12).

It was the Word of God. He met and repulsed the enemy with "It is written." Our defense is God's Word.

(5) The issue (v. 13).

Satan was vanquished.

II. The Temptation of Believers (I Cor. 10:12, 13).

1. Temptation is to be expected (v. 12).

From the appearance of Satan in the Garden of Eden on down through the ages men and women have been assailed by the tempter. These facts are God's admonitions unto us upon whom the ends of the world are come. Caution is always necessary. Overweaning self-confidence is most perilous to those who rest in the security of their divine election while neglecting a life of holiness.

2. Divine help available (v. 13).

All temptations which come to us are those which are common to the race. No one should surmise that his temptation is peculiar. God is faithful and will not allow the temptation to go beyond the ability of the one tempted. He will provide a way of escape.

Here his stock lender at the best, was th a deep breath he "let her out" to a singing speed of sixty miles an hour.

A cloud had obscured the sun, quite appropriately, he subconsciously felt, and there were flakes of snow in the air. As he sped through the gray atmosphere, the familiar little towns he knew seemed to come forward to meet him, like rapidly projected pictures on a screen. Flushing, Bayside, Little Neck, Manhasset, Roslyn, Glenhead, one by one they floated past. He made the run of twenty-two miles in something under thirty minutes, to the severe disapproval of several policemen, who shouted urgent invitations to him to slow down. One of these was so persistent that Laurie prepared to obey; but just as the heavy hand of the law was about to fall, its representative recognized young Devon, and waved him on with a forgiving grin. This was not the first time Laurie had "burned up" that stretch of roadway.

At the Sea Cliff station he slowed up; then, on a sudden impulse, stopped his car at the platform with sharp precision and entered the tiny waiting-room. From the ticket window a pretty girl looked out on him with the expression of sudden interest feminine eyes usually took on when this young man was directly in their line of vision. With uncovered curly head deferentially bent, he addressed her. Had she happened to notice a dark limousine go by an hour or so before, say around half-past eight or nine o'clock? The girl shook her head. She had not come on duty until nine, and even if such a car had passed she would hardly have observed it, owing to the frequency of the phenomenon and her own exacting responsibilities.

He Made the Run of Twenty-Two Miles in Something Under Thirty Minutes.

Laurie admitted that these responsibilities would claim all the attention of any mind. But was there any one around who might have seen the car, any one, say, who made a specialty of lounging on the platform and watching the pulsations of the town's life in this its throbbing center? No, the girl explained, there were no station loafers around now. The summer was the time for them.

Then perhaps she could tell him if there were any nice old houses for rent near Sea Cliff, nice old houses, say, overlooking the Sound, and a little out of the town? Laurie's newly acquired will power was proving its strength. With every frantic impulse in him crying for action, for knowledge, for relief from the intolerable tension he was under, he presented to the girl the suave appearance of a youth at peace with himself and the hour.

The abrupt transitions of the gentleman's interest seemed to surprise the lady. She looked at him with a suspicion which perished under the expression in his brilliant eyes. What he meant, Laurie soberly explained, was the kind of house that might appeal to a casual tourist who was passing through, and who had dropped into the station and there had suddenly realized the extreme beauty of Sea Cliff. The girl laughed. She was a nice girl, he decided, and he smiled back at her; for now she was becoming helpful.

Yes, there was the Varick place, a mile out and right on the water's edge. And there was the old Kiehl place, also on the Sound. These were close together and both for rent, she had heard. Also, there was a house in the opposite direction, and on the water's edge. She did not know the name of that house, but she had observed a "To Let" sign on it last Sunday, when she was out driving. Those were all the houses she knew of. She gave him explicit instructions for reaching all three, and the interview ended in an atmosphere of mutual regard and regret. Indeed, the lady even left her ticket office to follow the gentleman to the door and watch the departure of his chariot.

Laurie raced in turn to the Varick place and the Kiehl place. Shaw, he suspected, had probably rented some such place, just as he had rented the East side office. But a very cursory inspection of the two old houses convinced him that they were tenantless. No smoke came from their chimneys, no sign of life surrounded them; also, he was sure, they were not sufficiently remote from other houses to suit the mysterious Shaw.

The third house on his list was more promising in appearance, for it stood austerely remote from its neighbors. But on its soggy lawn two soiled children and a dog played in carefree abandon, and from the side of the house came the piercing whistle of an underling cheerily engaged in sawing wood and shouting cautions to the children. Quite plainly, the closed-up, shuttered place was in charge of a caretaker, whose offspring were in temporary possession of its grounds. Laurie inspected other houses, dozens of them. He made his way into strange, new roads. Nowhere was there the slightest clue leading to the house he sought.

It was one o'clock in the afternoon when, with an exclamation of actual anguish, he swung his car around for the return journey to the station. For the first time the hopelessness of his mission came home to him. There must be a few hundred houses on the Sound near Sea Cliff. How was he to find the right one?

Perhaps that girl had thought of some other places, or could direct him to the best local real estate agents. Perhaps he should have gone to them in the first place. He felt dazed, incapable of clear thought.

As the car swerved his eye was caught by something bright lying farther up the road, in the direction from which he had just turned. For an instant he disregarded it. Then, on second thought, he stopped the machine, jumped out, and ran back. There, at the right, by the wayside, lay a tiny jagged strip of silk that seemed to blush as he stared down at it.

Slowly he bent, picked it up, and, spreading it across his palm, regarded it with eyes that unexpectedly were wet. It was a two-inch bit of the Roman scarf, hacked off, evidently, by the same hurried scissors that had severed the end in his pocket. He realized now what that cutting had meant. With her hare-and-hounds' experience in mind, Doris had cut off other strips, perhaps half a dozen or more, and had undoubtedly dropped them as a trail for him to pick up. Possibly he had already unseeingly passed several. But that did not matter. He was on the right track now. The house was on this road, but farther up.

He leaped into the car again and started back. He drove every slowly, forcing the reluctant racer to crawl along, and sweeping every inch of the roadside with a careful scrutiny, but he had gone more than a mile before he found the second scent. This was another bit of the vivid silk, dropped on a country road that turned off the main road at a sharp angle. With a heartfelt exclamation of thanksgiving, he turned into this bypath.

It was narrow, shallow-rutted, and apparently little used. It might stop anywhere, it might lead nowhere. It wound through a field, a meadow, a bit of deep wood, through which he saw the gleam of water. Then, quite suddenly, it again widened into a real road, merging into an avenue of trees that led in turn to the entrance of a big dark-gray house, in a somber setting of cedars.

Laurie stopped his car and thoughtfully nodded to himself. This was the place. He felt that he would have recognized it even without that guiding flame of ribbon. It was so absolutely the kind of place Shaw's melodramatic instincts would lead him to choose.

There was the look about it that clings to houses long untenanted, a look not wholly due to its unkempt grounds and the heavy boards over its windows. It had been without life for a long, long time, but somewhere in it, he knew, life was stirring now. From a side chimney a thin line of smoke curled upward. On the second floor, shutters, newly unbolted, creaked rustily in the January wind. And, yes, there it was; outside of one of the unshuttered windows, as if dropped there by a bird, hung a vivid bit of ribbon.

Rather precipitately Laurie backed his car to a point where he could turn it, and then raced back to the main road. His primitive impulse had been to drive up to the entrance, pound the door until some one responded, and then fiercely demand the privilege of seeing Miss Mayo. But that, he knew, would never do. He must get rid of the car, come back on foot, get into the house in some manner, and from that point meet events as they occurred.

Facing this prospect, he experienced an incredible combination of emotions—relief and panic, recklessness and caution, fear and elation. He had found her. For the time being, he frantically assured his trembling inner self, she was safe. The rest was up to him, and he felt equal to it. He was intensely stimulated; for now, at last, in his ears roared the rushing tides of life.

CHAPTER XII

The House in the Cedars

Less than half a mile back, along the main road, Laurie found a country garage, in which he left his car. It was in charge of a silent but intelligent person, a somewhat unkempt and haggard middle-aged man, who agreed to keep the machine out of sight, to have it ready at any moment of the day or night, and to accept a handsome addition to his regular charge in return for his discretion. He was only mildly interested in his new patron, for he had classified him without effort: One of them college boys, this young fella was, and up to some lark.

Just what form that lark might take was not a problem which stirred Henry Burke's sluggish imagination. Less than twenty hours before his seventh had been born; and his wife was delicate and milk was seventeen cents a quart, and the garage business was not what it had been. To the victim of these obsessing reflections the appearance of a handsome youth who dropped five-dollar bills around as if they were seed potatoes was in the nature of a miracle and an overwhelming relief. His mind centered on the five-dollar bills, and his lively interest in them assured Laurie of Burke's presence in the garage at any hour when more bills might possibly be dropped.

While he was lingeringly lighting a cigarette, Laurie asked a few questions. Who owned the big house back there in the cedar grove, on the bluff, overlooking the sound? Burke didn't know. All he knew, and freely told, was that it had been empty ever since he himself had come to the neighborhood, 'most two years ago.

Laurie strolled out of the garage with a well-assumed air of indifference to the perplexities of life, but his heart was racked by them. As he hesitated near the entrance, uncertain which way to turn, he saw that behind the garage there was a tool shed, and following the side path which led to this, he found in the rear of the shed a workman's bench, evidently little used in these cold January days. Tacitly, it invited the discoverer to solitude and meditation, and Laurie gratefully dropped upon it, glad of the opportunity to escape Burke's eye and uninterruptedly think things out. But the daisied path of calm reflection was not for him then.

Theoretically, of course, his plan would be to wait until night and then, sheltered by the darkness, to approach the house, like a hero of melodrama, and in some way secure entrance. But even as this ready-made campaign presented itself, a dozen objections to it reared up in his mind. The first, of course, was the delay. It was not yet two o'clock in the afternoon, and darkness would not fall until five, even unwisely assuming that it would be safe to approach the place as soon as darkness came. In three hours all sorts of things might happen; and the prospect of marking time during that interval, while his unbridled imagination ran away with him, was one Laurie could not face.

Poisonous Root Made Available for Food

Farinha, a bread made from a poisonous root, the mandioca, is the staff of life of the wild Indians of interior Brazil and also of the Brazilians. The mandioca root, which resembles somewhat the parsnip, is poisonous, but the natives know how to pull its "fangs." Each Indian family in the Amazon basin has a section of tree trunk made slightly concave on one side. This shallow trough is studded with pieces of flint or with large fish teeth set in the pitch-surfaced board. The women shred the mandioca root on this primitive grater, and pack the white fluff resulting in long woven mat tubes. After soaking the tubes in the water the contents are suspended from a tree limb to drain and pressure is applied to them on the principle of the tourniquet. This operation, which washes out the poison, must be repeated several times before the farinha can be used as a coarse flour for bread. For convenience in transportation the farinha is made into cakes a half-inch thick and a foot in diameter. It requires strong teeth to bite a piece out of one of them and eat it, according to white men who have tried it. The food is wholesome and nutritious, but rather tasteless.

World Is "Thin Shell"

"It is wholesome for proud man to look upward on a bright day at some pretty cirrus cloud, to consider that it is composed of ice spicules, that it floats in arctic cold, that it signalizes to us what hothouse creatures we are. If the roof of air were removed we should all be frozen to death in a moment. Just above the roof is deadly cold, and just below the crust of earth is deadly heat. Only within the thin shell that separates these two regions can the human race strut about and congratulate itself on its great powers."—Henshaw Ward, in "The Whirlpools of the Weather," in Harper's Magazine.

Laziness is not patience.

Orchard Information

CONTROL INSECTS WHILE DORMANT

Many of the injurious insect pests are most effectively controlled by spraying during the dormant season. At this time of the year materials can be safely used that would be injurious to the leaves of trees during the growing season, claims G. M. List, deputy state entomologist, Colorado Agricultural college.

"Among the insects in Colorado that are effectively controlled by such applications are a number of scale insects and the fruit tree leaf-roller. The most injurious scale insects are the San Jose, European elm, oyster shell, cottony maple, Putnam, and Cottonwood scales. The oil sprays are proving to be the most effective for most of the dormant spraying work, although the lime and sulphur solutions are still used a great deal, especially on the San Jose scale.

"The oil sprays are usually spoken of as miscible and soluble oils and oil emulsions. These are all very similar. They are oils so treated that they will readily mix with water and be diluted. They can be applied at any time during the period when the leaves are off the trees, providing the temperature is above 60 degrees Fahrenheit. When a great deal of spraying is necessary, it is often advisable to do part of it during the nice weather of fall and early winter, but the majority of this work is done in the spring.

"It is not too early to make a survey of the orchard and shade trees and order the necessary supply of materials. While the oil emulsions can be prepared at home, it is usually advisable for the average person to secure his supply of the ready prepared oil sprays that are on the market."

Control Scale Insects by Using Winter Spray

During the past year the purple scale seems to have received a setback to such an extent that there is now not over 2 per cent of live scale in evidence in any orchard. As a result of this condition, the orchardist may neglect to watch his Satsuma orchard for purple scale, thinking that the setback of last winter was sufficient to carry him through the present year. If there was 1 or 2 per cent of live scale during the month of June, there may be a heavy infestation before the harvest time comes, and considerable injury to the fruit may result during the month of September and early October. Therefore, the orchardist should keep his orchard under close observation, and if purple or long scale is present, he should lose no time in spraying with oil emulsion in order to protect his fruit from injury from this pest and also to keep the trees clean and healthy.

Winter Spray With Lime-Sulphur Is Now Favored

Winter spraying with lime-sulphur is a safeguard against San Jose scale, fungus diseases, and many bark hibernating insects. The cost and trouble of applying this spray is not great and it can be done when other work does not press. San Jose scale is certain death to trees if not checked, and while it spreads slowly from tree to tree, it spreads over a tree very rapidly. In the mite stage it moves about, and birds and strong winds distribute the mites, which soon form fast-spreading colonies, and the rate of increase is marvelous. But for the fact that the adult scale insects are stationary, and the babies move about for only a few days, orchards would become quickly and heavily infested. Scientists tell us that the progeny of one female will exceed 3,000,000 in one summer.

Mercy Cut No Figure in Old-Time Justice

The torturing of criminals on "the wheel" is a very ancient form of punishment In an "improved" form it was revived in Germany in the Fourteenth century The unfortunate victim was laid upon a very large cart wheel, his legs and arms extended and fastened to the spokes, and in that position as the wheel was turned around his limbs were broken by successive blows with an iron bar In France where the wheel was used only to punish criminals of the most atrocious sort the victim was first bound to a frame of wood in the form of a St Andrew's cross - that is, two bars of equal length laid crosswise like an X. Grooves were cut transversely in these bars, above and below the knees and elbows, and the executioner struck the limbs of the victim eight blows so as to break them in these places. Sometimes he finished his work by striking the criminal two or three blows on the chest or stomach which usually put an end to the sufferer's life, and therefore were called blows of mercy The punishment of the wheel was abolished in France at the revolution. In Germany it was occasionally inflicted early in the last century for the crimes of treason and parricide.

Exposure a Factor for Window Plants

Results in window boxes are largely dependent upon the right flowers for the exposure It is not possible to have window boxes at every window planted with those at every other one Now if the exposure is different, colors may harmonize.

For sunny locations use nasturtiums, dwarf sweet alyssum, petunia, pansy, coreopsis, snapdragon and marguerite, for shady places, nonflowering plants--the ferns, palms, English ivy, begonia, trailing evonymus, asparagus sprengeri. Drooping effects may be had from lobelias, sweet alyssum and others. For half shady windows, hanging fuschia with bush fuschia, or bush fuschia with marguerites and vincas or hanging petunia with cobea scandens, or pink fuschia, white marguerites and vincas can be combined. Verbenas may be planted alone as they form a luxuriant mass of bloom and foliage. Pansies and sweet alyssum are a delightful combination

Geraniums and English ivy are formal and go well in a formal house or on a dusty street which would prevent the growth of something more delicate very effective results may be had by trailing ivy upon a heavy wire frame the window.—The Delineator

Savages at Feast

The natives of Abyssinia are very fond of raw meat, but as such a diet is attended by considerable cost it is not so frequently indulged in and the result is that bread is the mainstay of the people

Occasionally a carcass is secured and a feast is indulged in by a number of persons who consume it entirely without cooking or any other preparation The carcass is cut up and each of the participants takes a piece with a bone attached. Squatting on his haunches he holds the piece by the bone and makes a cut with a sharp knife

The partially severed piece is then held in the teeth and finally severed with an upward movement of the knife As one witnesses the operation it would seem that there was danger of severing the nose of the diner.—Chicago Journal.

Love vs. Delirium

People in love are not happy, but they always think they are going to be Being in love is a delirious process of gathering together all imagined happiness, and believing that some other human being is the sum of them. You will be happy when you get it. The conclusion is almost mathematical Millions of young people arrive at it just as we did. When we were married we would be happy ever after.

The number of persons who are not happy, though married, should have suggested to us that there was a flaw somewhere in our reasoning But it didn't —Rose Wilder Lane, in Hearst's International-Cosmopolitan.

Moon's Action at Poles

The naval observatory says that at either pole the moon is above the horizon continuously for about two weeks, and then below the horizon continuously for about two weeks. At the Arctic and Antarctic circles there are some years when for a few days in each month the moon does not set, and a few days in each month when it does not rise; otherwise at these circles it rises and sets daily. In the polar regions, during the winter months, the moon is generally above the horizon when it is full and below the horizon when it is new, and the reverse is the case during the summer months.

Bird Sacred to Indians

The ptarmigan like the Indian, is receptible to civilizing influence. Since the Indians of the Glacier National park reservation took up agriculture, this mountainside bird has come down into the valleys, even to mingle with the barnyard chickens and eat of the Indian's wheat.

The ptarmigan turns pure white like the snowshoe rabbit in the winter time, and the Indian has a sacred regard for the feathered creature in this immaculate transformation.

Fox Fires No Longer Cause Childish Fear

Boys and girls nowadays seldom experience the thrill of seeing a mysterious light glowing dimly in the depths of the forest or gleaming from some half-buried rotten log in a lonely swamp. The cutting away of the forests and the draining of swampy land have cleared from much of the landscape the causes which produce fox fire. In early days, however, the feet of pioneer children often were sent scampering home in the twilight when their owners came unexpectedly upon a light which seemed to have no source, says the Indianapolis News.

Ghosts and goblins and all sorts of evil omens ever have been associated with the appearance of fox fire and will-o'-the-wisps. There long has been a difference of opinion regarding the cause of fox fire, but now it is generally conceded to be due to a living fungus growth which permeates decaying vegetable matter and which possesses the power of emitting waves of light. No sensible heat waves are thrown out, and in this respect fox fire resembles the light emitted by fireflies and glowworms. Many a ghost might have been traced to its lair had the origin of phosphorescence been understood better, especially in the countries where the will-o'-the-wisps are reputed to be of frequent occurrence.

Poisonous Root Made Available for Food

Farinha, a bread made from a poisonous root, the mandioca, is the staff of life of the wild Indians of interior Brazil and also of the Brazilians. The mandioca root, which resembles somewhat the parsnip, is poisonous, but the natives know how to pull its "fangs." Each Indian family in the Amazon basin has a section of tree trunk made slightly concave on one side. This hollow trough is studded with pieces of flint or with large fish teeth set in the pitch surfaced board. The women shred the mandioca root on this primitive grater, and pack the white fluff resulting in long woven mat tubes. After soaking the tubes in the water the contents are suspended from a tree limb to drain and pressure is applied to them on the principle of the tourniquet. This operation, which washes out the poison, must be repeated several times before the farinha can be used as a coarse flour or bread For convenience in transportation the farinha is made into cakes a half-inch thick and a foot in diameter It requires strong teeth to bite a piece out of one of them and eat it, according to white men who have tried it The food is wholesome and nutritious, but rather tasteless.

Riding a Camel

The geographies do right to call the camel the "ship of the desert." He is, indeed, like a ship that pitches, tosses and rolls, all at the same time, in a storm.

A little skeleton "howdah" is put on his back, while his master leads him by a long rope. The unfortunate passenger sits cross-legged on top of the camel's very bony backbone and endeavors to adapt himself to the rolling, pitching movement. It makes many persons seasick.

The camel has a mean disposition, and is always trying to quarrel with the other camels in the party, biting and kicking them, grunting and making a general nuisance of himself.

World Is "Thin Shell"

"It is wholesome for proud man to look upward on a bright day at some pretty cirrus cloud, to consider that it is composed of ice spicules, that it floats in arctic cold, that it signalizes to us what hothouse creatures we are. If the roof of air were removed we should all be frozen to death in a moment Just above the roof is deadly cold, and just below the crust of earth is deadly heat. Only within the thin shell that separates these two regions can the human race strut about and congratulate itself on its great powers."—Henshaw Ward, in "The Whirlpools of the Weather," in Harper's Magazine.

The Mad Book

Why doesn't somebody write a mad book dedicated "to all the poor people who have lost their tempers and don't know where to find them?"

A few suggested chapters:

To have your feet stepped on.

To have a conductor abuse you before a carful of people.

To have a cross voice on the telephone tell you you to "Butt off the line."

To see what you want on the counter and have a clerk tell you: "We don't keep it."

To ask for the Mad Book and have a clerk say, "It's never been published."

The Agile Pianist

In playing Chopin's Etude in E Minor the pianist has to interpret 3,950 musical signs in two and one-half minutes. That means that his eye has to catch correctly and his brain to comprehend clearly more than 1,500 signs a minute, and his fingers have to execute accurately more than 2,000 movements a minute. Since it requires at least a tenth of a second to recognize a letter of print, the musician must have marvelously quick mentality and muscles to perceive and understand his more complicated typographical characters and to translate them into manual motion at such a rate.—Collier's Magazine.

Only Weak Can Find "Refuge" in Suicide

Accounts of suicide in the news are almost always depressing. They lessen one's confidence in the strength of the human spirit. They may arouse pity, it is true, but except in unusual circumstances this is pity based upon a recognition of weakness.

For suicide, speaking generally, is an abject confession of defeat, of complete failure of courage. And it signifies so narrow a vision, so limited an interest, for any man to say that in all the wide world nothing is left for him.

Consider the words Jasper Petulengro, the Norfolk gypsy, spoke to George Borrow:

"Life is sweet, brother."

"Do you think so?"

"Think so! There's night and day, brother, both sweet things; sun, moon and stars, brother, all sweet things; there's likewise the wind on the heath Life is very sweet, brother; who would wish to die?"

"I would wish to die—"

"You talk like a gorgio—which is the same as talking like a fool—were you a gypsy chal you would talk wiser. Wish to die, indeed! A Romany chal would wish to live forever!"

"In sickness, Jasper?"

"There's the sun and stars, brother."

"In blindness, Jasper?"

"There's the wind on the heath, brother; if I could only feel that, I would gladly live forever."—San Francisco Chronicle.

Return to Normalcy After the Big Fight

Little Elspeth and a friend were playing about the house and having seen the fire apparatus go down the street, thought it would be a lot of fun to play fire. So they shouted "Fire! Fire!" until Elspeth's mother came rushing in from the back yard crying, "Where? Where?"

Upon learning that it was all a joke, she sent Elspeth to her room, with the admonition never to play that game again, and went to her own room to take a nap.

The quiet was soon broken by a monotonous thump, thump, thump on the stairs and there was Elspeth, attired in her best coat and gloves, dragging her doll's trunk down to the front door.

"I is going to find a lady that wants a little girl," she said determinedly, but finally was persuaded that no one wants a little girl half as much as her own mother.

Cuddled at last in her mother's arms, Elspeth sighed contentedly and then said:

"Now zat you are my own good muvver an' the big fight is over, s'pose we go an' unpack."

Soup Early Human Food

The art of soup making is one of the oldest forms of cookery of which we have any knowledge whatever. It denoted a distinct step forward of the civilization of the world when man learned that game which he trapped or killed might be prepared by a process of "stone boiling," affording him a broth and a meat in place of the charred product which hitherto he had cooked over the hot coals. The skin of the animal was his soup kettle in which he placed the meat and covered it with water. Then the improvised stock pot was hung in some convenient spot, and stones, heated in the fire, were placed in it, one after the other as they became cool, until finally, after hours of toil, the broth was ready for serving.

Discord Her Specialty

In classic mythology, Eris was the goddess of discord, and the sister of the war god Mars. In the legend of the Trojan war, Eris was the goddess who, indignant that she was the only one of all the gods and goddesses who was not invited to the marriage festivities of Peleus and Thetis, threw into the midst of the guests a golden apple, known since as the "apple of discord," which bore the inscription "For the fairest of the fair." The rivalry of the three deities, Hera, Athene and Aphrodite, for the gift was left to the judgment of Paris, the son of the king of Troy, who, being appointed umpire by Zeus, bestowed it on Aphrodite.—Kansas City Star.

Discovery an Accident

Charles Goodyear, who discovered the process of vulcanizing rubber, expended all his means in experiments with various mixtures and processes which should remedy the fatal defects of India rubber in its natural state, since it is brittle in cold weather and sticky in warm weather. The great secret of vulcanizing, a process in which the two substances, submitted to a high temperature, are converted into elastic, enduring, heat and cold-defying material, now in use, was an accidental discovery made by Goodyear while standing by a stove and idly subjecting a mixture of rubber and sulphur to its heat.

Belief in Toad Stone

W. J. Rolfe in his notes on "As You Like It," says: "Better naturalists than Shakespeare believed in the toad stone, the 'precious jewel' of the text. Fenton, in his 'Secrete Wonders of Nature' (1569), says that 'there is founde in the heades of old and great toades, a stone which they call borax or stelon; it is most commonly founde in the head of a hee toad, of power to repluse poysons and that it is a most soveraigne medicine for that stone.'" Allusions to it are frequent in the literature of that day.

IOWA RANKS HIGH IN FARM EFFICIENCY

Some Interesting Figures Given By The Weather Department

Des Moines, Jan. 27.—"Critics of Iowa Agriculture are saying that part of the farmer's plight is due to inefficiency, but the records of the Weather and Crop Bureau of the Iowa Department of Agriculture show that the tonnage of crops has more than doubled in the last 35 years, while the census shows that the farm population has steadily decreased," tated Director C. D. Reed.

"Certainly the efficiency per man gives no cause for criticism. The output of Iowa Agricultural production could, no doubt, be doubled again in a short time if there were sufficient incentive in the way of a renumerative price, but any increase in production by farmers as a class reduces the total dollars received," said Mr. Reed. "The only way in which efficiency can count is in finding ways to produce things easier and better but without increasing the total amount produced. This means to farm less acres, breed less sows and milk less cows, but all of such a high order as to cut the cost of production.

"One additional cow bred per farm seems like a very moderate increase but it increases the hogs marketed from Iowa by 1,000,000. To save one more pig per litter increases the number of hogs marketed by 2,000,000. By all means, the pig should be saved for this reduces the cost of production, but the number of sows bred should be decreased accordingly. To breed three more sows per farm would wreck the hog business in a year. The average Iowa farm in 1925 marketed 14 less hogs than in 1924 but received $111.00 more for them. Why not raise the 14 less hogs and thereby reduce the cost of production, as well as increase the price?

"Up to a certain point which each farmer can determine for himself and for his particular farm and surroundings more bushels or tons per acre, more pigs per litter, more pounds of butterfat per cow, etc., reduce production costs, but this effort is all wasted if thereby greater mass production results. The only place where greater efficiency can possibly benefit the farmer, is in decreased cost of production."

We hope that the roads may be open by that time so that the country folks can be with us at these evening services. Let all plan to come in on these special services as they are for the benefit of all. Watch for special announcements.

INFANT DAUGHTER OF MR. AND MRS. HENRY LUDEKE DIES

Funeral Services Held At The Home This Afternoon By Rev. Gauger

After a brief sojourn of only twenty-seven days Baby Ruth Agnes, the little daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Ludeke, died on Wednesday noon, February 2, 1927. She was born on January 6, 1927. From the very beginning she was very frail but with the most tender care and nursing that she received it was hoped that she might be spared and grow to noble womanhood.

Because of the frailty and the care she required she had imbedded herself deeply in the affections of her loved ones who feel her loss most keenly This community assures these bereaved parents their sincere sympathy.

Funeral service was held in the home on Thursday afternoon, conducted by Rev. Gauger and burial took place in the Klemme cemetery.

Weep not! Your precious blossom, broken in life's early spring,
Was caught in his descending, on his guardian angel's wing.
Her sweetness ne'er will mingle with the cold forbidding sod;
She blooms in fragrant beauty on the bosom of her God.

Weep not for the removing of the love light from your eyes, Another star begins to glow o'er the hills of paradise.
The home is dark, the heart is sad,
with gloomy, vague unrest,
But another home is lighted in the mansions of the blest.

Weep not for the safe keeping of a treasure held in trust
Where the mildew cannot tarnish, nor earth's bitter acids rust.
'Tis hard to give your dearest. Unbidden tears will start;
But where your cherished treasure is there also put your heart.

(Rev. A. W. Gauger.)

FIREMENS' DANCE PROVED BIG SUCCESS FINANCIALLY

Big Crowd Attended Benefit Dance; All Had Fine Time

The fire laddies are more than pleased with the fine turn out to their benefit dance which was given at the Idle Hour Theatre Tuesday evening.

They want to thank everyone for their liberal support. Many bought more than one ticket, others donated without accepting a ticket and other non-dancers bought tickets to help the good cause along.

The fire company realized a net sum of approximately $36 00, after deducting expenses which amounted to approximately $39.00 for hall rent, orchestra, advertising, confetti, carnival accessories, and commission paid Camp Fire Girls They sold $32.00 worth of tickets at the door, the Camp Fire Girls sold $27 worth and individual members of the company sold $15 75 worth of tickets, making a total of $74 75.

The boys will buy a siren for the fire truck with the money they have earned With such an attachment on the truck it will add further to the alarm and no-one should be able to sleep through the noise of two sirens screeching out the news that a fire is raging nearby.

The boys are already talking of making their dance an annual event. We beleive this would be a good method of adding new equipment to the company each year, and everybody could share in the expense

STOCK SHIPMENTS HIT 15 CAR MARK

STOCK SHIPMENTS CONTINUE HEAVY FROM HERE

Klemme Shipping Association Leads With Eight Car Loads

Klemme is gaining fame as a big live stock shipping point and live stock shipments out of the local yards continue to hammer away to break all established records in big shipments Farmers in outlying districts are learning of the advantages of selling their stock to Klemme buyers who pay better prices than buyers in near-by towns. This accounts for the continued large number of cars shipped out of here every week.

The past week fifteen car loads of cattle and hogs were shipped out of the Klemme yards Of this number the Klemme Shipping Association had 8 car loads, consisting of 5 car loads of cattle and 3 car loads of hogs C A Larsen shipped out 5 car loads of hogs and 1 car load of cattle Tim Waddingham was also a shipper the past week with 1 car load of cattle.

Herman Ax shipped in a car load of cattle which he purchased at the Omaha yards He intends to fatten them on his farm north of town.

WHEN INDIANS PROWLED IN THE WEST

A Wonderful Story Put Into Moving Pictures Coming Here

Charlie Murry of Keystone Kop fame will be back with us next week Wednesday in the leading comedy role of Corinne Griffith's latest First National offering, "Classified." Advance reports of the picture contend that Charlie is funnier than ever as Corinne's dad.

The picture you have all been waiting for, Colleen Moore, in "Cinderella," will be here Saturday, Feb. 12th. Plan for this now.

GROUND HOG SEES HIS SHADOW IN NORTH IOWA

If Old Saying Is True We Can Look For Six Weeks Of Cold Weather

Wednesday, February 2nd is a red letter day for many who still cling to the belief that on that day the ground hog ventures forth and if the sun is shining it so scares him that he scurries back to his den to sleep for six more weeks, a sure sign of continued cold weather

February 2nd this year was one of the sunniest and warmest days of the winter If any ground hogs were scampering around they surely would be fightened back to their dens when they saw their shadow

Those who believe in the sign should prepare for the worst, order another load of cold and buy another suit of woolen underwear

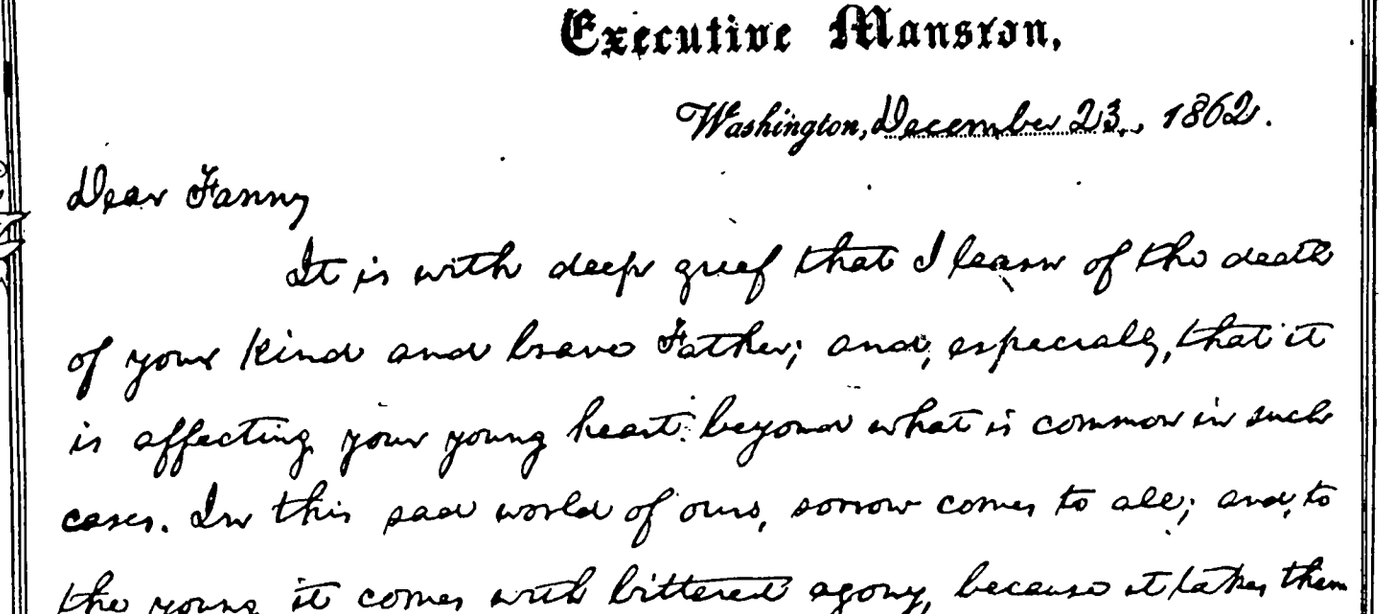
Those who take the situation more lightly are thinking of stepping into the old BVD's and telling the coal man to go chase himself.

SHIPPING ASSOCIATIONS HOLD ANNUAL MEETINGS

There Are Now Five Shipping Associations n Hancock County

The annual meetings of five shipping associations in the county were held during the past week. The Farm Bureau co-operated with these organizations by furnishing Mr. Sam Thompson of the Extension Service to speak. Meetings were held at Garner, Klemme, Crystal Lake, Goodell and Britt. At each meeitng Mr. Thompson stressed the importance of good business management and urged an extra effort on the part of the membership to build up a strong association. A big increase in business was shown in all the associations except Britt. The meetings were well attended and the interest in co-operative shipping of live stock was evident.

A New Lincoln Letter



Executive Mansion,

Washington, December 23, 1862.

Dear Fanny

It is with deep grief that I learn of the death of your kind and brave father, and, especially, that it is affecting your young heart beyond what is common in such cases. In this sad world of ours, sorrow comes to all; and to the young, it comes with bitterest agony, because it takes them unawares. The older have learned to ever expect it. I am anxious to afford some alleviation of your present distress. Perfect relief is not possible, except with time. You can not now realize that you will ever feel better. Is not this so? And yet it is a mistake. You are sure to be happy again. To know this, which is certainly true, will make you some less miserable now. I have had experience enough to know what I say; and you need only to believe it, to feel better at once. The memory of your dear Father, instead of an agony, will yet be a sad sweet feeling in your heart, of a purer, and holier sort than you have known before.

Please present my kind regards to your afflicted Mother.

Your sincere friend. A. Lincoln.

Miss. Fanny McCullough.

By ELMO S. WATSON

YEAR by year the fame of Abraham Lincoln grows and each succeeding year sees new accessions to the nation's priceless store of Lincolniana. Amazing as is the mass of this material accumulated in the comparatively brief time that has elapsed since Secretary Stanton exclaimed, "Now he belongs to the ages!" it is apparent that, if we are to judge by the discoveries of the last few years, there is still much to be learned before the last word on the career of this one of the world's truly great can be written.

Last year was, if anything, richer in the matter of new light being thrown upon the life of Lincoln than many which have preceded it, and scarcely a month passed that did not bring some event which served to recall his name and fame. In April congress authorized the purchase of the famous Oldroyd collection of Lincoln mementoes which for a number of years have been preserved by Osborn H. Oldroyd in the house on Tenth street in Washington, where Lincoln was carried from Ford's theater on the fatal night of April 14, 1865, and where he died a short time later. The tragedy of that evening was recalled again last November when the barn in which John Wilkes Booth stabled the horse on which he made his escape was put on the auction block by the War department and sold to a real estate operator.

In May, 1926, Robert T. Lincoln, the ninety-year-old son of the Civil war President, presented to the congressional library a trunk, the contents of which, it is believed, is a veritable gold mine of Lincoln material. An air of mystery has hung about the trunk for years and the secret of what it contains has been steadfastly kept by Robert Lincoln, despite all the efforts by biographers of Lincoln to make use of the material it is supposed to contain. The gift to the congressional library was made with the provision that under no circumstances was the trunk to be opened until 25 years after Robert Lincoln's death. That means that Lincoln scholars will have to wait until 1951 before they can delve into the treasures of information which they believe this receptacle holds. The death of Robert T. Lincoln on July 26, 1926, was another outstanding event of Lincoln interest last year, since his passing meant that the male line of the Lincoln family was ended.

Others were the publication from time to time during the year of the researches by Rev William E. Barton which dispelled many of the myths about Lincoln, including the circumstances surrounding the Bixby letter, Lincoln's part in the reprieve of William Scott, the "sleeping sentinel," some interesting facts concerning the Gettysburg address and the controversy over whether Lincoln ever said, "You can fool some of the people all the time; all the people some of the time; but you can't fool all the people all the time." No less important was the publication of Carl Sandburg's two-volume study of "Abraham Lincoln. The Prairie Years," in which appeared some 65 letters and papers in Lincoln's handwriting, which had never before been published.

Recently there has come to light in Bloomington, Ill., a city which is closely associated with the early career of the Great Emancipator, another Lincoln letter, reproduced above, which is here made public for the first time. It was written to Miss Fanny McCullough of Bloomington soon after the death of her father, Lieut. Col. William McCullough of the Fourth Illinois cavalry, who was killed near Coffeyville, Miss., December 5, 1862.

Colonel McCullough, a pioneer of the Prairie state, was born in Kentucky in 1812 and came to McLean county in 1826. At the outbreak of the Blackhawk war in 1832 three companies of mounted volunteers were raised in McLean county for service against the Indians and McCullough was a member of the First company. The First got its fill of fighting savages on May 14, 1832, when the Indian leader defeated Major Stillman's command of 275 men in a brief engagement popularly and ironically known as "Stillman's Run."

That was an affair which reflected but little credit upon the white men, since it was precipitated when Stillman's command violated one of the cardinal principles of warfare by seizing three young warriors whom Blackhawk had sent to Stillman's camp under a flag of truce. Enraged by this, the Indian leader immediately attacked. Stillman's force began to retreat. Then the retreat became a rout. Of it one historian has written: "The gallant 275 incontinently turned tail and fled. The precipitation of the rout was only equalled by its completeness. Madly they dashed through their own camp, the contents of which were abandoned Neither swamps nor swollen streams served to check the impetuosity of their retreat. Singly and in squads the fugitives arrived at Dixon, 30 miles away, from whence many of them continued their mad gallop 40 or 50 miles away to their homes. It was another of the innumerable instances of the panic of brave but undisciplined men—a thing that is liable to happen to the bravest men under untried circumstances."

Lieut.—Col. William McCullough

Of the few who performed at all creditably in this affair, so far as there is any record, McCullough was one. The day before the fight he had lost his gun, but during the engagement, it is said, he captured another from an Indian. A friend who knew him during the Civil war and who usually referred to him as "a man of reckless bravery," in commenting upon this fact, said, "Armed or unarmed, I cannot conceive of William McCullough as afraid of anyone, savage or civilized." This bears out the statement that when Captain Covell of the First, amid all the confusion of the retreat, tried to get his men to make a stand, McCullough was one of the ten soldiers who rallied around their leader in his vain attempt to stem the rout.

After the close of the brief Indian war, McCullough returned to McLean county. In the fall of 1840 he was elected sheriff, an office which he held for three successive terms. He was next elected circuit clerk and held that office four successive terms. It was during this time that he probably met Lincoln, as there is no record of their having met during the Blackhawk war.

At the outbreak of the Civil war, McCullough was exempt from service because of the loss of his right arm (which had been torn off in a threshing machine in 1840), defective sight in one eye and his age. But he was determined to serve and in August, 1861, he obtained permission from President Lincoln to be mustered into the service as lieutenant colonel of the Fourth Illinois cavalry. "William McCullough was the ideal cavalryman," writes one historian. "He was a superb horseman of martial appearance, with a full, resonant voice, white hair and beard, a natural leader of men, a courage that feared no one; watchful, careful of his men, he soon became one of General Grant's most trusted officers."

He took part in the capture of Fort Henry and Fort Donelson, and went through the battles of Shiloh and Corinth. After entering Corinth the Fourth cavalry, which was a part of the advance guard of General Sherman's army, was sent toward the west, reaching Memphis in August, 1862. In September the regiment moved to Trenton where it remained on scouting duty until the movement down the line of the Mobile and Ohio and the Mississippi Central began when it became a part of a brigade of cavalry commanded by Colonel Lee of the Seventh Kansas. This brigade struck the forces of the Confederate generals Van Dorn and Price near Holly Springs and followed them to Coffeyville. There the Confederates made a stand and the cavalry brigade began to retreat.

The Fourth was covering the retreat. On the evening of December 5, 1862, the Confederates appeared on both sides of the rear guard and demanded its surrender. McCullough's reply was an emphatic refusal to which the men in gray responded with a volley of musketry. The colonel was killed instantly, but his command escaped.

It was this incident which inspired the Lincoln letter to Colonel McCullough's daughter, Fanny. The letter follows:

EXECUTIVE MANSION

Washington, December 23, 1862

Dear Fanny:

It is with deep grief that I learn of the death of your kind and brave father, and, especially, that it is affecting your young heart beyond what is common in such cases. In this sad world of ours, sorrow comes to all; and to the young, it comes with bitterest agony, because it takes them unawares. The older have learned to ever expect it. I am anxious to afford some alleviation of your present distress. Perfect relief is not possible, except with time. You cannot now realize that you will ever feel better. Is not this so? And yet it is a mistake. You are sure to be happy again. To know this, which is certainly true, will make you some less miserable now. I have had experience enough to know what I say; and you need only to believe it, to feel better at once. The memory of your dear father, instead of an agony, will yet be a sad sweet feeling in your heart, of a purer and holier sort than you have known before. Please present my kind regards to your afflicted mother.

Your sincere friend,
A. LINCOLN.

Miss Fanny McCullough.

This letter, revealing as it does the great heart of the man who in the darkest days of his career as President of a nation engaged in civil war, could forget the cares of state long enough to write a letter of sympathy to the daughter of an old-time friend, is strikingly similar in tone to the Bixby letter, which it antedates by nearly two years. A comparison of the two shows the same tenderness of spirit, the same sincere sympathy and the simple, direct phraseology which marks so many of the utterances of Abraham Lincoln and makes them among the best examples of noble English prose ever written. The text of the Bixby letter follows:

EXECUTIVE MANSION

Washington, November 21, 1864

To Mrs. Bixby, Boston, Mass.

Dear Madam:

I have been shown in the files of the War department a statement of the Adjutant General of Massachusetts that you are the mother of five sons who died gloriously on the field of battle. I feel how weak and fruitless must be any words of mine which should attempt to beguile you from the grief of a loss so overwhelming But I cannot refrain from tendering to you the consolation that may be found in the thanks of the Republic they died to save. I pray that our Heavenly Father may assuage the anguish of your bereavement, and leave only the cherished memory of the loved and lost, and the solemn pride that must be yours to have laid so costly a sacrifice upon the altar of freedom.

Yours very sincerely and respectfully,
A. LINCOLN.

The Fanny McCullough, to whom this new Lincoln letter was written, afterwards became the wife of Frank D. Orme. Her sister, Nannie L. McCullough, also married into the Orme family, a family of soldiers. Her husband was Gen. William W. Orme who entered the Union army as colonel of the Ninety-fourth Illinois infantry and whose distinguished services, especially at the siege of Vicksburg where he contracted the disease which brought about his death soon after the close of the war, made him a brigadier general. Fanny Orme died in Washington, D. C. in 1920, and upon her death the Lincoln letter was given to the present owner, Mrs. Bernadine Orme Smith of Normal, Ill. (the "twin city" of Bloomington), a daughter of Gen. William W. Orme and Nannie McCullough Orme.

In Later Years of Life

Good Elimination is More Than Ever Important.

AS we grow older, there is apt to be a gradual slowing up of bodily-functions. The kidneys are the blood filters. Proper function cleanses the blood stream thoroughly. Sluggish function is apt to permit some retention of uric acid and other poisons. This tends to make one tired, listless and achy—to have drowsy headaches and dizziness and perhaps a toxic backache. That the kidneys are not functioning properly is often shown by scanty or burning passages. Elderly people recommend Doan's Pills in this condition. This tested diuretic is endorsed the country over. Ask your neighbor!

Salts Fine for Aching Kidneys

When Back Hurts Flush Your Kidneys as You Clean Your Bowels

Most folks forget that the kidneys, like the bowels, sometimes get sluggish and clogged and need a flushing occasionally, else we have backache and dull misery in the kidney region, severe headaches, rheumatic twinges, torpid liver, acid stomach, sleeplessness and all sorts of bladder disorders. You simply must keep your kidneys active and clean and the moment you feel an ache or pain in the kidney region begin drinking lots of water. Also get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any good drug store here, take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys will then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and is intended to flush clogged kidneys and help stimulate them to activity. It also helps neutralize the acids in the urine so they no longer irritate, thus helping to relieve bladder disorders.

Jad Salts is inexpensive; makes a delightful, effervescent lithia water drink which everybody should take now and then to help keep their kidneys clean.

A well-known local druggist says he sells lots of Jad Salts to folks who believe in trying to correct kidney trouble while it is only trouble.

ORCHARD GLEANINGS

CUTTINGS FROM GRAPE PRUNINGS

The most economical way for the grape grower to establish a vineyard is to grow the plants himself, provided he has a few healthy old vines of the desired varieties to furnish cutting wood, advises the division of horticulture of the New Jersey Agricultural Experiment station. However, if he wishes to get the vineyard established and producing as quickly as possible, it would be advisable to buy the plants from some reliable nurseryman.

The grape grows readily from cuttings, which may be made at any time during the dormant season, although some growers prefer those made during the fall or early winter. Healthy, one-year-old canes of medium size or slightly above, are selected from the prunings and cut in such a way that there is a bud near the base of the cuttings and an inch or so of cane beyond the top bud. From eight inches to twelve inches is a convenient length. It is desirable to have as many as three buds on each cutting, but with long-jointed varieties, two-bud cuttings may have to be used. Several joints near the small end of the cane should be discarded.

After the cuttings are made, tie in bundles of 50 or 100 with the bases of the cuttings all at the same end of the bundle. Then bury the bundles upside down in a well-drained spot, cover with about three inches of soil and allow to remain at least two or three weeks. If the ground is frozen, they may be stored in a cool place in a box of moist sand until they can be buried outside.

When the soil is in good tillable condition in the spring, plant the cuttings in a nursery row, about six inches apart in an upright position with one bud above the surface of the ground. The planting may be done with a spade. Or else a furrow can be made, the cuttings stood up against the straight side and soil thrown against them with a plow.

Winter Protection for Different Small Fruits

The best protection for blackberries during the winter is a natural windbreak on the north and west. Rabbits will damage the canes unless the patch is fenced with rabbit-tight fencing. Healthy black raspberry canes will come through the winter in good shape if they are slightly protected from the bright sun and the wind during the winter. Cornstalks, cane, or long wild grass make a satisfactory light covering for these canes. Red raspberries will seldom live through the winter unless they are covered in a trench. All the old wood should be pruned out before attempting to lay the new canes down; the canes should be staked down with forked sticks and then covered at least two inches deep with dirt. Currants and gooseberries will come through the winter in good shape if the ground around the bushes is mulched with strawy manure to help hold the moisture.

More Use of Artificial Manure Is Latest Plan

The compost heap of European countries has been talked about in this country for many years but it has never become very vigorously established except for greenhouse men and highly specialized truck gardeners.

Now, however, with the constantly increasing number of motor vehicles and tractors in use on the farms and the consequent decrease in the supply of natural manure, interest is growing in the making of compost.

Corn stalks, straw, cuttings from grape vines, leaves and vegetable refuse of all kinds go into the compost heap. Sometimes a small amount of lime is added and the pile must be kept moist. More recently various chemical treatments and bacterial cultures have been tried to cause rapid decay and some of these have been found highly successful. It is likely that this method of making artificial manure will increase in coming years.

Cedar-Apple Rust

An apple disease that seems to be on the increase is the cedar-apple rust. This pest cannot be controlled if red cedar trees and susceptible varieties of apples are grown near each other. Either the apple or the red cedar must be destroyed in order to control the disease. Certain varieties of apples such as the Winesap, Delicious and Grimes are resistant or immune to this disease. In contrast, Jonathan, Rome and Wealthy are very susceptible and should never be planted within a mile of red cedars.

Dormant Spray Needed

In general the orchard should have a dormant spray of either oil or lime-sulphur. With the peach this spray should be early in order to control "leaf curl," while with the apple it should be delayed until just before the buds open to destroy the aphis. It is quite necessary most seasons to spray at least once with a fungicide (lime-sulphur) before the blossoms of the apple open, again when they fall (combined with arsenate of lead) and perhaps three weeks later.

NOVEL GOODS FOR SPORTS WEAR; SMILE APPROVAL ON FLOPPY BOWS

IT'S to be a gay, gay time in fashion-town this coming season, according to signs and prophecies. Especially is this true in respect to clothes of sports classification, where color and design are conspiring to join in a giddy whirl of fascinating novelty.

As to the term, sports wear, the mode is making a very free use of it these days. The trend is to wear so-called sports attire for almost every occasion except the most formal. Surely, a sports frock as fetching as either of the models in this picture would give the woman of fashion perfect poise in the consciousness of being properly and charmingly costumed for almost any daytime event.

Two Fetching Sports Frocks.

There is an exquisite touch given to the blue crepella of which the frock to the left is made, in that the broad stripes have a sheen of silver metal in their weave. The semi-plaited skirt, the blouse-styling and the button trimming are all indicative of latest mode.

As to the clever frock to the right, while it is designed for midwinter resort wear, it also declares a coming spring trend. Bayadere striping on a yellow silken background bespeaks its vivid coloring.

Among who's who, and what's what in sports fabrics, stripes are in the vanguard. At the same time, however, that the mode is fairly shouting a spring song of stripes, stripes, stripes, to the world, appears a new star in the firmament of fashionable fabrics—plaid pongee silk. There are shantungs and rayon fabrics also in such gay stripings as bright green on a background in high shades of orange.

Prints of every description are the forecast for the ensuing months. Solid color used with prints is the big idea, also several solid tones used together. Especially will crepes and fine flannels be thus fashioned, that is, by combining different shades of the same material in a most ornamental way.

Black and white, also navy and white are outstanding in the program for spring sports wear. Embroidery in gay Rumanian colors will animate many of the forthcoming frocks, blouses and wraps.

The reign of the soft fabric frock is to continue, according to the foreword of leading fashionists. Which means that self-trimming will play an important part in the dress-styling program for spring. The gown of sheer and supple weave which expresses "beauty unadorned" in so far that it interprets style and grace solely through fabric manipulation, has captivated the fancy of women of fashion. Now that the new dress-goods showings include so many materials which are exquisitely supple or alluringly sheer, the vogue for the self-trimmed frock bids fair to outrival its past record.

Among self-trims heralded as important for spring, the big, floppy bow takes precedence over almost every form of fabric-manipulation. "When in doubt" gather the soft, yielding fabric into a huge bow at the front or the side, and the mode promises a smile of approval. This theory was happily put into practice by the creator of the charming afternoon dress of beige crepe shown to the right in the accompanying picture. It is just such artfully tied bows as is this one which one sees on the new Paris gowns sent to our shores for the gratification of milady who plans to winter under southern sunny skies.

Fortunate is it that crepe satin yields so effectively to the modish self-trim treatment, for crepe satin is forespoken as a favorite material for spring. The black satin two-piece dress in the picture features a blouse which ties in a soft bow to one side. The collar, cuffs and sash are lined with a soft shade of pink crepe.

There are ways and ways of introducing the bow effect into dress design. A late model shows widths of material brought from the shoulders, culminating in a bow just below an inset vestee, this bow carrying streamers which fall to the skirt hemline.

It is said that chiffon prints will be more popular than ever. Recent imported frocks of gay print exploit the self-trim theme, especially stressing bows and side drapes.

Self-Trimming Much in Favor.

JULIA BOTTOMLEY.

A Child's Laxative Which Mothers Can Rely On

To Dr. W. B. Caldwell, of Monticello, Ill., a practicing physician for 47 years, it seemed cruel that so many constipated infants and children had to be kept "stirred up" and half sick by taking cathartic pills, tablets, salts, calomel and nasty oils.

While he knew that constipation was the cause of nearly all children's little ills, he constantly advised mothers to give only a harmless laxative which would help to establish natural bowel "regularity."

In Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin mothers have a regulating laxative which they can depend upon whenever a child is constipated, bilious, feverish or sick from a cold, indigestion or sour stomach. All children love its pleasant taste.

Buy a large 60-cent bottle at any store that sells medicine or write "Syrup Pepsin," Monticello, Illinois, for a FREE SAMPLE BOTTLE and just see for yourself how perfectly it cleanses and regulates the bowels of infants and children.

THREE BROTHERS ON 1½ SECTIONS—

THEY came to Kadoka, in northwestern South Dakota, in 1922, and have made money every year. Says one of the Munger brothers:

"We figure it so much better here than where we came from we have no way of making a comparison! We produce beef and pork for one-half the cost we could on one-hundred-dollar-an-acre land back there."

They pasture 200 hogs on alfalfa from early spring to late fall—and finish on corn.

On their 1½ sections the Mungers raise an average per acre of 35 bushels of oats, 25 bushels of corn, 38 bushels of barley, 60 bushels of potatoes, two tons of alfalfa plus high-grade seed, besides 9 bushels of flax and about 4 to 5 tons per acre of cane for fodder. They have a garden, too, where they grow everything they want. Besides hogs and cattle, they raise chickens and turkeys and milking cows.

"We have daily mail and telephone service," the Mungers explain, "and good neighbors. There's no better water on earth. And as to churches, there's most any one you wish to attend."

TO RESTORE TOMB OF OLD VIRGINIAN

Posterity to Rebuild Sepulcher of Colonial Figure.

Nearly two hundred years ago Robert Carter of Corotoman, an outstanding personality in the pre-Revolutionary history of northern Virginia, died at his palatial home on the banks of the Rappahannock in Lancaster county, and was buried in the nearby churchyard of Christ Episcopal church.

He left 300,000 acres of land, 1,000 slaves and $50,000 in money. His vast holdings and his tremendous influence caused him to be known to his contemporaries as King Carter, and posterity still applies to him that sobriquet.

When he died in 1732, at the age of sixty-nine, and was buried beside his two wives, Judith and Elizabeth, a magnificent tombstone of white Italian marble was erected,. For more than a century and a half this Virginia aristocrat slept peacefully in the little churchyard.

About thirty years ago, however, his bones were rudely stirred. A charge of dynamite was set off at the tomb, the imposing monument which marked the king's last resting place was shattered and the sarcophagus of this monarch of the Old Dominion was rifled.

The three Carter gravestones were wrecked, and these, for the past 30 years, have been little more than broken fragments. Some of these fragments, including the bronze plate bearing the epitaph of King Carter, have been taken by souvenir hunters.

In consequence, several of the king's descendants have recently launched a movement to restore the monuments. A committee headed by Mrs. O. H. Funsten of Richmond has been organized, and plans are being formulated for assembling the scattered pieces and reconstructing the sarcophagi.

An effort is being made to locate the souvenirs carried off by tourists, and some of these have already been returned to the committee. The three Carters lie near the road, and the mass of broken stone is plainly visible to travelers passing along the highway.

Hence their posterity is banding together with a view to restoring the tombs to their pristine grandeur.

King Carter was born in 1663, the son of John Carter, who had come over from England as the first of that name. John was a well-to-do planter, and was prominent in the colony as a burgess and councillor. His wealth enabled him to send his son to England for a part of his schooling.

When his father died, Robert inherited a large estate, and, being a man of great energy, marked business acumen and dominant personality, he steadily increased his patrimony.

He began his public career as a burgess from Lancaster in 1691. Subsequently he was chosen treasurer of the colony, speaker of the house of burgesses and member of the council, in which last named body he served 27 years. He was finally elected president of the council and was acting governor for more than a year, from the death of Governor Drysdale until the arrival of Governor Gooch.

Colonel Carter's estate grew to such enormous proportions that Governor Nicholson on one occasion dubbed him king, and the name stuck. His prestige was that of a feudal lord, and he became the most powerful landholder in his section of the Old Dominion.—Baltimore Sun.

Vegetarian Dogs

Arjun Lalshet, a rich Hindu, is trying to develop a breed of nonmeat-eating dogs. He belongs to a sect of Hindus who do not believe in killing The gaekwar of Baroda has given Lalshet permission to establish a "dog city" within his dominions. Lalshet believes that he can wean dogs from their instinct of killing and eating meat. All dogs within the district are now being fed on wheat, rice, milk and butter—a strict vegetarian diet. Special care has been taken to stop up all rat and mouse holes in order to remove all strong temptations from the dogs.—Pathfinder Magazine.

The Simple Life in India

In India they have 50 different religions and every religion has its own meat. The Mohammedan will not eat pork, the Hindu will not eat beef, the Narpalies will eat neither beef or pork, but eat fish and chicken instead. They take a piece of cloth five yards long, and that is the limit of their clothes. The cloth is wound around the lower part of the body, and some who have a few rupees wear a shirt. They live in bamboo huts. They split bamboo and lace it crosswise, and sometimes they put a coat of mud over the outside. The roof is made of banana leaves and is a foot thick.

Gold-Plated Pagoda

The native of Burma is rated much higher than that of India in the matter of intelligence and the country is much pleasanter and more picturesque. There are many beautiful castles surrounded by gorgeous flower gardens and imposing pagodas. The largest pagoda in all Burma, known as the Swaddlgondge, is located at Rangoon and is gold-plated from top to bottom, with a flag of diamonds and rubles at the top. It is said to have cost $5,000,000 and is a beautiful temple, where all Burmese can go to worship. It covers between 10 and 15 acres at the bottom.

Musician Found Much of Interest on Tour

To go on a concert tour lasting for five years is in itself something of an achievement, but when it embraces not only the temperate and torrid zones but the frigid zone as well, the achievement verges upon the phenomenal.

And yet Laszlo Schwartz, well known as a violinist and composer in this country, has come back to these shores with much music of interest which he has gathered during his travels.

"In the Fiji islands," Mr. Schwartz related, "the heat is terrible. Combined with the dampness it is death and destruction to musical instruments. I asked how the piano was and was told 'We are airing it!'

"The day of our first concert, the soundpost of my violin came unglued and nothing would make it stick. I tried everything I could think of, but to no avail, so I simply had to tell them that there would be a concert but no violin.

"Sumatra seemed to be the hottest place in the world. A violin will go to pieces there any time. I had to play with clamps on mine to keep it together, which, you may imagine, did not improve the tone.

"In the Fiji islands we heard a native chorus of 600 with the most marvelous basses I have ever heard anywhere. They have an amazing sense of harmony, like the American negro, but much more intricate. They learn tunes from a phonograph, and then harmonize themselves. They were learning the Tannhaeuser overture while I was there, each member of the band memorizing harmonies from the phonograph.

"I was asked by a rich native how much my charges were for a concert and when I told him the next question was: 'How long will the concert be?' 'About an hour,' I said. 'Oh!' he replied. 'But I can hire a man who will play for four hours for that amount without taking his bow off the strings!'"—John Alan Haughton in Musical America.

A Regular Butcher

One day little Betty heard her mother giving a detailed account of a recent tonsil operation to an afternoon caller.

"Yes, I had a perfectly dreadful time. My doctor was a regular butcher," said Mrs. B——

To her surprise, a few days later she overheard the following conversation between her small daughter and a little neighbor girl:

"Some day I am going to have my tonsils taken out."

"Are you going to the hospital like my sister did?"

"No," replied Betty, "I am just going down to the butcher shop where mother had hers cut out."—Indianapolis News.

Insects on Increase

For a century and more scientists have been listing and classifying insects found in the various countries, hoping they might have, some time, a complete list of the insect family, but the task seems to have no end, new species being found in all lands, so many, in fact, that more than 6,000 are being listed, each year, says Nature Magazine.

The scientists tend strongly to the belief that new species are being provided by some means, for each year discoveries are made of which no scientist in the past ever heard and man must admit in the bug listing business he is a long way behind.

European Air Lines

There are 42 commercial air lines operating daily to all parts of central and eastern Europe, including Moscow. Seventeen lines radiate from Berlin. There are many small companies, all now consolidated with the Deutsche Lufthansa. There are 120 commercial planes and 160 pilots. One hundred and ten planes are constantly in working order. In 1925 the German commercial air service carried approximately 133,639 passengers and 6,600 tons of freight. In 1925 the commercial service in passengers and freight carried and miles traveled tripled its volume of business over the preceding year.

Chinese Official Journal

The Tsen-Tsc-Kwan-Pao of Peking, China, recently celebrated its thousandth birthday anniversary, and is said to be the oldest newspaper in the world. A recent article says that "every issue of this newspaper has been carefully preserved and filed in the official archives of the palace at Peking. The penalty for making a misstatement in this newspaper has been decapitation, and it is said that more than a few of its editors have suffered this fate in the past. Since the revolution the paper has changed its title to Tsen-Fou-Koun-Pao, which means "Official Government Journal."

Eradicate Deadly Weed

Recently 17 boys of a county home were severely poisoned as a result of eating leaves, roots and flowers of the water hemlock, reports Hygeia Magazine.

This plant grows in swamp land, along irrigating ditches and in meadows, and is known as cowbane, snakeweed, wild carrot, wild parsnip and death of man. The boys found it growing in a swamp near the playground. Since it has little if any usefulness and is poisonous to men and animals, farmers and others in charge of open lands should do everything possible to eradicate it.

In the article telling of the protection of fish in East Twin Lake, the Times stated the pumping outfit was procured from the fish and game department. This is wrong as the pumping outfit was paid for by donations from local sportsmen. Mr. Griggs circulated a subscription last fall and many Klemme sportsmen donated toward the outfit he is now using at East Lake to protect the fish.

Lesson for February 6

THE PRACTICE OF CHRISTIAN STEWARDSHIP

LESSON TEXT—Matt. 25:14-30.

GOLDEN TEXT—Thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things. Enter thou into the joy of thy Lord.

PRIMARY TOPIC—The Story of the Three Servants.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Three Stewards and How They Kept Their Trust.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—What It Means to Be a Steward.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Scope and Spirit of Christian Stewardship.

Stewardship here includes oneself and substance. Stewardship in money is only a small part of our responsibility. This parable like that of the ten virgins is associated with the second coming of Christ. In both instances the unpreparedness for His coming on the part of the people is exhibited. In that of the ten virgins their unreadiness consisted in their failure of inward life—absence of the Holy Ghost. In this of the talents it consisted in their failure to properly use the gifts which had been entrusted to them. The first was failure to watch; the second was failure to work. By talents is meant whatever gifts and powers one possesses as gifts from God, whether of nature or grace, such as strength, reason, energy, knowledge, influence, time, money, ability to speak, sing, etc.

I. The Distribution of the Talents (vv. 14, 15).

1. It was a sovereign act. He called his own servants and distributed to them his own money. As the One who created us and absolutely owns us, He has assigned us our places and given us our several powers, intending that we put them to the best possible use.

2. It was an intelligent act. "According to his several ability." The God who made us knew our ability to use gifts, therefore has made the distribution upon that basis.

3. It was a purposeful act. The talents were given to be traded with They were not given to be used for one's own gain and profit, but as stock in trade for the enrichment and glory of the Master.

II. The Employment of the Talents (vv. 16-18).

1. All the servants recognized that the talents were not their own—that they were responsible to the Lord for the use made of them.

2. Two servants used their talents. The five-talented man put his to use and gained five more. The two-talented man put his to use and gained two more. This shows that God's gifts can be increased. The exercise of any gift increases it. The faithful use of what we have in the place we are will prepare us for greater usefulness and honor

3. The one hid his talent. The fact that one possesses but one talent should not discourage him, but should make him strive harder. God does not reward according to what we possess, but according to our faithfulness. The crime of the one talented man was not that he had but one talent, but that he hid the talent which the Lord gave him.

III. The Accounting for the Talents (vv. 19-30).

1. Its certainty. There is a day coming when we all must give an account of our stewardship.

2. The time. This will be at the coming of the Lord. If we have done well, we shall then have praise. If we have been unfaithful, we shall then be cast out from the presence of the Lord.

3. The judgments announced.

(1) Reward of the faithful (a) Praise—"Well done." We all like to be praised. From childhood on through life commendation is pleasing. (b) Promotion—"Be thou ruler over many things." Promotion is desirable to all. (c) Entrance upon the joy of the Lord. The five talented man and the two talented man received the same praise and the same promotion.

(2) Punishment of the faithless. The one talented man lied when brought to account. The talent when dug up was not the same as when it was burled—it was not of the same weight. Gifts unused are lost. (a) Reproach—he was called slothful and wicked. To be called lazy is a reproach which even the lazy man dislikes (b) Stripped—the talent which was given to him was taken from him. (c) Cast out—he was condemned on his own ground. The very fact that he knew the character of the Lord should have been an incentive for him to have exerted himself.

Pray More

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Secretary Kellogg States Administration Policy in China Mix-Up.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

AMERICAN lives and property in China will be protected by the government of the United States so long as the Chinese authorities fail to protect them, and Admiral Williams, in command of the naval forces sent there, has broad instructions to act either alone or in co-operation with the forces of other powers. Our government, however, feels sincere friendship for China and looks with sympathy on the efforts of the Chinese to reorganize their government, and is ready to negotiate new treaties with them as soon as conditions are right.

Such, briefly, is the administration's policy as set forth by Secretary of State Kellogg in a public statement which was cabled to China and other countries.

"The government of the United States," says the secretary, "has watched with sympathetic interest the nationalistic awakening of China and welcomes every advance made by the Chinese people toward reorganizing their system of government. . . .

"The government of the United States expects, however, that the people of China and their leaders will recognize the right of American citizens in China to protection of life and property during the period of conflict for which they are not responsible. In the event that the Chinese authorities are unable to afford such protection it is, of course, the fundamental duty of the United States to protect the lives and property of its citizens. It is with the possible necessity for this in view that American naval forces are now in Chinese waters.

"This government wishes to deal with China in a most liberal spirit. It holds no concessions in China and has never manifested any imperialistic attitude toward that country. It desires, however, that its citizens be given equal opportunity with the citizens of the other powers to reside in China, and to pursue their legitimate occupations without special privileges, monopolies, or spheres of special interest or influence."

Great Britain has recognized the growth of Chinese nationalism and the necessity for revising the unequal treaties now existing, but she is determined that the British concession at Shanghai shall not be taken from her by force. Therefore 15,000 or more troops are being sent there from England and India, the forces including airplanes, tank corps, hospital ship and nurse and medical units. The first of these troops to arrive in Shanghai were the royal Indian Punjab troops from Hongkong. A thousand marines led the movement from England, and they were followed rapidly by other detachments. The foreign concessions at Shanghai were surrounded by strong barbed wire entanglements, all approaches were covered by heavy artillery and machine guns, great stores of munitions were laid in and warehouses and public buildings were turned into barracks. The foreign settlement authorities planned the establishment of a neutral area five miles wide about the city, and the conservative leaders of the Chinese nationalists indorsed this idea, asking United States Consul General Gauss to undertake establishment of such a zone. They said the landing of British troops was likely to precipitate anti-foreignism and that the Cantonese were ready to agree not to advance their troops nearer to Shanghai than 25 miles in order that peace might be preserved there.

BY A unanimous vote—79 to 0—the senate adopted the Robinson resolution indorsing arbitration of the dispute with Mexico over the right of the Calles government to expropriate the properties of American citizens acquired before the Mexican constitution of 1917 went into effect. Thus the senate is on record as opposed to the policy of the administration, which has been in effect that the right to confiscate those properties without compensation is not subject to arbitration. Should the President carry out his implied threat to withdraw recognition of the Calles government he presumably would not be backed up by the senate, and the house might follow the example of the upper chamber.

Though they all voted for the resolution, some of the senators expressed doubts of its wisdom, among them being King of Utah, Democrat, and Lenroot of Wisconsin, Republican. Heflin of Alabama broke loose again, advocating the measure, attacking the Catholics and Reed of Missouri and giving the discussion a political and personal color that was not warranted. It is generally understood that the adoption of the resolution was brought about largely by the extensive campaign of propaganda carried on by Protestant church organizations. It is a re-affirmation of the national desire of America to settle quarrels by arbitration rather than by arms, but its practical benefit in this particular case is doubtful. Probability of war with Mexico was and is most remote, and even in Mexico the government authorities seem to think their government will not accept the conditions laid down by the American senate as necessary for arbitration. What effect the senate's action may have on American politics and the next Presidential campaign is a matter of conjecture. President Coolidge and Secretary Kellogg appear to have been willing that the senate should relieve them of the responsibility of selecting a course to be pursued by the administration in dealing with an exceedingly troublesome controversy.

Insurgent Catholics in Mexico have been defeated in numerous engagements, and now the rebels are putting forth statements seeking to enlist the sympathy of Americans and other foreigners.

HOUSE and senate conferees agreed on a new radio bill whose passage seemed assured It creates a radio commission of five members, one from each of five zones into which the country is divided. They are appointed by the President and receive a salary of $10,000 each for the first year and $30 a day thereafter while engaged on the work of the body.

The commission during its first year is given power to classify radio stations, prescribe the nature of the service to be rendered by each class of licensed stations and each station within any class, assign bands of frequencies of wave lengths, determine the location of classes of stations or individual stations, regulate the kind of apparatus to be used by stations, make such regulations as it may deem necessary to prevent interference between stations, establish areas or zones to be served by any station, and make special regulations applicable to radio stations engaged in chain broadcasting. After the first year the commission becomes an appellate body, the Department of Commerce assuming original jurisdiction

ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY ANDREWS and Internal Revenue Commissioner Blair reported to the senate concerning the activities of "under cover" agents of the prohibition unit. They admitted and partly justified three outstanding instances of the methods of those agencies, but disavowed the adoption of a policy of "enforcement by entrapment." The report revealed the fact that Federal Judge Frank Cooper of the Northern district of New York had suggested one entrapment scheme to catch liquor smugglers on the Canadian border and later had inflicted the maximum penalties on violators brought before him. Representatives Cellar and La Guardia of New York introduced resolutions for an investigation of Judge Cooper's action which may yet lead to his impeachment.

WHILE the army's good will flight aviators are making their way gradually and fairly successfully down the west coast of South America, another squadron of our force has been on a similar though much less ambitious excursion into Canada. Twelve scout planes from Selfridge field, Michigan, flew up to Ottawa and gave a fine exhibition to admiring thousands. Thence they went to Montreal, and from there down the St. Lawrence river and across Lake Ontario to Buffalo, and back to Michigan, passing north of Lake Erie. Major Lanphier was in command of the squadron.

PRESIDENT COOLIDGE'S nomination of Cyrus E. Woods of Pennsylvania to be a member of the interstate commerce commission was rejected by the senate by a vote of 28 to 49. Confirmation was opposed by both Republicans and Democrats from West Virginia, Virginia, Tennessee and Kentucky, which states are arrayed against Pennsylvania in a pending coal cargo case. A petitioner in that case is the Pittsburgh Coal company with which Mr. Woods formerly was connected. He also admitted that he holds more than $200,000 in securities of railroads and coal concerns. The insurgent Republicans voted solidly against Mr. Woods. It was said at the White House that the President would accept the senate's action as final.

BEN B. LINDSEY, founder of the juvenile court of Denver and a national figure, was ordered ousted from the bench of that tribunal by the Colorado Supreme court, which decided that he was defeated in the 1924 election by Royal R. Graham, who died more than a year ago. Judge Lindsey declared he would continue in office until the next general election produces a qualified successor. Other authorities thought the decision left the position vacant until filled by appointment by the county board.

OF THE several sensational court cases current last week, one came to a close when Rev. J. Frank Norris, militant pastor of Fort Worth, Texas, was acquitted of the charge of murdering D. E. Chipps, friend of persons whom the minister had been attacking in sermons. The jury accepted the theory of the defense, that Norris shot Chipps because he thought the latter was about to kill him. The verdict was expected.

Efforts to have the separation suit of "Peaches" Browning against her millionaire husband heard in private were frustrated, so the newspaper-reading public is being regaled with the unsavory details of the married life of the New Yorker and his child bride. These were bad enough in all conscience last week, and worse was predicted.

The Chaplin divorce case is for the present a contest between the government and Mrs. Chaplin for possession of the screen comedian's discovered funds, with Uncle Sam seemingly holding the winning hand. Mrs. Chaplin wants to collect the alimony allotted her, but the government tied up the money by claims for income taxes. Charlie was allowed to post a bond and get the money he had in a New York bank, but the funds in California remained under a lien.

DATU TAHIL, a Moro chief, and several hundred followers, have been intrenched in a fort on Sulu island for some time, defying 200 members of the Philippine constabulary. This is not an unusual occurrence, but is made especially interesting by the fact that one of the Datu's wives is Princess Tarhata Kiram, daughter of the sultan of Sulu and not long ago a coed in the University of Illinois. She sought to dissuade her husband from revolting, and, failing, cast in her lot with his. The constabulary commander delayed his attack on the rebels because he feared she would be killed and that this would cause a general uprising. At this writing the outcome of the affair is not known.

LYMAN J. GAGE, secretary of the treasury under Presidents McKinley and Roosevelt and for many years a leading banker in Chicago, is dead at his home in Point Loma, Calif., at the age of ninety. One of his notable achievements was the popularizing of the American war loan during the Spanish-American war in 1898. The entire loan of $200,000,000 was subscribed in amounts of less than $4,500 by more than 320,000 persons.

Oliver Cromwell

A MIDDLE-AGED farmer—red and swollen of face, slovenly of dress, dirty of linen, harsh of voice and woefully lacking in dignity—was so disgusted with political conditions in England in the first half of the Seventeenth century that he decided to emigrate to America. King Charles I refused him and his companions permission to go. In doing so the king virtually signed his own death warrant and the death warrant of "the divine right of kings." For the would-be emigrant was Oliver Cromwell.

It was a crucial time in England's history. Queen Elizabeth had been succeeded by James Stuart, son of Mary Queen of Scots. James, "who never said a foolish thing and never did a wise one," was succeeded by his son, Charles I. Charles inherited enough of the vile traits of his grandmother, Mary Queen of Scots, to make him thoroughly untrustworthy, despotic and inconsiderate of the people's rights.

He set aside the wishes of his subjects, as expressed through parliament; levied heavy and unjust taxes; pursued an unpopular foreign policy; was suspected of conspiring against the established religion of England.

In 1642 king and parliament came to an open rupture, and civil war swept England. Oliver Cromwell—farmer, legislator and stanch Presbyterian—was made captain in the parliamentary army. He was an eloquent preacher, but had no knowledge of war. Yet he was quickly promoted to a colonelcy and raised a cavalry regiment of Puritans (nicknamed "Ironsides"), whose powers of prayer and exhortation were only exceeded by their zeal for slaying royalists. With Bible in one hand and sword in the other, Cromwell led his invincible band of psalm-singing fighting men to victory after victory. The king's followers were known as "Royalists" or "Cavaliers"; the parliamentary army, from their close-cropped hair, being dubbed "Roundheads." Little by little, at Marston Moor, Naseby and elsewhere, the Roundheads broke down the royal power, until at last in 1646 Charles fled for refuge to his father's people, the Scotch. The thrifty Scottish lords promptly sold him to parliament (Cromwell being largely instrumental in the "purchase"), and he was brought back to England a prisoner.

Now that the king was captured, parliament did not know what to do with him. Cromwell and others sought for means by which Charles could still nominally reign while parliament should actually direct the government. But they could not trust the shifty monarch. So his adherents were cleared out of parliament, the house of lords dissolved, a special court was chosen and Charles was tried, condemned and in January, 1649, beheaded; Cromwell's name appearing third among the signers of the death warrant. Scotland, Ireland and Wales rebelled against this drastic act and Cromwell successively crushed the three revolts.

Parliament's methods did not wholly suit him, so he disbanded that body by force and formed another composed of his own friends. Two years later parliament made him sole governor of the British commonwealth with the title of "Lord Protector." He ruled wisely and well, winning the approval of the people at large by giving them added liberty. The nobles and the clerical element hated and feared him.

Parliament, wholly under his control, offered him the title of king. But the offer met with scant popularity in the nation at large. Quick to feel the popular pulse and doubtless fearing to share the fate of Caesar, Cromwell refused to accept the proffered honor.

In 1658—in his sixtieth year—Oliver Cromwell died. His son Richard—weak, amiable incompetent—succeeded him as lord protector; but anarchy at once broke out, and General Monk, Cromwell's right-hand man, was instrumental in bringing Charles' son, Charles II, back to England as king. After this restoration, Cromwell's body was dug up from its grave in Westminster Abbey and beheaded. The head was stuck on a pole in front of the abbey and the trunk was hung in chains on a Tyburn hill gibbet. A revulsion of feeling set in. England was tired of blue laws, puritanism, plain dress and piety. Forgetting that those things had saved her from corruption, perhaps from total ruin, the nation swung to the other extreme. Under Charles II gayety, frivolity and extravagance held sway, and Cromwell was denounced as a usurper.

It is hard to form a just idea of Oliver Cromwell. He was the first great republican, and the first Englishman to exploit successfully a government for and by the people. He also built up a political machine and system of bossism that is unsurpassed. His severity may be partially forgiven when one remembers that through that severity alone he was able to hold in check the many unquiet elements in his realm. He was the last and greatest of the Puritans; and with him died the physical power of puritanism in England.

He and puritanism were the strong, distasteful medicine which alone could cure his country's debilitated "body politic." His treatment of Ireland was unpardonable. His government of England was almost ideal.

On the other hand, what could he in broad daylight? If he were n, as he almost certainly would Shaw, careless now, perhaps, in fancied security, would take pre-utions which might make impos-le the night's work of rescue. That, course, assuming that Shaw was at the house among the cedars.

Was he? Laurie pondered that oblem. Undoubtedly he had per-ally taken Doris there, he and the cretary. But the chances seemed out even that, having done this, he uld leave her, for the day at least, her in charge of the secretary or of he caretaker. In that case—in that e——

The young man sprang to his feet. would waste no more time in spec-tion. He would know, and at once, o was in that house with Doris. swung back to the garage with de-mination in his manner, and en-ed the place so unexpectedly that oke, who had fancied him a mile ay, started at the sight of him. n, with a contented smile, he led his nerves and kept his eyes the bill the visitor held before him.

See here, said the latter. "I want do a tramp act."

Sure you do!" Burke promptly uiesced.

Can you find me some ragged users and an old coat and cap? worse they look, the better I'll it. And while you're about it, me some worn-out shoes or boots. w soon can you have them here?"

—I dunno." Burke was looking newhat overwhelmed. "You're tty big," he mentioned. "Nothin' nine'd fit you."

Great Scott!" exploded the other. don't want 'em to fit! I'm not ng to a pink tea in them."

But you want to get 'em on, don't ?"—Burke demanded, with some iness.

I do."

Well, look at yerself," young fella, then look at me."

Laurie obeyed the latter part of the anction. The father of seven was least five inches shorter than he, his legs and shoulders were small proportion. No coat or trousers he re could possibly go on the young rcules before him.

Oh, well," urged the latter, impa-ntly, "get some, somewhere. Here. ke a run into town. Use my car you like. Or go to some one you ow who's about my size. Only, m's the word."

Five-dollar bills were in the air, ttering before the eyes of the ga-e owner like leaves in Vallam-sa. He clutched them avidly.

And hurry up," added his impa-nt patron. "Let's see you back e in five minutes."

Who'll look after the garage? Not at any one's likely to stop," the prietor gloomily admitted.

I'll look after it. Come, get a ve on!"

Oh, all right! But I can't be back no five minutes, nor in thirty nutes, neither. I gotto go over to k Swanson's. He's about your e."

All right, all right! Got to it." The impatient youth was fairly poing him out of his own garage, dat with the sweet memory of those e-dollar bills to sustain him, Burke s patient, even good-humored. One ing he could say about them college ls they was usually ready to pay ll for their nonsense. With a for-ing grin he hurried off.

Left alone, Laurie removed his coat d cap, searched the garage suc-sfully for grease, oil, waste and e-blacking, and then, establishing nself in front of a broken mirror in rke's alleged office, removed his llar and effected a startling trans-mation in the appearance of his ad, face, hands, and shirt.

Beginning in his college days, and ntinuing throughout his more re-nt theatrical experiences, the art of ke-up had increasingly interested n. The people in his plays owed mething to his developing skill, and en one of the leading ladies had mbly taken suggestions from him. t never in any stage dressing-om had young Mr. Devon secured a re extraordinary change than the e he produced now, with the simple ls at hand.

When Burke returned he found his rage in charge of an unwashed, un-mpt, unprepossessing young ruffian om he stared at for a full minute fore he accepted him as the man had left there. The ragged trou-rs, the spotted "reefer" buttoned ght around the neck, the dirty cap lled over the eyes, and the wholly rresponsible broken shoes Burke had ought with him completed the trans-rmation of an immaculate young ntleman into a blear-eyed follower the open road.

Over these garments, Laurie took w preliminary shuffles around the rage, while the owner, watching m, slapped his thigh in approval. ere was his interest in the "act;" t when the impersonator ew rage and started off, Burke strong desire to follow him and see the finish of the performance, a desire that recalled for a fleeting instant the determined personality of the young gentleman hidden under the tramp disguise.

At the last moment before leaving, Laurie took from his pocket the tiny revolver he had brought with him, and holding it in his palm, studied it in silence. Should he take it, or shouldn't he? He dropped it among the discarded heap of clothes, and picked up in its stead a small screw-driver, which he put into his ragged pocket. That particular tool looked as if it might be useful.

Lounging up the country road, with his cold, bare, dirty hands in the pockets of the borrowed reefer, he looked about with assurance. He believed that in this unexpected guise, he could meet even Shaw and get away with it; but he meant to be very careful and take no unnecessary chances.

He cut across half a dozen fields, climbed half a dozen fences, was fiercely barked at by a dozen dogs, more or less, and finally reaching the grounds of the house in the cedars, approached it from the rear in exactly the half-sneaking, half-cocky manner in which the average tramp would have drawn near a shuttered house from one of whose chimneys smoke was rising. It was a manner that nicely blended the hope of a hand-out with the fear of a rebuff. Once he fancied he saw something moving among the trees. He ducked back and remained quiet for some time. Then, reassured by the continued silence, he emerged, sauntered to the back entrance, and after a brief preliminary study of the shuttered windows, assailed the door with a pair of grimy knuckles.

He had expected a long delay, possibly no response at all. But the door opened as promptly as if some one had been standing there awaiting his signal, and on its threshold a forbidding-looking woman, haglike as to hair and features but cleanly dressed, stood regarding him with strong disapproval. In the kitchen range back of her a coal fire was burning. A tea-kettle bubbled domestically on its top, and cheek by jowl with this a big-bellied coffee-pot exhaled a delicious aroma.

The entire tableau was so different from anything Laurie had expected that for an instant he stared at the woman, speechless and almost open-mouthed. Then the smell of the coffee gave him his cue. He suddenly remembered that he had eaten nothing that day, and the fact gave a thrill of sincerity to the professional whine in which he made his request.

"Say, lady," he begged urgently, "I'm down an' out. Gimme a cup o' cawfee, will yuh?"

Her impulse, he saw clearly, had been to close the door in his face. Already her hand was automatically responding to it. But he whipped off his dirty cap and, shivering on the doorstep, looked at her with Laurie's eyes, whose beauty no amount of disguise could wholly conceal. There was real appeal in them now. Much, indeed almost everything, depended on what this creature would do in the next minute. She hesitated.

"I ain't had a mouthful since yesterday," croaked the visitor, pleadingly and truthfully.

"Well, wait there a minute. I'll bring you a cup of coffee."

She turned from the door and started to close it, evidently expecting him to remain outside, but he promptly followed her in, and her face, hardening into quick anger, softened a little as she saw him cowering over the big hot stove and warming his dirty hands. In silence she filled a a cup with coffee, cut a thick slice from a loaf of bread, buttered it, and set the collation on the kitchen table.

"Hurry up and eat that," she muttered, "and then clear out. If any one saw you here, I'd get into trouble."

Laurie grunted acquiescence and wolfed the food. He had not sat down, and now, as he ate, his black eyes swept the room while he planned his next move. Drying on a stout cord back of the stove were several dish-towels. They gave him his first suggestion. His second came when he observed that his hostess, evidently reassured by his haste, had turned her back to him, and, bending a little, was examining the oven. Noiselessly setting down the cup and the bread, he crept behind her, and, seizing her in one powerful arm, covered her mouth with his free hand. He could not wholly stifle the smothered shriek she gave.

For the next moment he had his hands full. Despite her wrinkles and her gray hair, she was a strong woman, and she fought with a violence and a false strength due to overwhelming fury and terror. It was so difficult to control her without hurting her that all his strength was taxed. But at last he brought her slowly down into a chair under the row of dish-towels, and seizing two of these useful articles, as well as the cord that held them, securely bound and gagged her. As he did so he dropped his role and looked soberly into her furious eyes.

"Look here," he told her. "I'm not going to hurt you; be sure of that. But I've got something to say, and I want you to stop struggling and listen to it."

Under his quiet tones some of the frenzy died out of the eyes staring up at him.

"I'm here to get Miss Mayo," he went on. "She's in the house, isn't she? If she is, nod." There was a long moment of hesitation. At last the head nodded. "Is there any one else in the house?" The head shook negatively. "Is there no one here but you and Miss Mayo?" Laurie could hardly take in this good luck, but again the head shook negatively. "Where is she? Upstairs?"

The head nodded. He stepped back from the bound figure

"All right," he said cheerfully. "Now I'm going to unbind you and let you take me up to her. As a precaution, I shall leave the bandage on your mouth and hands. But, being a sensible woman, of course you realize that you have absolutely nothing to fear, unless you give us trouble. If you try to do that I shall have to lock you into a closet for a few hours."

As he spoke he was unfastening the cord.

"Lead on," he invited, buoyantly.

There was an instant when he thought the struggle with her would begin all over. He saw her draw herself together as if to spring. But she was evidently exhausted by her previous contest. She was also subdued. She rose heavily, and, taking her time to it, slowly led the way out of the kitchen and along a hall to the front of the house.

"No tricks, remember," warned Laurie, keeping close behind her. "Play fair, and I'll give you a year's salary when I take Miss Mayo out of this."

She turned now and looked at him, and there was venom in the glance. Violently and negatively, she shook her head.

"Don't you want the money?" he interrupted, deeply interested in this phenomenon. "I'm glad to have met you," he politely added. "You're an unexpected and a brand-new type to me." She was walking forward again, with no sign now that she heard his voice. Reaching a wide colonial staircase that led to the second floor, she started the ascent, but so slowly that the young man behind her uttered another warning.

"No tricks, remember," he repeated, cheerfully. "I'm afraid you're planning to start something. I believe you're capable of falling backward, and bowling me over like a ten-pin. But don't you do it. A dark, musty closet is no place for a kind-hearted, sensible woman to spend twenty-four hours in."

She ignored that, too, but now she moved more quickly, and her companion, close at her heels, found himself in an upper hall, approaching a door at the front of the house. Before this door his guide now planted herself, with much of the effect of a cornerstone settling into place.

Keeping a careful eye on her, he stretched out a long arm and tapped at the panel. There was no answer. He tapped again. Still no answer. He glanced at the enforcedly silent woman beside him, and something in her eyes, a gleam of triumph or sardonic amusement, or both, was tinder to his hot spirit.

"Have you led me to the wrong door?" he asked. He spoke very quietly, but the tone impressed the woman. The gleam faded from her eyes. Hastily she shook her head.

"If you have—" He nodded at her thoughtfully. Then he raised his voice.

"Doris," he called. "Doris!"

He heard a movement inside the room, an odd little cry, half exclamation, half sob, and hurried steps approaching. The next minute her voice came to him, in breathless words, with a tremor running through them.

"Is it you?" she gasped. "Oh, is it you?"

"Yes, open the door."

"I can't. It's locked."

He stared at the unyielding wood before him.

"You mean they've locked you in?"

"Yes, of course."

It would be, of course, Laurie reflected. That was Shaw's melodramatic method.

"We'll change all that, in a minute." He stepped back from the door.

"What are you going to do?" The voice inside was anxious.

"Break it down, if necessary. Breaking down doors to get to you is my specialty. You haven't forgotten that, I hope." He turned to the women beside him. "Have you the key to this?" She shook her head. "If you have, you may as well hand it over," he suggested. "I shall certainly break down the door if you don't; and it's a perfectly good door, with a nice polish on it."

He saw her hesitate. Then suddenly, she nodded.

"You have it, after all. He spoke with the natural relief of an indolent young man spared an arduous job. Again she nodded. "Where is it?" She could make no movement with her bound hands, but with an eye-flash she indicated the side of her gown. "In your pocket? Good. I'll get it."

He got it as he spoke. Holding it in his hand, he again addressed his reluctant companion.

"When I unlock the door, you will go in first, and walk over to the nearest corner and stand there with your back to the room. Also, here's my last warning: I should be very sorry to do anything that would hurt or inconvenience you. If you behave yourself I will soon take off that gag. If you don't, I shall certainly lock you up. In either case, you can't accomplish anything. So take your choice."

He unlocked the door, and the deliberate figure preceded him into the room. In the next instant he saw nothing in the world but the eyes of Doris, fixed on his. Then he knew that he was holding her hands, and listening to her astonished gasp as she took in his appearance.

"My disguise," he explained. "I couldn't ride up as publicly as young Lochinvar, though I wanted to. So I got this outfit." He turned around for her inspection, deliberately giving her and himself time to pull up under the strain of the meeting. At the first glimpse of her all his assurance had returned. He was excited, triumphant. But as he again met her eyes, something in their expression subdued him.

"It took longer to get here than I expected, but of course you knew I was on the way," he said.

Her response was unexpected. Dropping into a low chair, she buried her face in her hands and burst into a passion of tears. Aghast, he stared at her, while from the corner the hag stared at them both. Laurie dropped on his knees beside Doris and seized her hands, his heart shaking under a new fear.

"They've been frightening you," he muttered, and was surprised by the intensity of his terror and anger as he spoke. "Don't cry. They'll pay for it."

Religious Beliefs of Indians Queer Mixture

At Ysleta, in southwest Texas, are the survivors of a tribe of Indians, perhaps the oldest tribe in the Southwest, whose religion is said to be a mixture of pagan rites and the formalism of the Roman church. Missionaries have been unable to eliminate the paganism and some of it has been left to continue as the only survival of really primitive worship on the Rio Grande, says the Baltimore Sun.

A curious story, also of southwest Texas, was published a short time ago about the Seminole negroes who live near Brackettville and who have a strange religion. For the Seminoles, Christmas, instead of Easter, is the end of Lent. The Seminoles have religious feasts at which pork is the only forbidden meat and their sacramental drink is tea. The religion is a strange blend of teachings from many sources with traces that go back to Africa and the earliest red men on this continent.

From Personal Observation

One of the questions put to a class of rural adults was: "In the sentence, 'The bird flew over the house, is 'flew' a regular or an irregular verb?" This proved a sticker for the class, but finally one man ventured an answer. Said he, "If the bird that flew over the house was a wild goose, it went in a straight, regular line, so the verb is regular; but if it was a woodpecker, then it went in a crooked, zigzag line, and so the verb is irregular."

All but the grammar-bound examiner was satisfied with this rational explanation.

Britain's Smallest House

Mrs. Jane Jones, who has died at Conway, was owner and for years in charge of the smallest house in Great Britain, standing on Conway quay. The house has a frontage of 6 feet and is 10 feet from back to front.

Inoculation of Legumes Helps

Increases Palatability and the Percentage of Protein in Plants.

When properly done, inoculation of legumes is highly profitable in about 95 out of 100 cases, it is reported by W. R. Carroll, assistant in soil biology at the college of agriculture, University of Illinois. This practice of inoculating either the seed or the soil with proper root nodule bacteria at the time of planting may markedly improve the quality of leguminous crops largely by increasing both the palatability and the percentage of protein in the plants, he said.

Increased Protein Content.

"In 25 of 29 comparisons with canning peas, inoculation brought as high as 10 per cent increase in the protein content. On a highly fertile acid soil, inoculation produced an increase of 1,339 pounds of shelled peas an acre, or a return, at three cents a pound, of $40 an acre. Inoculation increased the yield of vines 7,857 pounds an acre.

"The protein content of the vines also was increased 35 per cent. This extra amount of nitrogenous material made them much more valuable for either hay or manure. Similar comparisons with inoculated and uninoculated soybeans showed increases of 240 to 1,108 pounds dry weight an acre and increases of 7 to 16 per cent in protein content in favor of the inoculated beans.

Favors All Legumes.

"Inoculation has shown marked favorable influences on practically every species of cultivated legumes. Tests with the alfalfas, the clovers, and the vetches have all shown enough improvement in quality of the crop to warrant the conscientious practice of legume inoculation.

"The effectiveness of inoculation, however, depends somewhat upon: (1) the amount of available nitrogen in the soil, (2) the reaction of the soil, (3) the number of nodule bacteria already present in the soil, and (4) the number of viable nodule bacteria added with the seed."

Wheat Scab Causes Big Loss to American Farmer

Wheat scab claims more than five million bushels of wheat a year in the United States. It is a fungus that attacks the wheat heads about the time they bloom.

For a long time the disease was a mystery. No one knew where it came from or how it started. Farmers and plant pathologists who watched the disease noticed that the attack was most severe on wheat that followed corn. Experiments that followed these observations showed that the fungus grew on both corn and wheat. On corn it causes root, stalk, and ear rot; on wheat it causes the scab.

It has been found that the fungus lives through the winter on old cornstalks. These overwintering spores attack the wheat. It is a robber that lives in the cornfield but steals wheat.

Inoculate Alfalfa Seed With Soil or Culture

Alfalfa seed can be inoculated with the proper kind of soil or with commercial culture, with but little difference in results when the soil contains an abundance of the proper bacteria and the commercial culture is good and fresh. Perhaps, when the culture is fresh, a good inoculation of the seed is more likely to occur, than with the soil as usually used.

The soil can be made into a creamy consistency and added to the seed while stirring well for all seed to get some of it. Scattering inoculated soil over the field will usually secure good results, but as a rule inoculating the seed gives as good inoculation and is much easier done.

Pruning Blackberries

The blackberry may be pruned in practically the same way as the red raspberry. The number of canes left to each plant is usually somewhat less—four or five. Strong growing canes may branch somewhat the first season. It is a good plan to leave some of these side branches, providing they have come through the winter in good condition. The tips of such branches should be cut back somewhat. The cutting may be done in the fall, but spring is best.

Hustle Along Fall Pigs

Fall pigs are harder to deal with than spring pigs unless one has equipment for them. It seems that pigs that are "roughed" along develop more trouble than the fast growers. The best results usually come from hustling them right towards marketable size as fast as they will gain. Pigs that are on full feed during the winter get along very well if they have dry quarters, although the quarters may be cold.

Good Feed Needed

Many dairy calves are neglected during the winter months because the owners feel that feed is too expensive and that it does not pay to give the calves proper care. Calves should have skim milk at least until they are six months old. They will come through the winter in fine shape when this is available along with a limited amount of grain and good alfalfa hay.

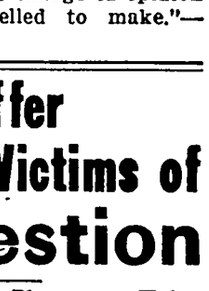
Tanlac a Treasure Says Des Moines Lady

Low in health and spirits, Mrs. Darnall felt discouraged till Tanlac built her up. Now, in glowing health, she calls Tanlac a "household treasure" and credits it with her recovery.



Mrs. S. L. Darnall lives at 1021 S. E. Lacona Avenue, Des Moines, Iowa. From a sickly, run-down woman she has changed to a happy, hearty housewife, working hard and enjoying her everyday life. "I felt tired and lazy all the time," she says, "and was all played out, sluggish and nervous. I had no desire to eat and lost interest in reading, sewing and shopping, which I used to enjoy. After the slightest exertion I had to lie down and rest. Life was dreary then.

"Tanlac helped me in a surprisingly short time. Now I'm my old happy, hearty self again and take a keen interest in everything around me. I'm cheerful and clear-brained all the time, and enjoy life hugely. I can't praise Tanlac too much. I keep a bottle in my medicine chest and call it a 'household treasure.'"

Mrs. Darnall's experience is that of many thousands. Tanlac is nature's own body building tonic, made from roots, herbs and barks. Your druggist has it. If you're rundown and weak, get a trial bottle today. Let it build you up as it built Mrs. Darnall. Over 52,000,000 bottles sold.

"I have always applauded your speeches," said the loyal constituent.

Ancients Still Hold Record for Stadiums

When 140,000 persons entered the stadium at the sesquicentennial in Philadelphia to see the Dempsey-Tunney boxing match, a record was made for modern amphitheaters. The next largest stadium is the one at Grant park Chicago, with a capacity of 100,000, says the Detroit News.

However, the ancients have not been surpassed in this respect. The largest structure in history for accommodating assemblies of spectators doubtless was the familiar Circus Maximus at Rome. The original structure was built as early as 329 B. C. It was made of wood and was burned in the fire that destroyed Rome. It was rebuilt with more durable material According to the historian Pliny it had a seating capacity of 250,000 and often was crowded to capacity Some writers of ancient Rome place the capacity of the circus as high as 485,000.

Almost Impossible to Fool Master of Magic

A student of the history of magic, he had collected a large library of the literature of magic, containing many rare volumes, and few persons were more familiar with magicians of the past and their feats than was Houdini, writes William Johnston in the New York Times.

Yet he was always eager to hear about new stunts. The surest way to get an audience with him was to tell him you had a new trick. He immediately wanted to see it and learn how it was done.

One night when he was at the New York Hippodrome, just about ten minutes before it was time for him to appear in his act, word was brought to him that a young man with a new trick wanted to see him. Houdini bounded out of his dressing room to meet his visitor.

"What have you got?" he asked eagerly.

"I can stop the beating of my pulse at will."

"Let's see you do it," demanded the magician.

The young man extended his arm. Houdini felt his wrist. His pulse was beating normally.

"Now watch," said the visitor.

Houdini felt the pulse again. No movement of the pulse could be detected.

"Do it again," said Houdini.

The young man complied, beginning to feel triumphant that the trick was baffling the great master.

He never had seen the trick before, but his logical mind reasoned that the easiest way to stop the pulse beats would be to apply pressure to the artery He suspected that the effect was produced by a pad under the arm, and sure enough it was.

As Others See Us

An aspiring candidate, with a keen sense of humor, relates an unique slant that he got on his own rather lubious position before the recent election Several weeks before November 2 he approached a man in his district in order to see what his chances might be with one who was known to vote a split ticket.

"Did you know that I was running for councilman, Sam?" the politician asked optimistically.

"Yes, I knew that you were running," reluctantly replied the nonpartisan voter

"How did you know that I was running?"

"Well, George told me."

"What did he say about my running when he told you?" the candidate hopefully questioned.

"Well," more reluctantly, replied the voter, "he didn't say anything—he just laughed"

Nervy "Borrower"

The cheekiest person I know is a girl who came over to our house one Friday and begged my mother to lend her a new old-rose dress of mine which I had worn once; her reason—she was going to be a bridesmaid the next day (Saturday) and didn't have a dress to wear nor money to buy a new one

Mother refused at first, for we never were in the habit of lending clothes to anyone, but after seeing the girl in tears and listening to her hard-luck story, mother consented, making her promise to bring back the dress the next day

She took the dress and then asked mother for some carfare Having 30 cents in change, she gave it to the girl Time has passed, but we never did see the dress, the 30 cents nor the girl.—R. R., in Chicago Tribune.

Ancient Paper Sarcastic

In a recent cleaning of the cellar of the University of Pennsylvania library an old southern newspaper was discovered printed on the back of a piece of wallpaper

The newspaper, called the Daily Citizen, was published in Vicksburg Miss., July 2, 1863, by J. M Swords Following is a quotation from the paper

"We are indebted to Major Gillespie for a steak of Confederate beef, aliasment We have tried it and can assure our friends that if it is rendered necessary they need have no scruples a eating the meat It is sweet savory and tender, and so long as we have a mule left we are satisfied our soldiers will be content with it"

Institute's Good Work

The Institute of Politics is a movement inaugurated by the trustees of Williams college in September 1919 and consists of annual sessions at which are discussed foreign affairs so as to promote a more sympathetic understanding of the problems and policies of other nations. This is done by offering courses of public lectures delivered by distinguished scholars and statesmen from foreign countries and by setting up round table and open conferences presided over by recognized authorities.

Real Stage Tragedy

While the audience laughed and applauded, thinking it a superb piece of acting, an actress taking the principal part in a musical comedy at a Roman theater died on the stage during the performance At the end of the second act she stumbled, then clutched at the neck of one of the actors. Both fell heavily to the floor The curtain fell amid deafening applause and laughter, and nobody realized what had happened until the manager announced the death of the actress through heart failure.

BANQUET SERVED IN STONE-AGE MANNER

European Scientists Enjoyed Unique Feast.

A distinguished European archeologist and a member of the Anthropological society lately conceived the original plan of preparing a banquet in the manner of the Stone age. There were many volunteers to aid in the work of making the proper preparations for the unique function. It was necessary first to select an appropriate spot for the dining place. After many sites were examined, it was finally decided to hold the "banquet" on a sand bank in the middle of the Danube river, far from habitations. This was done in order to remove all semblance of the life of today and to insure surroundings that would indicate a time when the only habitations were caves or the shelter of trees.

With the sand bank as the "table," dishes and utensils were made in models of those used in the Stone age. Those made of wood were fashioned in close imitation of the utensils of that age.

Cabbage soup formed the first item of the menu. It was prepared in a wooden bowl by means of stones that had been first heated and then thrown into the water in which the cabbage had been placed. As fast as the stones cooled others were put in to take their place. The cooking consumed, of course, a much greater time than do modern methods, but time was no object to the scientists on this ark

Boiled "leg of horse" came next. It had been cooked in the same manner Roasted pork, cooked over the living coals and far better tasting, the learned gentlemen said, than any offering of today, was an important dish Stewed maize, cooked by the hot stone method, went with the pork.

Turnips were roasted in the ashes of the fire, the fire-hardened part picked away and then served steaming After this there was a dessert of dried berries and wild honey The banquet lasted more than three hours, and when it was over and the scientists were returning to their homes, the guests all insisted that if the Stone-age man fared as well as this he had little of which to complain in the matter of food

During this strange banquet every possible effort was made to enter into the spirit of the remote age. The scientists ate either with their fingers or out of the bowls that were placed before them There were no knives, no forks, no tablecloths and no napkins In fact, nothing in the entire meal insulted the table manners of today When it became necessary to turn any material that was being cooked, this was accomplished by means of a pronged stick Not a bit of metal was employed either in the cooking or in the consumption of the food that day prepared for the scientists.

Woman Marine Engineer

Queen Victoria's goddaughter, Miss Victoria Drummond recently obtained her "ticket" as a fully qualified, sea going marine engineer Miss Drummond is the granddaughter of Lord Amherst of Hackney She became interested in engineering and after finishing her studies learned that to obtain a certificate she had to serve the required time in an engine room at sea She signed on a ship going to Australia in 1922. She stood her watch, inspected boilers, kept the oilers at work and performed all the duties required of her male colleagues. She has not decided whether she will continue going to sea, now that she has the coveted license, or remain on shore and take up the work of a consulting marine engineer.

Athletes Must Study

To discourage overemphasis on athletics in Philippine schools, only students who have a good record in their studies will be allowed hereafter to represent their schools in provincial, interprovincial and carnival meets, according to recent ruling of the Philippine bureau of education Credit formerly allowed for participation in these meets will be discontinued, and no pupil who fails of promotion one year will be allowed to represent his school the following year Athletes, however, are excused from regular physical education and will be given every opportunity to make up work they miss on account of participation in public athletic events.

Her Letters Still Read

France is celebrating the three hundredth anniversary of the birth of Mme. de Sevigne who was not only a typical French woman but a typical woman—sane, rounded, human, admirable, lovable. And she left the record of her colorful life behind her in a vast collection of letters, which are not only brilliant and satisfying as letters but are full of personality and human nature, both of that of the writer und of the important and colorful personages of her day.—Gamaliel Bradford in Delineator.

Controlling City Lights

Electricity is dispatched through thousands of miles of wire in every great city in much the same manner as trains are dispatched on a railroad. The men who sit at the control boards must speed up the system to meet the increase that may come when a storm cloud darkens a city and then slow it down again when the sun reappears. Every city depends on these men, yet only a few people know they exist.—New York Herald Tribune.

WINNERS OF DECLAMATORY CONTEST ANNOUNCED

Second Place Winners Will Compete In County Contest

Our High School Declamatory Contest was well attended last week on Thursday evening, and our young people all did splendidly. They had been coached for two weeks or thereabout by Mrs. Carmichael, of Clarion, and those winning places were Gertrude Johnson and Harvey Nelson in the Oratorical class; Florence Stokesbary and Agatha Stieman in the Dramatic class; and Asa Arnold and Irene Johnson in the Humorous class.

Harvey, Agatha and Irene will represent Klemme at Garner next week, February 8th, against Garner, Goodell, and Hayfield. The other three will be entered for us at Kanawha the last part of February, in the first round of the State Contests against Belmond, Goodell and Kanawha. We hope a number may go to both places to hear and boost

Boys Win Ninth Straight Game

Our boys won their ninth game (lost one and tied one) last Friday night against Swaledale, who had marred their record here earlier in the season. The game at Swaledale was one of the fastest games of the season, featured by very close guarding on both sides and poor luck at basket shooting, the score being very low, 9 to 6 in favor of Klemme.

Get Good Dope From Gibbs

Frank Gibbs, who was home for a few days from Morningside, illustrated well in our gym on Monday night the form of basket shooting which Coach Hockey has been emphasizing. He has been in practice at the college at Morningside and is being groomed for a position on the Varsity team for next year. Frank filled a valuable place on our team last year, which is now being filled by his brother, Donald. Both have the advantage of height and reach, as they are in the six-foot class.

Game With Britt Feb. 14th

We were finally able to secure a game for our boys on a larger floor, not the best night, however, but possibly one that will enable many in Klemme to attend. It is Monday night, Febr. 14, when they will play Britt at Britt.

THE KLEMME TIMES

Thirty-ninth Year—Number 26. KLEMME, IOWA, THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 10, 1926.

CREAMERY HAD A SUCCESSFUL YEAR

ANNUAL MEETING HELD WEDNESDAY AFTERNOON

Annual Report Shows Creamery Had A Good Year

The Board of Directors, officers and shareholders of the Klemme Co-Operative Creamery met at the Idle Hour theatre, Wednesday, Feb. 9th to conduct their annual meeting for the election of officers and a board of directors and take up any business which might come before the meeting. The following are the officers and directors for the year 1927: Herman Stromer, President; W. H. Greimann, Vice President; Valentine Josten, Secretary; J. E. Stille, Treasurer; and the following are the board members: John Bock, Leppo Blank, W. H. Lemke, Wes Heifner and Ben Katter. Mr. Katter is a new member of the board.

The Secretary's report is published in this issue and gives a complete summary of the year's business in all branches of the Creamery.

The Board of Director, the officers, and all connected with the creamery all are very well pleased with the business of the past year. They want to thank the farmers of this comunity for their loyal patronage and support which has helped to make the Klemme Co-operative Creamery one of the biggest and best in Northern Iowa.

The success of the Klemme creamery is a good example of what co-operation can do. The success is attributed by the fine spirit of co-operation between the farmers and the men at the head of the business. Klemme farmers have found that it pays big to patronize the Klemme Creamery. By so doing they have built up a strong institution, have received good prices for their cream and have built up better dairy herds and with a fine dairy herd on a farm it greatly helps to build up the land.

Mr. A. D Gimer, who has been with the creamery a great number of years will continue in the capacity of manager. Mr. Gimer has done much to build up the creamery and assure its continued success. He is recognized as one of the best butter maker in the state of Iowa and has won both Gold and Silver Medals on his prize winning butter. He is also recognized as a very efficient manager as he has made a life study of the business and with the benefit of his knowledge and ability has done much to make the creamery an outstanding success.

Mr. Gimer is ably asisted in the creamery by Paul Miller, a young man who has made wonderful progress under Mr. Gimer's instructions. Paul is the efficient churn man and knows how to produce a high quality butter. He is always cheerful and smiling and says it is fun to turn out three or four churns full of butter a day.

The Officers and Board of Directors are every one of them a live wire, progressive man of good business ability. They are always on the alert to keep abreast of the times to help keep the creamery the very best possible as a good market for the farmer.

Much of the work is handled by Valentine Josten, the secretary. Not only does Val. keep the records in A No. 1 shape at all times, but he takes time to go out and visit the farmers, see new men moving into the community and spreads the news in general that the Klemme Creamery is the best in the world and pays the top prices always. Val. is a real booster. He's so enthusiastic about it that we might say that all he does is talk butter, dream butter and eats butter like a boy eats candy. Val. is always on the job and always right ready to give good service, getting checks out on time and doing anything else needed.

Patrons, and all interested in the creamery should read over the report carefully and we call your attention especially to the fact that Klemme Creamery has a nice sum on hand, despite the fact that they lost money in the State Savings Bank failure. The creamery will, in the future, be enabled to keep paying top prices and they have successfully recovered from the back set they experienced.

The Creamery must also be congratulated on the improvements of the past year. They installed a fine large refrigerator room, automatic weighing scales and a new pump All of these things enable them to produce better butter at a lower cost and to produce the quality demanded by the eastern trade who are willing to pay a handsome price, and which comes right back in larger cream checks to the patrons.

BUYS NEW CHICK OUTFIT FOR HERE

KLEMME CHICK HATCHERY IS SOON READY FOR BUSINESS

Large Buckeye Incubator Installed In Plant Last Week

A fourteen thousand egg Buckeye incubator was installed in the Klemme Chick Hatchery last week. The new machine, which has been set up and is ready to start, has a hot water heating system with an electric circulating system, and is an up-to-date machine in every way.

Those who are not yet acquainted with Klemme's newest industry, we might say that Mr. Arley Blickendorfer, of Garner, is the proprietor. He has a hatchery near Garner, but will take personal charge of the hatchery in Klemme. The Hatchery is located on East Main street in a 22x30 foot building.

Mr. Blickendorfer's plant at Garner has a capacity of 18,000 chicks. Next year he plans to add another machine to each of his plants.

The Klemme Hatchery will start receiving eggs the last of the month The Garner plant will be started first and then the Klemme plant. Both plants will then be run continuously.

The Garner plant was started yesterday, according to Mr. Blickendorfer who has been spending the past few days around Klemme get lined up on flocks and eggs for hatching.

BIG DEAL CLOSED HERE THURSDAY

FARMERS LUMBER COMPANY BOUGHT BY NORTHERN

Northern Lumber Co. Has Seven Yards In Their Line

Last Thursday a business deal was closed whereby the Farmers Lumber Company sold their building, stock and business to the Northern Lumber Co., of this place, who have headquarters at Estherville.

This was one of the biggest business deals closed in Klemme for some time.

The Farmer Lumber Company has been in existence about six years. Before that time it was organized as the Western States Lumber Co., who had headquarters at St. Paul. At that time the company had a string of lumber yards scattered thru-out Iowa, Minnesota and South Dakota. Stock was sold to interested persons in and around Klemme, who later bought the business here and re-organized it as a Farmers Lumber Co. Mr. Olaf Brynteson, former manager for the Western States was retained as manager for the new Company, and has since been it's efficient manager.

The Northern Lumber Co. is an old, well established company and has been in business in Klemme for a great number of years. The Northern has headquarters at Estherville and is under the abe management of Mr. F. J. White, president of the company and well known in Klemme. They have seven yards in their string, at Mason Ciay, Forest City, New Hampton, Gruver, Swea City, Estherville and Klemme. The Klemme yard is one of their finest and best yards and is ably managed by Paul Grange, who has been at the head of it here for the past six or seven years.

Mr. White, of Estherville, and Mr. Shoemaker, of Mason City, were in Klemme all of the past week colsing the deal and invoicing. Mr. C. W. Wiles, of Ames, Mr. Olaf Brynteson and Henry Buseman closed the deal for the Farmers.

ITEMS OF INTEREST FROM OUR SCHOOLS THE PAST WEEK

We are permitting pupils to take home with them this week a brown box containing 20 packages of seeds, to be bought or sold by them at 5 cents a package. The money and seeds unsold are to be returned to the teachers, who deduct the school share of the money and return to the company the balance and packages of seeds unsold. The seeds will grow flowers and vegetables, and are guaranteed to be good. It has not yet been decided just what use our school will make of the money. It may be spent for books or good pictures.

Those who may be in need of vegetable seeds or flower seeds may as well get them of the children and thereby help in a small way the school. However, none feel under any obligation to purchase the seeds of pupils if he can do better elsewhere. We have accepted the offer of the company to distribute their seeds for the small renumeration allowed, 30 per cent of the gross receipts. We shall return those not sold at the company's expense. We beleive many may find the seeds suited to their needs.

Recent visitors at school are Mrs. Frank Kluckhohn, Mrs. Lena Schroeder, Mrs. Marlin Croner, Mrs. Emil Kraus, Mrs. P. M. Wilson, Miss Sarah Lewis, Miss Heginger, and Rev. W. L. Lease.

Rev. Lease spoke twice last week upon invitation to our high school. His talk was not on religion but well worth-while for students. The Seniors were so favorably impressed with him as a speaker they invited him to give the baccalaureate sermon on May 15.

In order to re-inforce our athletic treasury Miss Kidder's home economics instructor, has agreed to prepare doughnuts for those who like them. They will be sold at the game next Friday night between halves.

As Hayfield served our team with a light lunch they will be treated here with the same courtesy.

This is the last game of the season scheduled in basket ball here. We wish the house might be filled to capacity.

Our seconds from our local declamatory contest spoke at Garner in the first round of the county contests, on Tuesday evening of this week, placing third in each class. Garner won two first and Goodell one. Garner won one second place and Hayfield won two. Klemme, therefore, will not be represented at Britt in the final.. Our firsts, including Asa Arnold, Gertrude Johnson and Florence Stokesbary will speak in the first round of the State Contests at Kanawha March 1, instead of Feb. 25 on account of the Basket Ball tournament scheduled on the latter date.

Miss Kidder reports a profit of slightly more than $7.00 from the sale of lunches prepared by her economics class members, who served at the P. T. A. meeting.

There will be a grade tournament at the same time as the High School county tournament at Britt, and a silver cup awarded to the winners. Six schools will enter teams, from Britt, Kanawha, Corwith, Garner, Hayfield and Klemme. The grade boys will begin playing at 3:30 on Friday P. M., Feb. 25th. The High School games will start the same evening at 7:00 o'clock. Two officials will b engaged to handle the games, one referee and one umpire.

SHAMROCKS GO TO BRITT MON. EVE.

KLEMME WINS ANOTHER GAME OF BASKET BALL

Hayfield Plays Here Friday Night; Shamrocks At Britt Monday

Klemme took another decisive victory over Alexander here Friday night, 20 to 4. The visitors were supposed to have a strong team but they quickly crumbled under ahe fast passing and shifty floor work of the Shamrocks and could not even loop one during the first half, so close did Klemme guard when the visitors had the ball. The half ended 13 to 0 in favor of Klemme. The second half was nearly a repetition and Alexander could only gain four points, and the game ended 20 to 4 in favor of the Shamrocks.

Hayfield Here Friday Night

Hayfield will invade the local camp Friday night and will try to even things up for the defeat they suffered at the hands of the Shamrocks earlier in the season. Hayfield has been winning a lot of big games the past few weeks and the game should have plenty of thrills for the fans.

Klemme Will Play At Britt

Coach Hockey has scheduled a game with Britt on their own floor for next Monday night. The county tournament will be played on the Britt floor and Hockey wants his green devils to get used to the large floor before they enter the tournament. Britt has a strong team this year, but according to the dope, the Shamrocks should be able to whip them, even tho handicapped by playing on Britt's own floor. A big delgation of Klemme boosters will accompany the boys to root for them and boost them to victory.

BRITT SHIPPING ASSOCIATION WILL REORGANIZE

One Hundred Farmers Sign Up For New Organization

The Britt Live Stock Shipping Association is reorganizing on the membership agreement basis They have gotten one hundred signers to date and will reorganize for business this week. This has been one of the strong associations of Hancock County. The aim of this move is to put the association on a good business basis and to insure a volume of business that will give service to the members.

STOCK SHIPMENTS LIGHTER THE PAST WEEK

Bad Roads Cause Slump In Local Stock Shipments

Stock shipments Saturday night took a tumble from the high peak they have been holding the past several weeks of a dozen cars and more every week. Stock shipments from here Saturday night were only six car loads.

The Klemme Shipping Association handled two car loads of hogs. C. A. Larsen shipped a car of hogs and a mixed car of cattle and calves. John Larsen was a shipper the past week with a car load of hogs, and Harry Sandry joined the ranks with a car of cattle.

An increase in the number of cars for this wek end was predicted by Depot Agent M. O. Barr.

No doubt the bad roads of the past week acount for the small number of cars shipped from here. However, six car loads is considered a large shipment by most towns in the surrounding territory.

Card Of Thanks

We wish to thank our many friends and relatives for every word of sympathy and act of kindness shown us in our lonely hour of grief over the loss of our darling baby. We also thank the Cradle Roll, Woman's Foreign Missionary Society, friends and relatives for the beautiful flowers contributed.

Basket Social

There will be a Basket Social at Liberty School, Dist. No. 6, Friday Feb. 11. A community play, "The Day Express." Ladies please bring baskets. Frances Haberkamp, teacher. 1tc

LOST LIFE IN BIG WYOMING STORM

FORMER GOODELL MAN VICTIM OF RAGING BLIZZARD

A. M. Shaffer Frozen To Death In Wyoming Storm

The Times is in receipt of a copy of the Eastern Colorado Leader, published at Limon, Colorado by Mr. Howard Africa Mr Africa pent his boyhood days in Goodell where Mr. Shaffer also lived when a boy. Howard Africa was formerly the publisher of the Kanawha Reporter until a few years ago when he moved to Colorado. The account of Mr. Shaffer's death follows:

"A. M. Shaffer, age 42, traveling representative of the Denver Union Stock Yards Company, lost his life in a blizzard that swept over the plains of Wyoming last Friday. He was en route from Green River, Wyo., to his home at Denver and his car stalled in the drifts about five miles from Hanna, Wyo. He drained his car and locked it, and started afoot for Hanna but the fury of the storm was more than he could endure and he gave up his life in the attempt.

"Mr. Shaffer had a number of acquaintances in Limon who will regret to hear of his untimely death. but to the writer his death brings that distressing sorrow that only boyhood friends can experience. Mr. Shaffer and the writer spent our boyhood together in the little town of Goodell, back in Iowa, but up until last March 9th when he came to Limon in the interests of his company to attend a "Hog-Cream-Clover" meeting of the Extension Department of the Agricultural college we had not seen or heard of each other for twenty-three years. Our visit naturally resulted in plans of a closer relationship in the future but fate has decreed otherwise, which leaves us to mourn the untimely death of a friend, lost—found—only to be lost again—forever."

Arley Blickendorfer was in this vicinity Friday on matters of business.

Lesson for February 13

MAKING OUR HOMES CHRISTIAN

LESSON TEXT—Eph. 5:22-6:4.
GOLDEN TEXT—Let us love one another for love is of God.
PRIMARY TOPIC—The Child at Home.
JUNIOR TOPIC—Obedience at Home.
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Unselfishness in the Home.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—How to Make Our Homes Christian.

I. The Importance of the Home.

The oldest and most important institution in the world is the family. It is the foundation stone upon which all other institutions are built. In the measure that the home is kept pure and strong will the church, society and the nation be pure and strong.

II. The Makers of the Home.

The foundation upon which the home is built is marriage, and the makers of the home are the man and the woman united in holy wedlock.

III. The Obligations of the Members of the Home.

1. The husband (Eph. 5:25-32).

(1) The husband is to love his wife (v. 25). Observe—

a. The measure of this love is the love of Christ for His church. Christ loved the church so that He gave Himself for it. His was a self-emptying love. The obligation enjoined then on the husband is to manifest that self-emptying love toward his wife.

b. The purpose of this love (vv. 26, 27).

The purpose of the husband's self-emptying love is the perfection of his wife's character.

c. The ground of this love (vv. 28-30).

After all, the ground of the husband's love for his wife is his own self. He that loveth his wife loveth himself

(2) The husband is to be joined unto his wife (v. 31)

When the time comes for a man to establish a home, he leaves his father and mother and is joined to his wife. This results in the creation of the new unity of society

2. The wife (Eph. 5:22-24).

She is to be subject to her own husband This is not an arbitrary matter, but it is according to the divine arrangement. It is to be "as unto the Lord." It is important to inquire as to what kind of subjection is enjoined. In order to understand this, we must grasp the figure which the apostle introduces of Christ and the church Christ's loving the church is without ulterior motive, as true love "seeketh not its own." Since Christ gave Himself for the church, He thus lifted the church into union with Himself and became to it Lord in the power of His love. The church responds to this love by lovingly recognizing the Lordship of Christ Just as the church graciously comes under the guidance and direction of Jesus Christ does the wife respond to the love of her husband. Headship of the man is the divine order. Headship never suggests "boss-ship" nor governorship. Observe with reference to this subjection—

(a) The motive (v. 22). "As unto the Lord."

(b) The ground (v. 23). "The husband is the head of the wife."

(c) The extent of (v. 24). "In everything."

3. The children (6:1-3).

The divine purpose in the union of the male and the female in the bonds of holy wedlock is the propagation of the race. When God pronounced His benediction upon the first pair He said, "Be fruitful and multiply."

(1) Obedience to parents (v. 1).

The ground of this obedience is the fact that the parents stand in the place of God to the child.

(2) Honor the parents (v. 2).

Obedience to parents is limited to the period of immaturity. When the children take their place in the establishment of new units in society they are no longer under obligation to obey their parents. Two gracious promises are attached to this commandment, that it may be well with thee and that thou mayest live long on the earth.

4. The parents (v. 4).

Doubtless the word "fathers" was intended to be inclusive of the "mothers."

(1) Provoke not your children to wrath.

This doubtless means that in the exercise of parental authority there should be avoidance of irritation.

(2) To bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord.

Nurture doubtless means to educate and admonition means discipline.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

British Troop Movements Check Negotiations With Chinese.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

GREAT BRITAIN, Japan, France and the United States are all desirous of negotiating new treaties with China that will do away with foreign domination and the inequalities of which the Chinese complain. Both the Canton and the Peking governments demand such treaties, but neither will concede that the other is the one with which negotiations should be carried on. Furthermore, the southern government, through Foreign Minister Chen, announced last week that nothing in that way could be done until Great Britain altered its policy of concentrating troops in Shanghai So for the present there is a deadlock, although the British government decided to divert many of the troops to Hongkong, which is British territory and whence they could be transported speedily to Shanghai should the necessity arise As for surrendering the British concessions to the Chinese, London more than intimates this can be easily arranged; but that does not include the foreign part of Shanghai, which is an international quarter though mainly ruled by the British.

Offers of the British foreign office, made to both the southern and the northern Chinese governments, are really very generous and probably will be accepted ultimately. They include recognition of the validity of the modern Chinese law courts for cases brought by British plaintiffs or complaints, and of a reasonable Chinese nationality law; also the acceptance of modern Chinese civil and commercial codes as far as practicable in British courts in China.

The government is prepared to enter arrangements for a modification of the municipal administrations of the British concessions, so as to bring them in line with the administrations of the special Chinese administrations of the former concessions or for their amalgamation with the former concessions now under Chinese control or for transfer of police control of the concession areas to the Chinese authorities. It is conceded that British missionaries should no longer claim the right to purchase land in the interior, and Chinese converts should look to the Chinese law for protection. Missionary, educational, and medical institutions should conform to the Chinese laws.

Delay in the Cantonese-British negotiations concerning administration of the concessions in Hankow and Kiukiang caused a recrudescence of the anti-British demonstrations in the former city with threats of mob violence. It seemed likely all the British subjects there would be compelled to leave, and there was renewed danger for foreigners further up the Yangste river.

Removal of Americans from the interior continued, and our government dispatched more transports and marines for purposes of protection. Among the American refugees arriving in Shanghai last week was a large party from the mission stations in Hunan province.

The expected battles between the Cantonese and the northern China armies had not begun but the troops of Marshal Chang Tso-lin and his allies were reported to be gathering in great numbers in Hunan province, and there was some fighting in Chekiang province, where the Canton troops were strongly placed near Chuchow.

LIBERAL rebels in Nicaragua were decisively defeated by troops of the Diaz government at Rivas and Nadaime on the west coast, and the victory was made more complete by the capture of Gen. Christiano Zapata, one of the most troublesome of the revolutionists. That the cause of Dr. Juan B. Sacasa, chief of the liberals, is hopeless, is the opinion of Colonel Messer, his military adviser, who was a German staff officer in the World war. The colonel asked and obtained from President Diaz a passport to Mexico. Rear Admiral Latimer has informed Sacasa that Washington will never recognize him or his government and advised him to accept the Diaz peace terms. More American marines have arrived at Managua to serve as a permanent guard for the legation.

DISPATCHES from Tampa, Mexico, say an anti-government plot has been discovered in that region and frustrated. Details are withheld but it is stated that several priests and members of the Knights of Columbus are among those arrested. The government has ordered that all unregistered priests must cease religious services.

The war department announced that all rebels who submitted unconditionally before February 10 would be granted amnesty, and as a result many of them are surrendering, especially in the state of Jalisco. Elsewhere, however, there are reports of increased activity on the part of the rebels, with varying results. The conquest of the Yaqui Indians seems not to have been complete, but government forces now control all the northern part of the Bacatetes mountains and the Indians are in flight and without food

ON FEBRUARY 1 the interallied military commission, which for seven years controlled German disarmament, turned the job over to the inquiry committee of the League of Nations and went out of existence. At its final session the eastern frontier question was discussed and Germany promised to demolish twenty-two fortified places around three fortresses, the reichswehr to select seventeen and the allies five. The commission decided that the disarmament clauses of the Versailles treaty had been completely executed by Germany, and the Berlin government at once drafted a note to the allied powers asking immediate evacuation of the occupied territory of the Rhineland. It was presumed this demand would be discussed in March when the foreign ministers meet in Geneva in the League of Nations council, and that Great Britain and Belgium will persuade France to agree to the withdrawal

President von Hindenburg didn't like the presence of Herr Graef, royalist, as minister of justice in the cabinet, selected by Doctor Marx, and appointed Doctor Hergt to that post and Dr. Walter von Keudell as minister of the interior. The Nationalists agreed to get along with three men in the cabinet.

DISREGARDING the budget recommendation and the opposition of the President, the senate, before passing the navy appropriation bill, amended it to provide $1,200,000 for immediate work on the three light cruisers authorized by the act of 1924. The vote on the amendment was 40 to 27. Of the affirmative votes, 24 were cast by Republicans and 25 by Democrats. The negative votes included that of 18 Republicans, 8 Democrats, and 1 Farmer-Labor member

As passed by the senate, the bill also included an amendment providing increased appropriations to carry into effect the first part of the navy's five-year aircraft program. This program calls for a minimum of 313 new planes each year, and the house bill provided for only 155 next year. The measure went to conference, with fair prospects that it would be sent to the President with the cruiser clause included.

OGDEN MILLS of New York was nominated by President Coolidge to be undersecretary of the treasury to succeed Garrard Winston, resigned, and the selection was approved by the senate.

The State department is preparing for the appointment of American ministers to Canada and the Irish Free State, and is consulting with the British government. Secretary Kellogg has been considering Frederick A. Sterling for the Irish post. Mr. Sterling, who is now counselor of the American embassy in London, is fifty years of age and was born in St. Louis, Mo. William Phillips, now ambassador to Belgium, will be the minister to Canada, according to Washington advices.

IN THE course of the hearing of the $31,000,000 Ford tax suit before the board of tax appeals John W. Prentiss, partner in the New York firm of Hornblower and Weeks, testified that Henry and Edsel Ford had thrice refused an offer of one billion dollars for their stock in the Ford company. The offers were made by Hornblower and Weeks in 1924, 1925 and in January of this year. Prentiss said the Ford company was worth $250,000,000 in 1913 and that his company would have been glad to purchase it for $750,000,000 in 1919, when the minority stockholders sold their interests to the Ford family on the basis of a total valuation of $250,000,000. He added that Ford had laughed at an offer of $500,000,000 for the Ford Motor company stock in 1916.

GREAT interest was aroused in England, and almost equally in this country, by the testimony in the libel suit brought by Capt. Peter Wright against Viscount Gladstone. The case really amounted to an effort by the viscount to clear the reputation of his father, William E. Gladstone, from the charges of loose living, made by Wright in one of his books, against the great commoner. Lord Gladstone has denounced the author as a foul-minded liar and coward, and forced his expulsion from a club. Wright testified that various persons had told him of intimacy between Gladstone and Lillie Langtry, Olga Novikoff of Russia and other women. He asserted he still believed what he had written but was now sorry he had put the stories in print. Lillie Langtry, now Lady de Bathe, wired a denial from Monte Carlo, and T. P. O'Connor and Lord Malmesbury contradicted Wright's testimony. It did not appear that the author had much to substantiate his charges against thes dead prime minister, and the jury returned a verdict for Viscount Gladstone.

AFTER hearing the claims of Frank L. Smith of Illinois to a seat in the senate, the senate privileges and elections committee found itself virtually deadlocked on the question whether it should make an immediate report recommending the administering of the oath, as requested by Smith's counsel, or proceed with a further investigation of the contributions to the Smith primary campaign fund by public utilities operators. Several members of the committee took the position that it would be useless to make a partial report since the vote of the senate refusing Smith the oath in advance of an inquiry indicated clearly that it would not accept such a report. Then Smith's lawyer asked that the matter be postponed until February 9, which was done.

UNITED MINE WORKERS OF AMERICA, in session in Indianapolis, decided that in making a new scale for the bituminous miners of Illinois, Indiana, Ohio and western Pennsylvania there should be no question of reduction of the wages now in effect in those fields. The Jacksonville agreement expires March 31, and the operators and miners will meet in Miami February 14 to discuss a new contract.

The mine workers in their convention proceedings continued their policy of suppressing the "reds" and even voted that communists should be excluded from membership hereafter.

PHILIPPINE constabulary stormed and captured the fort of the rebellious Moros on Jolo island, killing or capturing most of the garrison. But before the final attack, Princess Tarhata Kiram, former University of Illinois student, and her husband, chief of the rebels, had slipped away to safety. Six Moro women were among those slain.

AMONG those who died last week was Simeon E. Baldwin, twice governor of Connecticut and an eminent authority on international law. He was one of the founders of the American Bar association. Dr. G. B. Gordon, noted archeologist and director of the University of Pennsylvania museum, died in Philadelphia.

GIVE ATTENTION TO GRAPEVINES

Grapevines will survive many years of neglect, but their cultural requirements are rigid if large crops of quality fruit are to be expected yearly, A. S. Colby, associate chief of pomology at the college of agriculture, University of Illinois, points out. Attention must be given to pruning and training practices, fertilizer needs, cultivation and spraying Seldom has the importance of such attention been brought out more forcibly than during the past season when the grape crop was one of the largest ever harvested in the United States, he said.

"Although the price level for Illinois grapes was slightly lower on the whole than last year, clean, well-grown fruit of good quality, attractively packed, sold at a good profit to the grower where some attention was paid to marketing. The roadside market, especially where a good selection of varieties was grown and where cool or cold storage was used as an aid in extending the marketing season, showed possibilities worthy of further study.

"Vineyards not properly cared for did not produce profitable crops, however. The fruit was small in size, of inferior quality, and in many cases failed to ripen on the vines.

"Of all the needed cultural methods, the control of insects and diseases through spraying, clean culture and sanitation was an extremely important need during the growing season just closed. Some of the most serious insect and fungous pests in the vineyard were the following:

"(1) Grape leaf hoppers. They were abundant this season and caused the leaves to dry up and die early. This reduced the vigor of the vines and led to a consequent deterioration in quality of the fruit.

"(2) Grape root worm. Injury to the roots through the activities of the larval, or immature, stage of this insect has weakened many grapevines, especially of susceptible varieties like Niagara.

"(3) Grape berry moth. In some of the older vineyards this pest was found at work in the fruit clusters. The larva working into and through the grapes renders the bunches unsalable.

"(4) Phylloxera, a tiny root louse which also causes galls to form on the leaves of the vine, is slowly spreading through the commercial grape growing regions on susceptible varieties such as Janesville and Bacchus. Seasonal conditions appear to have some influence in its spread.

"(5) Black rot and mildews, the common fungous diseases, were localized in their appearance, being quite serious in sections where the air drainage was poor."

Three Main Objects in Operation of Pruning

When a man has a superfluous appendix that disturbs him too much, a trained surgeon is called to separate the sufferer from his troublesome member. The surgeon removes nothing except what he thinks is causing the trouble. And yet, no matter how carefully done, there is a certain shock to the patient.

The same principles apply to the actual operation of pruning an old apple tree. What crimes against the tree and the future crops of fruit are committed in the name of pruning!

Pruning has three main objects. The first is to establish a balance between the roots and the top; the second is to thin the fruits so the ones that are borne will be larger; and the third is to so shape the tree that it will weather the storms that are common in the region where the tree is located.

Horticultural Hints

Look out for mice in the orchard and protect the trees.

The most effective way of treating apple borers is to dig them out with a sharp knife or wire.

The best protection for blackberries during the winter is a natural windbreak on the north and west. Rabbits will damage the canes unless the patch is fenced with rabbit-tight fencing.

The average man who plants blackberries tries to prune the bushes a few years and then abandons them to the wild and they soon overrun everything for a rod or two each side of the row. Finally, he gets out of patience and uproots the whole patch.

The best time to set fruit trees is in December and January but the trees should be selected and ordered earlier.

The Bartlett is a pear of high quality and nursery trees of this variety can be supplied by almost any general nurseryman.

It is the opinion of many that the so-called black root of strawberries may be attributed, in part at least, to winter injury. Care should be taken in selecting and using mulching materials.

Clean Kidneys By Drinking Lots of Water

Take Salts to Flush Kidneys If Bladder Bothers or Back Hurts

Eating too much rich food may produce kidney trouble in some form, says a well-known authority, because the acids created excite the kidneys. Then they become overworked, sluggish, clog up and cause all sorts of distress, particularly backache and misery in the kidney region, rheumatic twinges, severe headaches, stomach, constipation, torpid liver, sleeplessness, bladder and urinary irritation.

The moment your back hurts or kidneys aren't acting right, or if bladder bothers you, begin drinking lots of good water and also get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any good pharmacy; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys may then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for years to flush clogged kidneys and stimulate them to normal activity; also to neutralize the acids in the system so that they no longer irritate, thus often relieving bladder disorders.

Jad Salts can not injure anyone; it makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which millions of men and women take now and then to keep the kidneys and urinary tract clean, thus often avoiding serious kidney disorders.

If civilization hasn't common sense enough to save itself, it will have to take the consequences.

Day Devoted to Tender Thoughts

An old idea is that observed February 14 because of an ancient belief that birds began to mate on that date, hence the practice of sending missives of an amatory or satirical nature.

Today's satirists assert that if this is true, the birds that started the habit must have been cuckoos.

Other doubts prevail as to the origin of the name, Saint Valentine.

It is a corruption of the word "gallantin," meaning a lover, a gallant, or a dangler, reference books state when consulted about the venerable old saint, whose name sprang into being about 475 B. C.

Miss Modernity, 1926 sport model, alleges that dangler is the correct word. She, it seems, keeps them angling on a "line," to quote modern slang. Whether or not she lands them is problematical, sheiks and asphalt rabs declare.

Be that as it may, this same reference book sets forth that the name Saint Valentine was selected for the sweethearts' saint, merely because of the euphonious qualities of his name.

This is another source of humorous remarks.

Trace the name from the word "gallantin" to "Saint Valentine" and you have almost all of the various expressions in use today to denote varying degrees and terms applicable to that symptom of heart infection called by mortals "love."

Latin gives us "valens," meaning valiant. Modern folk jestingly remark that a man to be married must be valiant. Write the old geometrical term, "Q.E.D.," meaning "Quod Erat Demonstrandum"—which was to be proved.

Welsh tongues give us the word "gwan" as one of the by-products of "valens," to which the modern, flippant flapper prefixes "aw," and the present day term, "aw-gwan," seems to have been said several hundred years before this era of store-bought laces and rolled socks.

"Gwan," in Welsh, meant guard, ward or vain. Consequently, one's valentine could be considered any or all three of these.

A wife is a ward. Try and keep her sometimes is the difficulty.

She is also a guard, if Monsieur Hen Peck or any of his 567,989,007,938 colleagues are to be heard.

This settles the origin of the date and the origin of the name, since it has been traced backward through the musty pages of some dozens of reference books.

Saint Valentine's observance is an easier thing to ascertain. Chaucer wrote in his "Complaint to My Mortal Foe":

"Seint Valentyne! To you I renovele
My woful lyf, as I can, compleyninge:
Upon your day doth ech foul chose his mate."

Which means, when translated, that he wished to renew his woeful life as he could, complainingly, however; and added for the edification of others that "on this day does each fowl choose its mate."

Shakespeare, in "Hamlet," refers also to Saint Valentine's day. His must have been in these good old days that we hear about so often, judging from the tone of his words, which would indicate that pretty maids hung about desirable bachelors' windows upon this day.

The exact words used by the Bard of Avon are:

"Tomorrow is Saint Valentine's day,
All in the morning betime,
And I a maid at your window—
To be your Valentine."

"Hod dawg," quoth the office sheik, who happened to see this, "them's the days I woulda like to lived. Wouldna hadda crank Ol' Liz up and go get her. She'd have been on hand just after dawn."

The custom of observing the day, however, has fallen into disuse in England, while in France, where it once prevailed on the first Sunday in Lent, the sending of valentines almost has disappeared from folktraits.

But in America Kid Kupid is making a heavy fight. Today is the day when the pink and white creations, bought with carefully hoarded pennies by little Jimmy, will find their way to Betty.

And the day when the older folks also will dream of other days, when they, too, eagerly watched the village mail man, waiting for the tender missives that spelled in capital letters

A VALENTINE

In musty tome, in quiet place,
I found a quaint, old valentine,
A thing of gilt and paper lace,
And lovers' vows in faltering rhyme,
And on the margin faintly trace
The sender's name in faded line.

How easily we smile and sigh
At love and fashions long outgrown,
And yet perchance her heart beat high,
His hopes were valiant as your own—
The girl who laid it carefully by,
The boy whose fate must be unknown.

Feed Beef for Spring Market

Plan Is Favored Because of Low Price of Cottonseed Meal and Hulls.

Because of the low price of cottonseed meal and hulls this winter, winter feeding of beef cattle for the spring market might be a good venture for farmers who are favorably located for the work.

Favorable Fattening Dates.

"The most favorable dates for fattening beef cattle are between November 1 and March 1," says Prof. R. S. Curtis, animal husbandman at the North Carolina State college. "Cattle do better in the winter months and there is not so much danger in feeding the meal. Those who wish to begin this work should do so at once, otherwise the finishing period may extend over into the warm months. Conditions then are less favorable for feeding cottonseed meal, farmers are busy in spring and the manure must be hauled out at an unfavorable time."

Professor Curtis states that when one starts to feed beef cattle with the meal, each animal should be given one pound daily and the amount be gradually increased so that a full ration be given at the end of 30 days. A safe rule to follow for the full ration is one pound of meal to each 100 pounds live weight of animal, using 2½ to 3 pounds of hulls for each pound of cottonseed meal used. Where farm roughages are available the hulls should be decreased. It requires from 90 to 120 days to put a decent finish on beef cattle. Rations should be given them twice daily and water and salt kept before them at all times.

Gain of Beef Animal.

A beef animal should gain from 160 to 200 pounds during a feeding period of 120 days and under average conditions there should be a margin of two cents per pound between the buying and selling price. Most feeders figure that if they can break even and have the manure clear with 80 to 85 per cent of the fertilizing constituents of the meal in it, they have done a good piece of work. The finished animals are usually marketed during the early spring.

Calf Feeds Necessary to Make Rapid Growth

If a calf eight weeks old is to make rapid growth it will be necessary to feed it some milk with grain and hay. If it is impossible to feed it milk it will make a fairy good growth on the following mixture: Shelled corn, 30 pounds; oats, 30 pounds; wheat bran 30 pounds, and linseed meal, 30 pounds. Mix and let the calf have all it will clean up without waste. The oats and corn may also be ground if desired. The calf should have all the bright clover hay it will eat and also all the water it will drink. Alfalfa hay can be fed instead of the clover hay, but it is not so good for young calves as is clover hay, since it is much richer in protein, which in some cases, does not agree with the calf. The calf should have a clean box stall and have plenty of sunlight.

Feed Adult Geese for Eggs Along in February

Adult geese should be fed for eggs about February 1, or so that the goslings will be hatched by the time there is good grass pasture. In feeding for eggs give a mash of equal parts by weight of corn meal, bran, and middlings or low-grade flour with 10 per cent of beef scrap, in the morning, and a feed of corn at night. A constant supply of drinking water should be provided. If geese need grain when not laying, the beef scrap should be left out and the corn meal increased in this ration to three parts.

Cull Out Poor Sows

It will not pay to carry sows through the winter if they are not satisfactory pig raisers. Sows that for any reason are not raising good litters should be fattened and sent to market. Old sows that are past the age of greatest usefulness should be replaced in the breeding herd by good gilts. Blindness, bad udders and sluggish disposition are frequently found with old sows. A sluggish, lazy sow is more apt to injure or kill her pigs.

FARM NOTES

One way to save labor is to put it on the best land.

To keep the loafer hens from eating up the profits why not eat up the loafer hens?

The term unit as applied to fertilizers means 1 per cent or 20 pounds in a ton.

* * *

A farm inventory is the first step in keeping farm accounts. On the average farm it requires about one-half a day to take it.

Many dairymen consider buckwheat middlings equal to gluten feed for milk production. They have about the same total feed value as wheat bran.

The comparatively high prices that have been paid for summer milk for the past few years have had a tendency to make a shortage of winter milk now.

LINCOLN AND MEMENTOS

A collection of relics of Abraham Lincoln, Civil war President, are exhibited by the Chicago Historical society on the birthday of the martyr President, February 12. Among them are the high hat and umbrella so familiar in Lincoln pictures. There is also shown a photograph of the log cabin which he helped his father to build on Goose Nest prairie in Coles county, Illinois.

Acknowledged as Master of Prose

English Critic's Tribute to Abraham Lincoln Well Deserved.

"It is not too much to say of him (Lincoln) that he is among the greatest masters of prose ever produced by the English race."—The (London) Spectator.

It is said that Nathaniel Hawthorne was once asked the secret of his style. That consummate writer replied—no doubt with one of his inscrutable smiles—"It is the result of a great deal of practice. It comes from the desire to tell the simple truth as honestly and vividly as I can." The flawless perfection of Lincoln's style in his noblest utterances eludes a final analysis as completely as the exquisite pages of our great romancer, yet in striving to understand some of the causes of that perfection we may use the hint which Hawthorne has given us.

Lincoln had "a great deal of practice" in the art of speech long before his debates against Douglas made him known to the nation; endless talks in country stores, endless jests in frontier taverns, twenty years of pleading in the Circuit courts, twenty-five years of constant political discussion. His law partner had noted his incessant interest in the precise meaning of words. His reputation for clear statement to a jury was the result of his passion for putting ideas into language "plain enough for any boy to comprehend." Lincoln's mind worked slowly, and he was long in finding the words that exactly expressed his thoughts, but when he had once hit upon the word or phrase he never forgot it. "He read less and thought more than any man in the country," says Herndon with a sort of pride, and it should be remembered that throughout his gradual development as a master of his mother tongue he was preoccupied, not with words for their own sake, but solely with words as the garb of ideas.

Told Truth Simply.

Furthermore, Lincoln's mental characteristics illustrate with singular force the remark of Hawthorne that style is the result of a desire to tell the simple truth as honestly and vividly as one can. He was "Honest Abe"; not, indeed, so innocent and frank and unsophisticated as many people believed; not a man who told all he knew, by any means; but yet a man essentially fair-minded. He looked into the nature of things. He read human nature dispassionately. A man of intense feeling, he was nevertheless, in mature life, at least, without sentimentality. He was not fooled by phrases. As a debater he made no attempt to mislead his audience; as President, when he found frank conversation impossible, he told a humorous story of more or less remote bearing upon the subject in hand. He kept inviolate his mental integrity. And without integrity of mind the would-be master of speech becomes a mere juggler with words. In the letter to Thurlow Weed concerning the second inaugural address, Lincoln described that memorable utterance as "a truth which I thought needed to be told." No description could be more noble.

That Lincoln's gift of humor added much to the vividness and homely naturalness of his style will not be questioned. But the connection between fair-mindedness and humor is not always remembered. The man of true humor—not, of course, the mere joker or wit—sees all sides of a proposition. He recognizes instinctively its defects of proportion, its incongruities. It is the great humorists who have drawn the truest pictures of human life, because their humor was a constant corrective against one-sidedness. Lincoln's mind had the impartiality, the freedom from prejudice, the flexibility of sympathy which belongs to the humorist alone.

Always Purpose in Stories.

It has sometimes been argued that his fondness for story-telling showed a deficient command of language; that, knowing his inability to express his ideas directly, he conveyed them indirectly by an anecdote. It would probably be nearer the truth to say that the stories were a proof of his understanding of the limitations of language. He divided the boundaries of expression through formal speech and knew when a picture, a parable, would best serve his turn.

As great responsibilities came to rest upon him, as the harassing problems of our national life pressed closer and closer, the lonely President grew more clear-eyed and certain of his course. The politician was lost in the statesman. His whole life, indeed, was a process of enfranchisement from selfish and narrow views. He stood at last on a serener height than other men of his epoch, breathing an ampler air, perceiving more truly the eternal realities. And his style changed as the man changed. What he saw and felt at his solitary final post he has in part made known, through a slowly perfected instrument of expression. So transparent is the language of the Gettysburg address and of the second inaugural that one may read through them, as through a window, Lincoln's wise and gentle and unselfish heart. Other praise is needless.—Bliss Perry, in Christian Science Monitor.

Lincoln's Plea to Voters

Every man is said to have his peculiar ambition. Whether it be true or not, I can say, for one, that I have no other so great as that of being truly esteemed by my fellowmen by rendering myself worthy of their esteem. How far I shall succeed in gratifying this ambition is yet to be developed. I am young and unknown to many of you; I was born and have ever remained in the most humble walks of life. I have no wealthy or popular relations or friends to recommend me. My case is thrown exclusively upon the independent voters of the country, and if elected, they will have conferred a favor upon me for which I shall be unremitting in my labors to compensate. But if the good people in this wisdom shall see fit to keep me in the background, I have been too familiar with disappointments to be very much chagrined.—Abraham Lincoln.

Lincoln on "Main Street"

Four immense stone heads of Abraham Lincoln grace the route of the Lincoln highway in as many different states. Each head is 15 feet high and they are mounted at vantage points along the highway. The work was executed by George Barnard, famous sculptor.

She shook her head. "It isn't that," she sobbed at last.

"Then what is it?"

"I've brought you here. And—I—I think it was a horrible thing to do. I—I can't forgive myself."

Laurie groped vaguely amidst sensations of relief and the mental confusion with which, someway, she always filled him.

"You're—all right, aren't you? And you expected me, didn't you?"

"Yes, but— Oh, don't make me talk! Let me cry."

She was crying as she spoke, rackingly, and every sob tore his heart. Again, as so often before, he felt dazed and helpless before the puzzle she presented. Yet, as always, there seemed nothing to do but obey her, since she, and not he, invariably held the key to the strange situations in which she placed him. Her tears made him feel desperate, yet he dared not continue to hold her hands, and he did not know what to say. Rising, but keeping his position beside her, he waited for her to grow calmer, and as he waited he subconsciously took in the room.

It was a big front chamber, furnished as a sitting-room. Its broad windows, with their cushioned window-seats, faced east. Besides the window, it had two exits, the door by which he had entered, and another door, half open, apparently leading into a bedroom. Its comfortable easy-chairs were covered with gay chintz, its curtains were of the same material, its reading-table held books and newspapers, and in its big open fireplace fat logs were blazing. Shaw "did" his prisoners well. Laurie remembered the cigarettes, matches and blankets so thoughtfully provided for himself. Like Shaw's own room, the chamber breathed simple comfort. It was impossible to take in the thought of anything sinister in connection with it until one observed the gagged woman in the corner, and remembered the locked door.

"Well, princess," he said at last, still trying to speak lightly, "this isn't much of a donjon tower, is it?"

Her sobs, hysterical and due to overwrought nerves, had given place to occasional sharp catches of the breath, like those uttered by a little child whose "crying spell" is almost over. She did not speak, but put out her hand to him, and he took it and held it closely, conscious of a deep thrill as the small palm touched his.

"I want to talk to you," he said gently, "but I'd feel a lot more comfortable if our chaperon were a little more remote. Can we put her into this inner room?"

Doris nodded, and he waved the woman across the threshold of the bedroom. She would be safe there. He had observed that the windows of the inner room were still barred and shuttered. Seemingly, in all the big house, this upstairs sitting-room alone had opened its heart to the sun.

"Are you really alone in the house?" he asked.

"Yes; I think so; I'm almost sure of it."

"Then there's no mad rush about leaving?"

"No—I—I think not."

He observed her hesitation but ignored it. He drew two big chairs close to the open fire, and, leading Doris to one, seated her in it, and took the other himself, turning it to face hers. As he did so, she recoiled.

"You look so dreadful!" she explained with a shudder.

"I suppose I do. But forget that and tell me something. When did Shaw leave?"

"Within half an hour of the time he brought me here."

"When is he coming back?"

"Tonight, I think."

"And he's left you here alone, with no one around but this woman?" Laurie asked, incredulously. Here was another situation hard to understand.

"His secretary is somewhere around, a wretched jackal that does what he's told."

"Oh!" This was news. "Where is he?"

"Out in the garage. He has a room there. I heard him say he had no sleep last night, and that he expected to get some today."

Laurie rose.

"I'll take a look around and see where he is," he suggested. "We can't have him catching on to my little visit and telephoning to Shaw, you know."

As he spoke he was walking toward the door that led into the hall, and how he confidently put out his hand and turned the knob. His expression changed. He gave the knob a violent twist, then, setting his shoulder against the jamb, tried to wrench the door open. It did not yield. Doris watching him wide-eyed, was the first to speak.

"Locked?" she whispered.

"Locked," corroborated Laurie. He nodded thoughtfully. Several things, small in themselves, which had puzzled him, were clearing up. Among others, the housekeeper's persistent efforts to gain time were now explained. Shaw had not been so careless as he had seemed. The meek blond secretary with the pursuing eyes and the chloroforming habit was certainly in the house.

CHAPTER XIII

Laurie Checks a Revelation

Laurie shook his head.

"That was rather stupid of him," he remarked, mildly. "It's almost as easy to force open a locked door from the inside as from the outside."

"I know." Doris was again breathless. "But in the meantime he's telephoning to Shaw."

"I don't think so." Laurie, his hands in his pockets, was making a characteristic turn around the room. "What has he to gain by telephoning? Shaw's coming back anyway in a few hours; and in the meantime the secretary has got me safely pocketed, or thinks he has. I have an idea he'll stand pat. You see, he doesn't know about my talent for opening locked doors."

He strolled back to the door as he spoke and examined the lock. Then, appreciatively, he drew from his pocket the screw-driver he had thoughtfully brought from the garage.

"I fancied this might be useful. It will take me just about four minutes to open that door," he announced. "So get on your things and be ready to start in a hurry."

"Do you imagine that we can get away now, in broad daylight?" She seemed dazed by the suggestion.

"Why not? You want to get out of here, don't you?"

"Yes—I—of course I do!"

"You don't seem very sure of it."

Laurie was smiling down at her with his hands still in his pockets, but there was an expression keen, cold, almost but not quite suspicious.

"Yes, but—you don't understand. Shaw has other men on watch, two of them."

"Where?"

"In the grounds. One in the front and the other in the back."

The newcomer mentally digested this unwelcome information.

"If we wait till it's dark," said the girl, "we'll have a better chance."

"Unless Shaw gets back in the meantime." He was still watching her with that new look in his eyes. Then, briskly, he returned to his interest in the doorlock.

"In any case," he casually remarked, "we don't want to be jailed here."

She said no more, but sat watching him as he worked, deftly and silently. In little more than the time he had predicted he opened the door and held it wide.

"Any time you would like to pass out," he invited, then checked himself and vanished in the dimness of the hall. The girl left behind heard the sounds of running feet, of a sharp scuffle, of a few words spoken in a high, excited voice. Then Laurie reentered the room, pushing the secretary before him. At present the youth looked anything but meek. His blond hair was on end, his tie was under one ear, his pale eyes were bright with anger, and he moved spasmodically, propelled by jerks from behind.

"I don't like this young man," said Laurie, conversationally. "I never have. So I'm going to put him where for a few hours he can't annoy us. Is there a good roomy closet on this floor? If there is, kindly lead us to it."

"Say, hold on!" cried the blond youth, in outraged tones. "I'm sick of this."

"Shut up." Laurie shook him gently. "And cheer up. You're going to have a change. Lead on, please."

Thus urged, and further impelled, the secretary obediently led the way to a closet at the far end of the upper hall. It was fairly commodious, and full of garments hanging on pegs and smelling oppressively of camphor. It afforded an electric-light fixture, and Laurie, switching on the light, emphasized this advantage to the reluctant new occupant, who unwisely put up a brief and losing fight on its threshold.

"You may read if you like," Laurie affably suggested, when this had been suppressed. "I'll bring you some magazines. You may even smoke. Mr Shaw and I always treat our prisoners with the utmost courtesy. You don't smoke? Excellent! Safer for the closet, and a fine stand for a worthy young man to take. Now, I'll get the magazines for you."

He did so, and the blond secretary accepted them with a black scowl.

"I'm afraid," observed Laurie regretfully, "he has an ungrateful nature."

He locked the door on the infuriated youth, pocketed the key, and faced Doris, who had followed the brief procession. The little encounter had restored his poise.

"What next?" he asked, placidly.

Her reply was in the nature of a shock.

"I'd like to have you wash up."

He raised his eyebrows.

"And spoil my admirable disguise? However if you insist, I suppose I can get most of the effect again with ashes, if I have to. Where's a bathroom?"

She indicated a door, and returned to her room. He made his ablutions slowly and very thoughtfully. There were elements in this new twist of the situation which did not tally with any of his former hypotheses. Doris, too, was doing some thinking on her own account. When he returned to the sitting-room she wore the air of one who has pondered deeply and has come to a conclusion.

"What do your friends call you?" she abruptly asked.

"All kinds of things," admitted the young man. "I wouldn't dare to repeat some of them." Under the thoughtful regard of her red-brown eyes his manner changed. "My sister calls me Laurie," he added soberly.

"May I?"

"By all means, if you'll promise not to be a sister to me."

"Then—Laurie—"

"I like that," he interrupted.

"So do I. Laurie—I—I'm going to tell you something."

"Yes?" he said.

"Please smoke." Again she was playing for time. "And—and don't look at me," she added, almost harshly. "I—I think I can get it out better if you don't.

His answer was to swing his chair around beside hers, facing the blazing logs, and to take out his case and light a cigarette.

"I'm going to tell you everything," she said in a low tone.

"I'm glad of that."

"I know," she muttered, almost inaudibly. "It's all—horrible. It's infinitely worse than you suspect. And that's why I'm going to tell you the truth, big as the cost may be to me."

"Wait a minute," he interrupted. "Let's get this straight. You're telling me, aren't you, that any revelation you make now will react on you. Is that it?"

"Yes."

"You will be the chief sufferer by it?"

"Yes."

"Will it help you any to have me understand? Will it straighten out the trouble you're in?"

She considered her answer.

"The only help it will give me will be to know that you do understand," she said at last; "to know that—that—you're not suspecting things about me."

"And it will make things hard for you, otherwise, to have me know?" he persisted.

"Yes." This time her answer was prompt. "It will end everything I am trying to do, and destroy what I have already done."

Laurie threw his half-burned cigarette into the fire, as if to lend greater emphasis to his next words.

"That settles it," he announced. "I won't listen to you."

She turned to look at him.

"But you must," she faltered. "I'm all ready to tell you. I've been working myself up to it ever since you came."

"I know. I've watched the process, and I won't have another word." He lit a second cigarette, drew in a mouthful of smoke, and sent it forth again in a series of widening rings. "Your conversation is extremely uninteresting," he explained; "and look at the setting we've got for something romantic and worth while. This cozy room, this roaring fire"—he interrupted himself to glance through the nearest window—"a ripping old snowstorm outside, that's getting worse every minute, and the exhilarating sense that though we're prisoners, we've already taken two perfectly good prisoners of our own; what more could one ask to make an afternoon in the country really pleasant?"

"Doris," He Begged Brokenly, "Don't, Don't Cry!"

He stopped, for she was crying again, and the sight, which had taxed his strength an hour earlier, overtaxed it now. She overwhelmed him like a breaker. He rose, and going close to her, knelt beside her chair.

"Doris," he begged, brokenly. "Don't, don't cry! I can't tell you how it makes me feel. I—I can stand anything but that." He seized her hands and tried to pull them away from her face. "Look at me," he urged. "I've got all sorts of things to say to you, but I won't say them now. This isn't the time or the place. But one thing, at least, I want you to know. I do trust you. I trust you absolutely. And whatever happens, whatever all this incredible tangle may mean, I shall always trust you."

She wiped her eyes and looked into his, more serious in that moment than she had ever seen them.

"I will stop," she promised, with a little catch in her voice. "But please dont think I'm a hysterical fool. I'm not crying because I'm frightened, but because—because—Laurie, you're so splendid!"

"I told you you'd find all sorts of unexpected virtues in me," he lightly announced; and it was the familiar Laurie who smiled down at her. "There are dozens more you don't dream of. I'll reveal them to you guardedly. They're rather overwhelming."

She smiled vaguely at his chatter, but it was plain that she was following her own thoughts.

"The most wonderful thing about you," she said, "is that through this whole experience you've never, for one single instant, been 'heroic.' You're not the kind to 'emote'!"

"Great Scott!" gasped Laurie, startled. "I should hope not!"

He could look at her now, and he did, his heart filled with the satisfying beauty of her. She was still leaning forward a little in the low chair, with her hands unconventionally clasped around one knee, and her eyes staring into the fire. A painter, he reflected, would go mad over the picture she made; and why not? He himself was going mad over it, was even a little light-headed.

She wore again the gown she had worn the first day he saw her, and the memory of that poignant hour intensified the emotion of this one. Taking her in, from the superb masses of hair on her small head to the glittering buckles on her low house-shoes, Laurie knew at last that whoever and whatever this girl might be, she was the one whose companionship through life his hungry heart demanded. He loved her. He would trust her, blindly if he must, but whatever happened fully and for all time.

Boston Had the First Fire Engine in America

The first fire engine introduced into America was received at Boston from England about 247 years ago.

It was a strong cistern of oak placed on wheels, furnished with pumps, air chambers and a suction pipe of strong leather. In case the suction could not be used the water was supplied to the container by buckets passed from hand to hand.

It required three men to work the pump and direct the nozzle. Few improvements were made in the methods of fighting fire until the middle of the last century, when steam fire engines were introduced, the first successful one being used in Cincinnati in 1853, and in a few years most of the larger cities had one or more of these.

It was about this time that the present department system of fire fighting was introduced. But there need be no doubt that the Boston small boys of 1679 took as much delight in running after the engine as does his modern successor—only of course, he did not have to run so fast—nor so far.

Cincinnati seems to have led in the organization of paid departments, as in 1858 that city had 100 firemen on its payrolls, who each received a salary of $60 per month.

The Agile Pianist

In playing Chopin's Etude in E Minor the pianist has to interpret 3,950 musical signs in two and one-half minutes. That means that his eye has to catch correctly and his brain to comprehend clearly more than 1,500 signs a minute, and his fingers have to execute accurately more than 2,000 movements a minute. Since it requires at least a tenth of a second to recognize a letter of print, the musician must have marvelously quick mentality and muscles to perceive and understand his more complicated typographical characters and to translate them into manual motion at such a rate.—Collier's Magazine.

After whole year of ill-health, Mrs. W. G. Ashlock rundown, weak and listless. Now in sparkling health, puts on 10 pounds, is spry and cheery as a girl. Thanks Tanlac for change

Mr. W. G. Ashlock is a railroad man living at 1302 Avenue J, Fort Madison, Iowa. He tells a convincing story of his wife's rapid recovery from a year-long illness.

"She was so played out that even a short train ride exhausted her," he said. "The lightest housework weakened her so that she had to lie down. Her nerves were all frazzled and the daintiest food nauseated her. Nothing seemed to agree with her and all the discomforts of indigestion followed. Severe headaches and dizzy spells were quite frequent. Gas, sour stomach, palpitation and backaches combined to wear her down. After a year of that she was in sorry shape.

"Today she has the health and spirits of a school girl. Her appetite is keen, she sleeps like a log, and goes through her housework singing. Tanlac alone is responsible for the change. Thanks to that wonderful tonic, her health is something to be proud of.

She gained ten pounds while taking it. We both endorse Tanlac heartily.

Pretty Things that are Made at Home

ARE you an embroidery enthusiast, the sort that improves "each shining moment" by having a bit of "pick-up" needlework at hand? If so here's something new to interest you—peasant tea aprons. They are just too picturesque for words in their wide-belted full-skirted quaintness.

The border and belt is a bright blue or yellow or some typical mid-European peasant shade, and of course the embroidery, usually cross-stitch, must be done in typical Bulgarian colors. One ought to be able to secure the complete stamped ready-to-embroider peasant apron from any fancy work department or specialty shop. Be sure to get boil-fast embroidery cotton, for what more discouraging than to put in precious hours of stitch, stitch, stitch only to have them "run" and fade at their first laundering?

The sight of the pretty peasant aprons in this picture ought to inspire the desire to give a tea-party, just as an excuse to wear one of these adorable embroidered affairs, don't you think so?

Speaking of peasant embroidery in general, what a craze there is for it this season! "They say" the recent visit of Queen Marie of Rumania to our "ain countree" accounts for this manifest interest in the handiwork of the Balkan women. At any rate the fashion program for spring and summer emphasizes the importance of peasant frocks, smocked profusely at neckline, waistline and wrist, with full sleeves done in gay native embroidery designs.

So now's the time to begin to "study up" on the art of smocking. A white voile frock done in boil-fast cotton is a treasurable possession and it is worth beginning now to embroider it so as to have it completed ready for wear during the warm summer days to come.

For that matter, the smocked and embroidered blouse can be put to good use this very moment, for they are very fashionable worn with the new short-jacket suits.

Turban and toques of belting ribbon, faille silk, grosgrain and bengaline, all members of the same family, register in the book of fashion as having lately arrived from Paris. Some of them have a touch of straw in acknowledgment of the approach of spring, and all of them are of the clinging close-fitting type. It is remarked that most of these snug types have taken to following the line of the eyebrows. That is, they have fitted forehead bands of wide ribbon which cling to the head, after the manner here pictured.

These handsome silk types are either quite colorful or smartly all black, the latter invariably enlivened with a handsome pin, buckle or ornament. Modes such as are grouped in this picture are particularly likable for the matron. The toque to the left at the top is styled of wide belting, all black. It claims distinction in its cap-like fit about the forehead.

The use of narrow grosgrain ribbon is exploited in the toque topping this group. Its three rows are surmounted by a topaz-jeweled buckle.

Gold cord animates the third hat, which upholds the theory that grosgrain and other silk cap-like shapes with a touch of metal for the trimming answer to the call of the midseason mode.

Crowns of ruffled narrow grosgrain ribbon find their way into many a toque for spring, such as the model to the left.

Color combinations are outstanding in the latest hat arrivals, and blues in their entire range are especially cited. The last handsome model in this picture employs alternating sections of navy and gobelin faille silk.

Sometimes as many as six or seven colors are combined or contrasted in one hat. Martha Callot creates a charming hat for midseason wear, by joining horizontal strips of belting, using four shades of red.

"I AM the state."

The man who said this threw a tremendous accent on the "I." It was a way he had. He went on the theory that he and his personal longings, ambitions and glories were the only things on earth to be considered.

Yet this conceited little man in the big wig was the greatest sovereign of his day. For he was the "Grand Monarch," Louis XIV, king of France.

Richelieu, the cardinal and prime minister, who had done so much for France, and incidentally for himself, was dead. And Louis XIII had died soon after his minister, leaving the throne to his five-year-old son, Louis XIV. Cardinal Mazarin had succeeded Richelieu as prime minister, and managed to embroil France in foreign wars and domestic revolts. He was a miser and forced the boy king to sleep in dirty, tattered sheets and to practice other humiliating petty economies. Fouquet, the minister of finance, took advantage of the unsettled state of the court to rob the royal exchequer. Other abuses flourished unhindered.

Hence, when Mazarin died, in 1661, the twenty-three-year-old Louis decided he had had enough of ministers. When asked to whom various matters of state were henceforth to be referred, he replied: "To me!" Henceforth he reigned as an absolute dictator. France was wrecked by war, discontent and hard times. The treasury was in bad condition. The young monarch found his position no sinecure.

He set to work at once to build up the country, without and within.

At once the Golden age or France began to dawn. By 1678, Louis was everywhere acknowledged to be the most powerful sovereign of Europe. His army was the largest on earth. Industry, literature, architecture and art flourished in his realms as never before. The French court's magnificence was the envy of all nations. Among the famous men who added lustre to Louis' reign and left immortal names to posterity were the poet-dramatists Moliere, Racine and Corneille; the painters, Claude Lorraine and Lebrun; the architect, Mansard, and the preacher, Bossuet. France's armies won everywhere brilliant victories and France's fame and that of its king were world-wide.

Louis' personal character was oddly out of keeping with all this greatness. A man of notoriously bad morals, he was also intolerably vain, arrogant and self-centered. The man who plans only for his own glory can win no permanent success. And so it proved with the grand monarch. He outlived his greatness. As the years went on the men of genius who had contributed so largely to his success began to die off. None of equal mentality replaced them. The beautiful and wicked women who in turn had swayed the court were now only old and wicked. The grand monarch himself was feeling and showing the marks of age and of the life he had led. Nor were his country's affairs in less decadent condition. By an unjust and idiotic act of his own Louis hastened the downfall of the supremacy he had achieved.

Mme. de Maintenon, a woman of intensely religious tendencies but of narrow, limited intellect, attracted the old king's fancy. He secretly married her. Thereafter her influence over him was boundless. At her wish the gay court grew sombre and stupid. The king devoted to piety the hours that had formerly been given to pleasrure. Then, at his wife's urgent plea, he revoked the edict of Nantes. This edict, established by Henry IV, granted religious freedom and many other privileges to the Huguenots (Protestants) throughout France. Its revocation threw the country into panic. By thousands the Huguenots emigrated to Holland, England and America. France suffered incalculable injury from the wholesale departure of these ill-treated people.

Holland, Germany and Spain formed an alliance against France, and Louis learned most keenly that his power was on the wane. Then came the crushing blow of his whole life, in the famous war of the Spanish succession. The king of Spain, dying, bequeathed his throne to the duke of Anjou, Louis' grandson. This, a crowning result of Louis' diplomacy, threatened to unite the kingdoms of France and Spain. But the Archduke Charles disputed Anjou's claim; and Germany, Holland and England, espousing the archduke's cause, combined against Louis. In battle after battle the allies defeated the grand monarch's armies, until, by 1713, France was beaten and humiliated and glad to sue for peace. Here Louis' old-time genius flared up for the moment; for only his statecraft and policy saved his country from dismemberment at this critical moment.

On September 1, 1719, in his seventy-seventh year, Louis XIV died. His greatness had died long before him. He lived to see his country humbled and disgraced through his follies, to see the plain people overburdened and oppressed by taxes to pay for his extravagances; to witness the death of his son and grandson, and to know that the era of panic and semi-anarchy which was at hand was due to his own mistakes and sins. Surely a tolerably severe lesson in the folly of living wholly for one's self and for personal glory.

SENSIBLE FARMERS MAKE MONEY HERE

"ANYONE with small capital that will farm right—with rotation of crops, and keep some cows, will do well here!"

That's what C. B. White says of Suffolk, in the famous Judith Basin of Montana. And he ought to know, because he came here from Illinois about ten years ago with $2500, and is today farming 500 acres.

Mr. White's crops average per acre, 21 bushels of oats, 35 bushels of barley, 25 bushels of corn, 300 bushels of potatoes, and 2½ tons of alfalfa. Besides this he has a garden where he raises more and better vegetables than he did in the East.

Cattle, hogs, turkeys, chickens are all raised easily and do well. His milch cows average him $200 a year each, and bring him in almost as much as his whole capital when he first started.

"I like it here much better than Illinois," says Mr. White, "and the opportunities are much better."

If you want more information about Montana or North and South Dakota, and its fine opportunities for industrious farmers, write Mr. H F. Hunter, Agricultural Agent, C M. & St. P. Rwy, Room 796, Union Station, Chicago, Ill.

WIN FROM HAYFIELD BUT LOST TO BRITT

SHAMROCKS WIN SECOND FAST GAME FROM HAYFIELD

Game With Britt Good Experience For County Tournament

During the past week Klemme broke even in basket ball, winning one game and loosing their second game of the season.

The Klemme Shamrocks won in a fast game from Hayfield on the local floor in one of the best games played here this season, by one point, the score being 22 to 21 in favor of Klemme.

Near the beginning of the season Klemme beat Hayfield by one point on their own floor. No other team has beaten Hayfield on their own floor for the past year. The game here Friday night was close from start to finish, both teams showing up well. The first quarter Klemme led 9 to 7, the second quarter Hayfield had a one point lead in a 14-13 score. The third quarter stood 19 to 20 in favor of Hayfield and it was still nobody's game in the last quarter and with but a few minutes to play Hayfield lead 21 to 19. About that time the game was tight but was won by Klemme on free throws and with the score chalked up 21 to 20 in favor of Hayfield Turgasen made good a fould, which was followed by Tanner, tying the score on the first and getting one ahead on the second, winning the game for Klemme.

Gave Britt Fast Work Out

Monday night the Shamrocks took on Britt on their own floor, the largest in the county and the biggest team of beef in the county for play mates. There was not much hopes of winning the game but Coach Hockey wanted to give the boys some training on the Britt floor before the county tournament came off. The game will put Klemme in better shape for the tournament as a result of the game.

Britt has a team that will go over the six foot mark and were a great contrast to our comparatively small boys. The first half of the game had plenty of thrills and gave the big Britt boys a scare when Klemme held them for even breaks and better. Britt copped the first quarter 5 to 2. Klemme closed the half leading 8 to 6. Britt came back strong in the third and the game seesawed and tied several times and was at a stand still for a few minutes tied 12 to 12. Britt made a break and got into a long basket shooting streak that the Shamrocks could not stop and ran the score up to 22 to 12 at the end of the third quarter. The last quarter looked like a repetition of the third when Britt continued to climb up to 31. A substitution change for Klemme seemed to break the spell when the Shamrocks took a last minute spurt and began shooting baskets, running their points up to 18 on a few last plays, while Britt was only able to land one more filed goal. However, the Shamrocks recovered too late and Britt won 33 to 18.

The game was far better than the score would indicate. As far as fast floor passing, pivoting and shiftiness was concerned, the Shamrocks made the best showing. Britt is dressed with the tallest, heaviest boys in the county of any basket ball team, and their heighth stood them well against the fast Shamrocks.

It was a good game and the boys played well. Some Britt people remarked that Klemme gave them the best game they have had this year.

Last Game Friday Night

Klemme will play their last game scheduled before the tournament when they play Ventura there Friday night. This should be a good game as Ventura gave the Shamrocks a good fast game here a few weeks ago.

Let's take as big crowd along with the team as went to Britt Monday night, which was the biggest out-of-town crowd Britt has had this year.

Mrs. Gee came up from Goodell for a visit with her daughter, Mrs. Graham, while Chris was in Des Moines attending the auto show.

TEN CARS STOCK SHIPPED THE PAST WEEK

Klemme Shipping Association Again Lead With Five Cars

Live stock shipments again picked up and business was brisk at the local yards, when stock shipments for the week tallied up ten cars.

Saturday night the Klemme Shipping Association handled five car loads of stock, consisting of three car loads of hogs and two car loads of cattle.

Some weeks ago the Linden Ranch shipped in three car loads of western cattle for fattening. These three car loads were again shipped Saturday night for the Chicago markets.

C. A. Larsen shipped one car load of hogs Friday night, and another car load Monday night.

IDLE HOUR THEATRE PROGRAM FOR THIS WEEK

For Saturday night Manager M. O. Barr has booked a popular western actor, Fred Thompson in "Hands Across The Border." This is one of Thompson's best pictures; and the comedy in connection is a ripsnorter.

For Wednesday, Feb. 23 the feature picture will be "Four Girls Romance," with the comedy, "He Couldn't Help It."

A big picture is coming for Saturday, Feb. 26th, "King of the Turf."

And, by the way, those who missed out on 'Ella Cindres' Saturday night missed a good one. However, Manager Barr had a full house and there was standing room only. He is putting on some very good shows.

JAN. SHIPMENTS REACH 47 CARS

FORTY SEVEN CAR LOADS OF LIVE STOCW SHIPPED IN JAN.

January Was Good Month For Stock Shipments Out Of Klemme

Going through the January files of The Times we found that there were forty seven car loads of live stock shipped out of the local yards during the month.

Classifying the shipments we find that there were twenty-nine car loads of hogs, sixteen car loads of cattle and one car load of sheep.

This is more than twice the number of cars shipped out from any nearby town and shows that Klemme is no doubt the best live stock market in this vicinity and that a lot of stock is brought here because of the good prices paid by the Klemme buyers.

In addition to the outgoing stock shipments, there were six or seven car loads of feeding cattle shipped into the local yards, which are now being fattened for later shipment.

Jan. 28th was the best week of the month when fifteen car loads were shipped, consisting of eight car loads of hogs and seven car loads of cattle. Jan. 15 was second with ten loads consisting of five cars each of hogs and cattle. Jan. 22 was a close third with nine car loads, consisting of seven car loads of hogs and two car loads of cattle. Jan. 1 was the lowest week with but five car loads, consisting of 1 sheep, one cattle and three cars of hogs. Jan. 8th was two car loads better, consisting of six car loads of hogs and one car of cattle.

Klemme Actors Will Appear In All Character Roles

"That's One On Bill!" is the title of the Klemme Legion-Auxiliary big three act comedy that will be given at the Idle Hour Theatre Tuesday evening, February 22nd.

The cast of characters and program appears in this issue and the line-up looks good for a real show. Music will be furnished by a three piece orchestra with Mrs. S. A. Harvey at the piano, Verner Turgasen on the Sax and E. G. Gary strumming his banjo. Wm. Lau will give a number of old poula- numbers that will appeal to the old-timers on his accordian.

And, don't forget to bring a few dimes as the Camp Fire girls will sell ten-cent sacks of home made candy.

The play is sure to suit everyone and has plenty of good comedy too. And, everybody likes to see Klemme people act and we predict a full house will turn out for this home talent.

Miss Stoner, high school principal, has been coaching the play, and those who have been fortunate enough to peek in on the practices say the people taking part act like old-timers on the stage.

The admission is within reach of all—35 cents for adults and 15 cents for children. Reserved seats are a dime more.

FALSE ECONOMY TO DELAY TUBERCULOSIS ERADICATION

Des Moines, Iowa, February 17.—"It would be false economy for Iowa farmers to not continue to make rapid progress in the cleaning up of bovine tuberculosis," states M. G. Thornburg, Secretary of Agriculture "The history of the spread of bovine tuberculosis shows that unless it is tamped out, that it gradaully grow worse, making it cost more and more to clean up.

"Consumers thruout the east who absorb a large portion of our live stock products, as well as consumers here at home, are active in their demands for products from tuberculin tested animals. I recently received a letter from a large eastern dealer wanting the names of creameries in Iowa that produce butter in accredited counties.

"From the standpoint of human health or efficient live stock production, the eradication of bovine tuberculosis is the biggest project that has been undertaken in Iowa during recent years," states Mr. Thornburg. "Iowa is making rapid progress at a comparitively small cost as ompared to other states that have allowed the disease to spread until a larger percentage of their cattle are affected. It would be false economy if anything was done that would slow up the present progress."

P. T. A. AND BOARD TO BUY NEW STAGE CURTAIN

New Modern Track Curtain To Be Installed Soon

Our P. T. A. Committee has been able to induce our School Board to add enough to what the P. T. A. has on hand and with the total buy a rich Sunfast Velour Curtain for our High School Stage. The curtain will be of the modern type, operating on a transverse track instead of on a roller as the older type do. The order has been placed with the Universal Scenic Studio, Inc., of St. Paul, Minn. They agree to have it ready for us within two weeks.

Win One And Lose One Game

Our boys defeated Hayfield in a close game last Friday night but lost to Britt on Monday night by a decisive score. We did not feel our chances were very bright for a victory over Britt on their large floor. Our boys have been compelled to play on small floors all season and Britt has been playing on large floors and with a high ceiling comparable to their own. This was an advantage plainly in their favor.

Declamatory Contests

On Wednesday evening of this week the Final County Declamatory Contest will be held at Britt. Silver Loving Cups will be awarded to the schools winning first places. Klemme is out of the running as none of our contestants were able to place in the Sub-County Contest.

The First State Contest in which Klemme will participate will be held at Kanawha, March 1. Gertrude Johnson, Asa Arnold and Florence Stokesbary will represent us there on that date.

Other School News Items

Our Grades 3 to 8 inclusive are now using some new music readers provided by our Board and can be expected to make more improvement in vocal music than could de done previously.

We understand several of our townsmen availed themselves of the opportunity to use the gymnasium for play on last Thursday night. Next Thursday night is again mens' night.

Our basket ball team will go to Ventura for a fast and furious game there on Friday night of this week. We expect the same two hundred fifty men, women and youngsters to accompany them and "yell their heads off" for our "Shifty Shamrocks" or "Green Devils." Unless they do, we may lose.

We appreciate the large delegation that backed us at Britt last Monday evening. Without them the score might have been much more unfavorable to our players. Our lads gave their best and none blame them for losing. Both teams played a clean game but Britt seemed to know better than Klemme where the basket was, and repeatedly sank therein the sphere.

Let everyone begin now to plan their work and activity so they can be at Britt on Feb. 25 and 26. We believe it will be hard to find a County Tournament playing as many good teams as will be seen in action there on those dates.

DES MOINES DAILIES CONSOLIDATED INTO ONE PAPER

Large Merger Deal Closed Saturday At Des Moines

Des Moines, owa, February 17.—The Des Moines Evening Tribune, the evening newspaper published by the Register and Tribune Company, and The Des Moines Capital, have been consolidated into one newspaper known as The Tribune-Capital, effective February 14th.

The consolidation was arranged last Saturday by John Cowles, associate publisher of The Register and Tribune, and Lafayette Young, Jr. publisher of The Capital.

This merger, it was announced, is in line with the clear trend toward fewer, larger and better newspapers, which has brought about hundreds of important newspaper consolidations in the last few years.

The Tribune was established 18 years ago. The Capital was one of the long established papers in the mid-west.

TEAMS DRAWN FOR HANCOCK TOURNY

KLEMME DREW GARNER FOR OPENING GAME

Fast Games Slated For Annual Hancock County Tournament

All of the coaches from the various high schools in the county met at Britt last night to draw and pair teams for the annual county tournament The result of the drawing is as follows:

Klemme and Garner, will play the first game of the tournament at the Britt High School gymnasium at about 7:00 p m Friday evening, Feb 25th.

Hayfield and Corwith will battle at about 8:00 o'clock Friday evening.

Kanawha and Crystal Lake at about 9:00 o'clock.

Brit drew the "bye" and does not play in the preliminary.

SEMI-FINALS

Saturday afternoon Britt will play the winner of the Garner and Klemme game.

For the second afternoon game the winners of the Hayfield-Corwith and Kanawha-Crystal Lake game will play.

FINALS

Saturday evening the winners of the Semi-Finals will battle their way to the county championship.

The teams are well paired off and the games are expected to be close. Klemme has beaten Garner in both games this year and should be able to beat them in the first county round. This will pair Britt and Klemme for the semi-finals.

It's a toss-up between Hayfield and Corwith, perhaps with a slight advantage to Hayfield. Kanawha should be an easy victory over Crystal Lake. For the second round in the semi-finals it will be between either Corwith and Hayfield against Kanawha. In any event Kanawha stands a poor chance of winning Klemme proved themselves hard customers at Britt Monday night and Britt will have to play hard to stay for the finals. Providing that Klemme beats Britt they will then go against either Corwith or Hayfield. They have beaten Hayfield twice, but have not played with Corwith, altohugh Klemme's record compare's favorably with Corwith's this year. If Klemme can beat Britt the tournament is as good as won. Let's hope so.

The Klemme 8th Grade drew the Hayfield quintet for the first round at 4:00 p m. Friday, Feb 25th.

WASHINGTON CROSSING THE DELAWARE
Painting by Emanuel Leutze

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

THE whole history of the American Revolution revolves around one man—George Washington.

So it was eminently fitting that the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of that tremendous event in the history of the world should find the nation's interest centered again on that man. What were the outstanding events in the year 1926, the anniversary of the high point in the American war for independence? Certainly it was not the sesquicentennial celebration in the city where the Declaration of Independence was signed, for that celebration was a dismal failure. Undoubtedly the outstanding events were those which put upon the lips of all Americans once more the name of Washington and caused them to take part in a discussion, which has not yet ended, as to the "real Washington."

So 1926 will go down in history, not only as the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the Declaration of Independence, but also as the year in which an immense store of information was added to the available Washingtoniana and which promises well for further accession to that national heritage in 1927. As the result of the events of 1926, we come to another celebration of Washington's birthday with our knowledge of him enriched and, despite—or perhaps, because of—all the controversy that has raged over what was or was not the "real Washington," a better appreciation of just how much we owe to the man we call "The Father of His Country."

An arrangement of the 1926 Washingtoniana items in chronological order rather than attempting to consider them on the basis of relative importance shows the curious fact that this man, dead these 127 years, started off the year as a newspaper "headliner." This came about when Rupert Hughes, the novelist, in January gave an address before the Sons of the American Revolution in the national capital and not only aroused the ire of that organization, but stirred up a nation-wide controversy, when he told the truth about Washington, as he saw the truth. Although it turned out later that the speaker was misquoted, even at that some of his statements were too strong for some persons to accept without protest. So the tempest in a teapot, which the affair seemed to be, took on greater proportions as Hughes was successively attacked and defended and others took a hand in the row.

The net result was that, paradoxical as it may sound, George Washington became a "national figure" once more, at least so far as the newspapers were concerned and one New York daily pointed out that Washington's birthday was celebrated as never before because of Hughes' effort to represent Washington "as a man and not a statue."

One event of considerable significance connected with the celebration of Washington's birthday was the "rediscovery" of what has been termed the last portrait made of Washington, which is reproduced with this article. The story of this portrait is a romantic one. In 1793 a twenty-three-year-old Frenchman named Charles Balthazar Julien Fevert de St. Memin came to America from the city of Dijon and settled in Philadelphia. There he invented what he called a "physionotrace and pantagraph" with which he was enabled to outline a human head on paper with mathematical exactness, reducing or enlarging it to any size for reproduction on a copper plate. The original was finished on crayon and the copper in mezzotint.

In 1798 Washington went to Philadelphia and while there he sat for the Frenchman for what is said to have been his last portrait. There is authentic record of the fact that St. Memin loaned the original pantagraphic portrait to Gilbert Stuart, the most famous of all painters of Washington. St. Memin never recovered the portrait from Stuart, for some unknown reason, and Stuart gave it to J. Carson Brevoort of Brooklyn, N. Y. Brevoort, it seems, lent some money to Rev. J. D. Phillip, an Episcopal minister of Brooklyn, taking as security the pastor's library. In some way the portrait came into Phillip's possession and he passed it on to a nephew, J. S. Phillip, who, probably little realizing its value, gave it to the wife of his son, George W. F. Phillip.

In 1880 the Phillip family removed from Brooklyn to Riverside, Ill., and George Phillip went into the fuel business in Lombard, Ill. A few years later an aunt from Brooklyn came to visit them and spoke of the St. Memin portrait. Some time after this McClure's Magazine contained a story about the St. Memin portrait of Washington and made the statement that the original had been lost. Whereupon the sons of George W. F. Phillip, remembering their aunt's statement that a St. Memin portrait was owned in their family, began searching for it in the attic of their home and found the precious pantagraph. Its authenticity was established by officials of the Chicago Historical society. That was a number of years ago, but so far as is known the portrait was never reproduced in print until it appeared in a Chicago newspaper upon the occasion of Washington's birthday, 1926.

LAST PORTRAIT OF WASHINGTON

Although the anniversary of a number of Revolutionary events during the year 1926 served to bring about mention of Washington's name from time to time, it was not until September that the controversy which arose from Hughes' speech was revived. This came about with the publication of two books—"George Washington—The Image and the Man," by W. E. Woodward (Boni and Liveright, N. Y.) and "George Washington—The Human Being and the Hero, 1732—1762," by Rupert Hughes (William Morrow & Co., N. Y.). While Hughes' biography dealt with only the first thirty years of Washington's life, Woodward's covered his whole life from 1732 to 1799. The aim of both was to reveal the "real Washington," but by widely different methods. Hughes, covering less than half of Washington's life, backed up his statements with documentary authority, his effort being, as he stated, to "let Washington tell his own story as fully as possible in his own words." Woodward's book was a study not only of Washington, but more broadly of the era in which Washington lived, and it was more of a personal interpretation of the man and his time than the other. He interpreted Washington more as a business man than in any other role and asserted that Washington is not really the least understood of our great men, but the best understood, because "he was the American common denominator, the average man deified and raised to the nth power. . . . Here we see the typical captain of industry attitude."

The effect of these two books, both attempting to substitute the living, breathing Washington for the marble statue Washington, was to revive interest in the whole subject and whatever the verdict of critics on both volumes may be, it is perhaps not too much to say that the publication of the Woodward and the Hughes biographies may well be regarded as among the outstanding events in relation to the Washingtoniana of 1926.

If there is one which may challenge that claim it is the celebration which took place in Trenton, N. J., last December when the anniversary of the battle of Trenton was observed. With President and Mrs. Coolidge and thirteen governors, the present executives of the original colonies, as their guests, the citizens of the New Jersey capital staged a series of mass meetings, parades and special church services in keeping with the importance of the winter night a hundred and fifty years ago when Washington and his continentals made their famous crossing of the Delaware to defeat the Hessians and to present to the struggling young Republic the finest Christmas gift that it could possibly desire—a victory at an hour when the hope for the cause of independence seemed dim.

Whatever the new school of historians may eventually accomplish in showing that Washington was not the demigod that he has so often been painted, but that he was a human being with human frailties—that is to say, however much they may take away from some of us our belief that he was a paragon of all the virtues—, it is doubtful if they will ever be able even if they desire it, to dim the glory of Washington, the military leader. And in all of his record there is no more brilliant achievement than that which celebrated at Trenton in December or that other victory in the same campaign, the battle of Princeton, which was appropriately observed on January 3 of this year.

Of this campaign Cyrus Townsend Brady has written "There are three things which determine the relative values of military enterprises—the idea, the method and the result. From these points of view, Washington's Trenton and Princeton campaign ranks among the most brilliant in history, and its conception and the manner of its prosecution stamp him as a soldier of the first order. The importance of the end aimed at, and attained in large measure, can hardly be overstated. Although neither of the engagements which took place in carrying out the great idea of it rose to the dignity of a battle, but must rather be classed as heavy skirmishes, I regard it as one of those decisive operations which are turning points in history. Had the results been other than they were, the whole course of the world would have been altered. In spite of the apparent insignificance of the operations, the incidents of the campaign, when the material with which it was worked out is considered, are as fraught with interest, as full of value to the soldier, and evidence as much greatness in the leader, as if Washington had held under his command a hundred thousand men, and the little combats had been as great and as sanguinary as the gigantic batles of larger wars and later days. It is not numbers, but strategy, tactics, personal courage, and things achieved, by which we judge the soldier.

"In these operations, which certainly represented the culminating period of his career, Washington displayed a dash and daring like that of Napoleon in his early Italian campaigns, an inflexible capacity of resistance and recuperation which suggests the great Frederick in his days of adversity, and a determined, dogged, not-to-be denied persistence which calls to mind the indomitable Grant. The fate of the Revolution was determined right then and there. More than at any other given period of that great conflict, the cause of human liberty hung in the trembling balance on that wild December night."

Treat Oats for Smut Control

Good Plan to Sprinkle Seed With Weak Solution of Formalin.

The smut diseases of oats can be largely controlled by treating the seed before planting with a weak solution of formalin. The treatment will insure clean oats and bigger yields. There are nine important points to observe when treating the oats and these as outlined by G. W. Fant, extension plant disease specialist at North Carolina State college, are as follows:

1. Seed to be treated should be placed on a hard-surface floor (concrete or wood) where the moisture from the treating solution will not be injurious.

Solution Required.

2. One-half gallon of treating solution is required to treat each bushel of grain.

3. The amount of solution needed for treating the seed is calculated from the amount of seed to be treated.

4. Prepare the solution in the proportion of 1 pint of commercial formalin to 40 gallons of water. If, for instance, 10 bushels of seed are to be treated, 5 gallons of treating solution will be needed. Prepare this by adding ⅛ pint of commercial formalin to 5 gallons of water (proportion the pint to 40 gallons water).

Sprinkle on Grain.

5. The solution should be sprinkled on the grain as it is shoveled from one pile to another. Use the ordinary sprinkling can and scoop shovel for this purpose. See that all the grain is wet in the sprinkling.

6. After the sprinkling is over, stir the seed with a shovel so as to insure all the grain being wet.

7. Cover with sacks for one to two hours in order to hold the fumes. Then spread the seed out in the air to dry.

8. The treating solution grows stronger with age because of the evaporation of water. Do not use a solution which has been allowed to stand for several days.

9. Make allowance for the swelling of the grain by regulating the drill so as to sow the proper amount per acre.

Five Essential Parts Complete Hen's Ration

A complete ration consists of five essential parts:

1. Grains and their by-products. 2. A protein concentrate, as skim milk, buttermilk, meat scraps, vegetable oil meals. 3. Minerals, as supplied by milk, meat scraps, bone meal, or a mineral mixture. 4. Vitamines, as found in yellow corn, green feed, and immature cut clover or alfalfa hay. 5. The anti-rachitic factor, as supplied by direct sunlight, cod-liver oil, and to some extent by green feed and immature cut clover or alfalfa hay.

When it comes to the vitamines and anti-rachitic factor the path is straight and narrow; either the birds must be permitted out of doors where they can get direct sunlight and green feed, or if confined indoors, cabbage or alfalfa or clover hay must be fed, and as much direct sunlight admitted into the house as possible, if profitable egg production is to be maintained and high mortality of birds is to be prevented.

Wise Poultry Breeder Prepares for Spring

The wise poultry breeder will now be prepared for the spring months. It is advisable to breed from hens that have completed at least one year's lay.

Hens must be good producers to pass rigid culling; broody individuals can be marked as pullets and discarded for breeding; hens must be physically strong to lay heavily in their pullet year; undesirable characteristics can be detected during the first year and these individuals left out of the breeding pens; hens usually produce larger eggs than pullets in the spring, and hence produce larger and better chicks.

The ideal fowl for the breeding flock should be early maturing, good size for the breed, have a short and broad head, bright red comb, bright eyes, well-shaped body and standard feathering for the breed.

Good for Chick Mash

Ground oats and bran would be good ingredients for a chick mash, especially if you sifted the hulls out of the oats which can be done by sifting through mosquito netting. Rolled oats are also acceptable, but should be rubbed in the hands to break the flakes. It would be better to use steel-cut oats. The addition of corn meal to the mash would make the mash a little more palatable and would improve it. Keep it before the chicks all the time.

Protect Young Trees

Young fruit trees must be protected from rabbits at all seasons of the year and the best method is to use a guard of galvanized wire screening or hardware cloth about six inches in diameter around the tree. Force it into the ground two or three inches and allow it to extend up the trunk at least two feet. This will guard against mice as well as rabbits. The use of cloth, paper, or corn stalks is undesirable as insects accumulate under them and they harbor rodents.

TAFFETA POPULAR FOR SPRING; WASHABLE DRESSES FOR TOTS

LOTS of taffeta, says the style forecaster. For the young girl plaid taffetas for daytime wear, with "delicious" tones and tints for evening wear are forespoken. For every age and complexion, from flapper to dowager, the mode prescribes black taffetas, also blue in every conceivable degree from navy, which is outstanding in this season's style program, to palest tints. Flowered taffetas, too, "they say," are coming in.

First and foremost among newest colors is imperial jade, a green comparable to the well-known kelly; monkeyskin, which is a delicate pink; mother goose, an ivory tint, and alstine, a lovely light blue—and so the list continues from one adorable tone to another.

Taffeta lends itself delightfully to the compose theme, which is, perhaps, the mode's greatest hobby at present. Just now it is the proper thing to combine plaid taffeta with solid-colored crepe. A glance at the picture will leave no doubt in the mind as to the tremendous vogue awaiting a compose such as this.

In this model the blouse is navy crepe, the skirt taffeta plaided and plaited to perfection. The plaid ties at the wrist are just too cunning for words. As to the handsome necktie, it's the sort youth adores. And the pockets! Have you noticed that they are of a conical shape and that they are positioned at an angle? Well, pockets are indulging in all sorts of style "stunts" this season just such as this.

Short jackets of plain taffeta posed over frocks or charmingly patterned printed fabrics, also crepe dresses complemented by taffeta jackets in bayadere stripes share interest with dresses of fine checked taffetas, the latter to be worn with coats of solid-colored taffeta.

According to the arithmetic of the mode, either for adults or wee tots, a plain white or solid-colored wash-goods fabric added to fancy printed or otherwise figured dimity, linen, voile, percale or gingham equals the latest style combination. It is really an outstanding trend of the vogue—a plain and a fancy in compose. So see to it, in scanning the bargain counters for remnants for the making of the "kiddies'" school and vacation dresses, that for every gay print there be a yard or more of plain purchased for trimming or vice versa.

Little girls' ginghams and English prints are being collared, cuffed and pocketed with white pique or linen while their flowered voiles, swisses and organdies have sheer white embellishments of every whimsical sort. That is how it happens that the cunning little blue-checked percale dress in the picture has pockets of white pique with matching collar and wrist bands. With the aid of a wee bit of hand embroidery the pockets are made to resemble little baskets with handles. It is just such clever touches as these novel basket-pockets which distinguish the new spring and summer frocks for tots.

A wash-goods material exciting keen interest this season is printed linen. It is to be had in conventional patterns such as checks, stripes and dots, also in quaint flowered effects.

Two and three-tone effects are also effectively introduced in tots' frocks, such as, for instance, bandings of linen in several shades trimming a plain linen.

Practical, Youthful and Chic.

More "Nature Trails"

Nature trails, specially laid out plans in state parks and similar areas, with bits of scientific information printed on tags fastened to trees and flowers and animal homes for the benefit of those who walk them, are becoming increasingly popular in the United States, according to Dr. Frank E. Lutz of the American Museum of Natural History. Doctor Lutz originated the system in a nature trail which he laid out in the Palisades Interstate park at Tuxedo, N. Y., and has assisted the national park service in getting similar trails marked in Yellowstone and other national parks in the West. He states that he expects 200 nature trails to be in operation during the coming summer.

DR. W. B. CALDWELL AT THE AGE OF 83

"Purges" and "Physics" Bad for Old Folks

While Dr. W. B. Caldwell, of Monticello, Ill., a practicing physician for 47 years, knew that constipation was the curse of advancing age, he did not believe that a "purge" or "physic" every little while was necessary.

To him, it seemed cruel that so many constipated old people had to be kept constantly "stirred up" and half sick by taking cathartic pills, tablets, salts, calomel and nasty oils.

In Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin he discovered a laxative which helps to "regulate" the bowels of old folks. Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin not only causes a gentle, easy bowel movement but each dose helps to strengthen the bowel muscles, shortly establishing natural "regularity." It never gripes, sickens, or upsets the system. Besides, it is absolutely harmless and pleasant to take.

"Feel Like a Schoolboy" Says Dubuque Door Cutter

Almost forced to quit work Ray Roggensack, of Carr, Ryder and Adams, Dubuque, Ia., is now strong and happy. He lives at 2024 White Street, and credits Tanlac with present fine condition

Operating a door cutting machine calls for a clear head and nerve control. It's a man's job. So when Ray Roggensack's health began to break he had a problem to face. "Nervousness and dizzy spells handicapped me at my work. To straighten up after bending was torture, owing to the violent pain in my back. My appetite was so poor that I often went to work weak, unable to eat my breakfast. And at night I tossed and turned from side to side, too nervous to sleep." These are his own words.

"Night, noon and morning, I had heartburn and gas pains, which kept me in misery, and after a year of those conditions I was quite thin and rundown. Since trying Tanlac, I've put on ten pounds, eat, sleep and feel normally. In fact, I now have the appetite and digestion of a schoolboy and the heaviest day's work doesn't bother me. Running a door cutting machine is now a pleasure instead of the drudgery it used to be. I'll praise and recommend Tanlac as long as I live."

Tanlac is nature's own tonic and body builder, made from roots, herbs and barks. If you're rundown and weak, get a trial bottle today. Your druggist has it. Over 52 million bottles sold.

Questionaire On Poultry Feeds
And Answers

1. How soon after hatching should baby chicks be fed? How many times a day should they be fed?

Chicks should have no feed whatever until they are at least forty-eight hours old. Some authorities recommend that they should not be fed until they are sixty to seventy-two hours old. Since there is a wide difference of opinion on this point among recognized authorities on poultry raising, it is safe to say that a considerable latitude is permissible. Feed them nothing for the first forty-eight hours; after that, a few hours more or less appears to be of little consequence.

2. What sort of ration should they have for the first two weeks?

Since the very young chick has a poorly developed digestive apparatus, its ration for the first five days should consist of a well balanced, easily digested, Mash Feed. Schreiber's Best Starting Mash is such a feed. On the third day after hatching, the chick should be given Schreiber's Best Starting Mash. For the first two or three days thereafter, it is advisable to feed them a little at a time three or four times a day to avoid over-eating. After that, the Mash should be kept before them all day. When five days to a week old, it is well to give them a light feeding of Shreiber's Chick Scratch in the morning and evening. It should be scattered in a litter of clean chopped clover, alfalfa, straw or sand. This method of feeding should be continued for the first four or five weeks. During the first week it is well to feed chicks rather sparingly. They should be kept slightly hungry to assure a keen appetite. After the first week, chicks should be fed liberally because they grow rapidly and require a large quantity of food in proportion to their size and weight.

3. Should small chicks have a heavy mixture of corn in their feed?

No. Of course, heavy mixture" is a relative term, and in the Scratch Feed up to 50 per cent corn is not only permissible but advisable. Corn is the cheapest source of carbohydrates suitable for poultry, particualrly in the corn belt. It is relatively high in fat and is very palatable; however, since it is low in protein and deficient in mineral matter, corn should not be fed alone but supplemented with other feeds to provide the nutrients it lacks.

4. Should a Mash for Chicks be fed Wet or Dry?

Generally speaking, a dry mash is preferable because it tends to maintain more sanitary feeding standards; however, many authorities agree that one feeding of wet mash daily causes chicks to consume a greater quantity of food, and produces more rapid growth. This is true particularly in warm weather. Where this practice is adopted, the mash should be mixed with skimmed milk, buttermilk, sour milk, or water, to a crumbly consistency. Only as much moistened mash should be given at each feeding as the chicks will clean up in thirty minutes. The best time to feed a moist mash is during the early part of the afternoon. As the mash is readily digested, the chicks will have sufficient time to develop an appetite for their evening allowance of scratch grains.

Wet mash should always be fed in earthenware, wooden troughs, or on clean boards. These should be scalded daily to keep them clean and prevent souring. Feeding of wet mash should be undertaken only by those who have the time for the extra work and care necessary to make this method of feeding successful.

5. Should a complete change of feeds be made without first allowing chickens to become accustomed to the new feed?

All changes of feeds or methods of feeding should be made gradually. Sudden changes, especially if they are of a radical nature, have a tendency to cause digestive disorders.

6. Why is Buttermilk essential in a feed?

The value of buttermilk for poultry of all ages has been thoroughly demonstrated. It is recommended by most of the State Universities and the U. S. Department of Agriculture. It is nature's way of supplying the nutritive requirements of the young chicks in an easily digestible form. Milk is the best known muscle builder. Buttermilk sharpens the appetite, aids digestion and acts as a tonic. It is high in digestible protein. Let it be understood that skimmed milk, buttermilk and sour milk have practically the same merits in poultry feeding. However, chicks should not be changed from one to the other.

7. In what way does Cod Liver Oil benefit a fowl?

Cod Liver Oil benefits poultry by supplying the necessary vitamines which are lacking in nearly all of the feeds to which, as a rule, chickens have access. In circular number 282, issued by the University of Illinois, we read that "The danger of vitamine UNDER-NUTRITION in poultry is possibly much greater than among any other species of farm animals." Cod Liver Oil provides life-giving elements, particularly Vitamine D. This substance enables the fowl to utilize the minerals in the feed for its body requirements.

Cod Liver Oil has been called "Bottled Sunshine" because it is the best known substitute for the ultra violet rays of sunshine. It is also the most efficient agent in preventing and curing rickets and leg weakness. It is especially necessary in the early spring months, particularly during cloudy, rainy weather when chicks suffer from lack of sunshine and leg weakness frequently develops in the lock. COD LIVER OIL supplies the deficiency, and enables the chick to assimilate a much greater percentage of the minerals in the feed, carries it into the blood stream, build a strong frame, make rapid growth, and build up resistance against disease.

8. Should chickens have plenty of exercise?

During the first week, chicks require little exercise; in fact, it is better to keep them reasonably quiet. After that, they should have ample exercise, but growing chicks will make more rapid growth when confined in a reasonably small place. When they are allowed to roam over too large an area, they exercise more than necessary, consume too much food of a filling bulky nature lacking in nutritive value. Mature birds, particularly laying hens, require a great deal of exercise, especially in cold weather.

9. What would you suggest as a means of forcing the chickens to exercise in their pens?

Supplying them with clean litter; scatter the scratch grains in this litter forcing them to scratch for their feeds which provides the necessary exercise. It is of the utmost importance that the litter be kept clean which means that it should be changed frequently. Alfalfa meal is very good.

10. About how long should a starting mash be fed?

Four to five weeks. The chicks should then be changed over to Growing Mash. This should be done gradually by mixing the Starting and Growing Mash, gradually increasing the latter and decreasing the former until the entire mash allowance consists of the Growing Feed.

11. What feed is next in line after Starting Mash?

Growing Mash. At this time the scratch feed should be changed from the fine chick grits to the coarser big chick scratch feed.

12. Explain your idea of how chickens should be cared for from baby chicks up until they are ready for market; also, how to keep a hen up to normal egg production.

Chicks should be fed according to the methods suggested in the foregoing paragraph until they are about eight weeks old. The cockerels should then be separated from the pullets The cockerels should be separated into two pens. Those selected for breeding purposes may be allowed free range They should be kept on Growing Mash and Big Chick Scratch until maturity is reached. The remainder should be fattened at once and marketed as broilers. NU-FAT Car or NU-FAT Station Feed are ideal for fattening poultry. Birds to be fattened should be closely confined and fed exclusively on NU-FAT that has been moistened with water or milk to a consistency of thick gravy. They should be kept on this ration for a period of ten days to two weeks.

The pullets should be given all the Growing Mash they will consume with a light feeding of Big Chich Mash in the morning and a heavier feeding in the evening. Let them go to roost with a full crop When three months old they should be changed gradually from Growing Mash to our Best Laying Mash and from Big Chich Scratch to Schreiber's Best Hen Scratch. Give them all the Laying Mash they will eat and continue the feeding of scratch grains as heretofore. In cold weather a somewhat larger amount of scratch grits may be given, particularly in the evening to sustain them during the long fall and winter nights.

It is understood, of course, that in addition to the foregoing, poultry should be provided at all times with good, clean grit and plenty of clean, fresh water, easily accessible. In severe weather, it is well to give them water that has been slightly warmed, as that will induce them to drink it more freely.

In the care of poultry, three things are of the greatest importance; namely, first: sound, wholesome, nutritious feed. Smutty, musty, or spoiled feed of any kind is sure to cause trouble.

Second: Warm, dry well ventilated quarters are essential. Poultry houses with a southern exposure are preferable. Shade should be provided in the summer.

Third: Sanitation. Unsanitary quarters and methods of feeding are productive of more disease and greater losses in the poultry industry than any other cause. It is utterly impossible to make a success of poultry raising unless rigid sanitation is practiced.

COD LIVER OIL IN POULTRY FEEDS

The merit of Cod Liver Oil for poultry are now quite solidly established. The benefits from its use were so outstanding, that this new feed attracted the attention of many of the poultry departmens of State Universities as well as those who are engaged in poultry raising as a specialized industry on a large scale. The experiments in most cases proved conclusively that Cod Liver Oil is of particular benefit to growing chicks as well as laying hens, particularly during the fall, winter and spring months. The manufacturers of commercial poultry feeds were quick to recognize its value as an admixture in mash feeds, and it is now used quite generally by the leading mills throughout the land.

The original experiments were made with Cod Liver Oil in liquid form. This proved a considerable handicap for the reason that it was difficult to mix uniformly, and the fact that it had to be mixed fresh every few days, because in that form it oxidizes when exposed to the air, and in a comparatively short time loses much of its medicinal value. Then, too, it becomes rancid, particularly in warm weather, due to the presence of great quantities of fat. For that reason, it was unsafe to store feed containing Cod Liver Oil for any length of time.

To overcome these difficulties, the Silmo Chemical Company, Vineland, New Jersey, set out to reduce the oil to a powder form, and still retain all of its vitamines, particularly Vitamine D, found in the pure oil. To quote from one of their pamplets: "Not only does COLIVEROL contain the health-giving vitamines of Pure Cod Liver Oil, but by a special process these are combined with the valuable mineral phosphates and carbonates of calcium and magnesium, and other valuable minerals. The final result is a strong compound rich in vitmines and the minerals necessary to growth and production."

It has been demonstrated to the satisfaction of most of the leading manufacturers of poultry feed, that COLIVEROL in powder orm is equal if not superior to the Cod Liver Oil in liquid form, and eliminates the difficultes encountered with the liquid.

By extracting the fat from the oil and mixing the residue with a special formula of finely ground minerals, nearly all of the vitamines present in the original product are maintained in COLIVEROL, and it can be safely stored for a period of at least six months without any perceptible deterioration in its medicinal value.

The foregoing explanation is given to familiarize anyone not acquainted with this subject, because there may be some poultry raisers who are skeptical of COLIVEROL, especially if they have tried the Cod Liver Oil in liquid form and encountered the difficulties mentioned in the foregoing paragraphs.

Lesson for February 20

SERVING IN AND THROUGH THE CHURCH.

LESSON TEXT—Matt. 5:13-16; Acts 2:42-47.

GOLDEN TEXT—We are laborers together with God.—I Cor. 3 9.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Praising God in Church.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Serving in the Church.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—The Meaning of Church Membership.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Living and Working Together in the Church.

There is an utter lack of connection between the subject chosen by the lesson committee and the passages of Scripture selected. The first exhibits the responsibilities of the subjects of the Messiah's kingdom, and the second pictures the graces which were upon the members of the primitive church. Definite recognition should be given this in our interpretation of the passages.

I. The Responsibilities of the Subjects of Messiah's Kingdom—(Matt. 5:13-16).

The whole mass of mankind is shown in the Scriptures to be corrupt—the whole world in moral and spiritual darkness. It is the high privilege and solemn responsibility of the subjects of the kingdom to exert a saving and uplifting influence on the world in which they live. They are to live such lives as to purify and enlighten. This can only be done in the measure that they personally know Jesus Christ, the King, and strive to make known His glory and power to others.

1. "Ye are the salt of the earth" (v. 13).

The properties of salt are:

(1) Penetrating. This means that the disciples must not separate themselves from the world, but thrust themselves into its activities. Salt must be brought into contact with the substance to be affected by it.

(2) Purifying. The influence of the disciples of Christ is to uplift and purify.

(3) Preserving. Salt has the tendency to arrest decay. The influence of believers tends to save the world from perishing in its own vices.

2. "Ye are the light of the world" (v. 14).

Light illuminates and warms. In order to perform its mission, light must not be hidden. The city built on a hill was not intended to be hid.

This world is dark and cold. Many are the pitfalls and snares set by the devil. Believers in Christ should so live that the unwary ones be kept from falling into them.

II. Characteristics of the Primitive Church (Acts 2:42-47)

The behavior of the members of the early church was as marvelous as their gifts of speaking with tongues and performing mighty miracles. It was the result of the Holy Spirit in their hearts.

1. They sought instruction from those who knew the Lord (v. 42).

This is always so. The unfailing mark of the spirit-filled believer is eagerness to receive instruction from those who have been taught by the Lord.

2. They abode in fellowship with one another (v. 42).

Spirit-filled believers have an affection for their kind.

3. They observed the memorial sacrament of Christ's death (v. 42).

Those who have entered into fellowship with Christ will faithfully observe this memorial.

4. They continued in prayer (v. 42).

A sure mark of the spirit-filled believer is a life of prayer.

5. They were together (v. 44).

This unity was the result of their having been baptized into the one body of which Christ is head (I Cor 12:13).

6. They had a community of goods (vv. 44, 45).

They sold their possessions and distributed them to all men as they had need. This proves that they were under the power of the supernatural. It is not a natural thing for one to abandon his title to earthly possessions.

7. They were filled with gladness and singleness of heart (v. 46).

Those who are really born from above are filled with great joy and will devote themselves to the doing of good to others.

8. Praising God and having favor with all the people (v. 47).

Such unselfishness gained the attention of the people and induced them to yield themselves to God and such as were being saved were added unto them.

Fullness of the Spirit

God cannot give fullness of the Spirit to him who does not have such fullness of trust as to yield his life to Him.—Echoes.

Self-Will

The queer thing about self-will is that it kills the very thing its wants—freedom.—Southern Methodist.

Christ Opens the Door

Christ opens the only door for the ascent of man.—Southern Methodist.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

President Asks Powers to Agree on Further Cut in Naval Armament.

BY EDWARD W. PICKARD

ON INSTRUCTION from President Coolidge, the American ambassadors at London, Paris, Rome and Tokyo presented last Thursday to the governments of Great Britain, France, Italy and Japan a memorandum suggesting that they "empower their delegates at the forthcoming meeting of the preparatory commission for the disarmament conference at Geneva to negotiate and conclude at an early date an agreement further limiting naval armament, supplementing the Washington treaty on that subject, and covering the classes of vessels not covered by that treaty."

The President in a special message to congress explained the considerations that moved him to take this action, and included the text of the note to the powers. In this he said the American delegates at Geneva would have "full powers to negotiate definitely regarding measures for further naval limitation, and, if they are able to reach an agreement with the representatives of the other signatories of the Washington treaty, to conclude a convention embodying such agreement, in tentative or final form as may be found practicable."

The American government and people, the President said, "are convinced that competitive armament constitutes one of the most dangerous contributing causes of international suspicion and discord, and is calculated eventually to lead to war."

Despite the hope of the United States to complete the work of the Washington treaty and extend limiting treaties to cover cruisers, destroyers and submarines, the message continued, "far-reaching building programs have been laid down by certain powers, and there has appeared in our own country, as well as abroad, a sentiment urging naval construction on the ground that such construction is taking place elsewhere."

PRESIDENTIAL campaign politics and the third term problem came out into the open last week, and probably will stay there for some time to come. Nicholas Murray Butler, president of Columbia university, a wet Republican and for long a potential candidate, started things with an address in New York in the course of which he asserted that in his judgment Calvin Coolidge would refrain from injecting the third term issue into the campaign of 1928 and would not be a candidate to succeed himself. He declared that other Republican leaders throughout the country felt as he did and that Mr. Coolidge's common sense would keep him from seeking a renomination. Doctor Butler's speech dealt with issues he believes will have to be met in 1928 and told the Republicans that the party would face the fight of its life and that victory would go to that party which stood squarely on three issues—prohibition, farm relief and foreign policy.

The lid thus being taken off, Beck of Wisconsin, insurgent Republican, introduced a resolution in the house, declaring it to be "the sense" of that body that congress is opposed to a third presidential term. Speaker Nicholas Longworth, who is supposed to have presidential ambitions, in an address before the women's patriotic conference on national defense in Washington, caustically criticized the administration's economy program, especially as it affected the navy.

"The leading argument of those in the house who opposed any appropriation for the cruisers was that another limitation of armament conference might be held in the comparatively near future, and that, under the circumstances, we should proceed with no new actual building program," said Mr. Longworth. "To my mind, that argument refutes itself. I have not the slightest doubt that it was our commanding strength and generous willingness to make great sacrifices that brought about the successful results of the Washington conference.

"Today we are in no such position of superiority but rather in a position of inferiority. We must then take up the question of a new conference on the limitation of armament, not as a nation willing to make great sacrifices in the cause of peace, but as a nation begging others to make sacrifices themselves."

Senator Borah responded to Doctor Butler's challenge concerning prohibition by admitting that was a proper issue in the coming campaign and asserting that the Republican party declare itself unmistakably on that question. He said this would be done by the voters themselves and therefore the issue should be presented in the states and districts prior to the election of delegates so that the delegates might be chosen in accordance with the popular view. This proposal sent shivers down the spines of many Republican leaders.

Henry Ford contributed his bit by visiting the White House and then informing the correspondents that he had told the President that the country generally is "solid as a rock" and that existing prosperity will not only continue but increase. He added that he considered the President "more popular with the people of the United States than ever before," but he refused to discuss the President's chances for renomination.

AT THIS writing it appears likely that the McNary-Haugen farm relief measure will be passed by congress and that it will be vetoed by President Coolidge because he still considers it a price-fixing measure and therefore economically unsound. The President was said to favor rather the Curtis-Crisp bill, which contains no equalization fee provision and which Frank O. Lowden condemns for that reason as "wholly missing the point of legislation which we have been advocating." Farm bloc leaders in Washington said if Mr. Coolidge vetoed the McNary-Haugen bill, the corn belt would rally to Lowden for the Presidential nomination.

One emergency agricultural relief bill was passed by congress and signed by the President. It appropriates $10,000,000 to be expended in co-operation with the states in the eradication of the corn borer.

IN ALL likelihood the world court has ceased to be a political issue and the United States is definitely out of that tribunal. Last week the State department received from Great Britain and two other major powers, not named, notification that they were not prepared to accept the American reservations unconditionally. President Coolidge announced in his Kansas City speech that unless all the nations adhering to the court protocol accepted the American reservations without change he would not again submit the matter to the senate and the United States would remain outside the court. It was stated at the White House last week that Mr. Coolidge had not changed his mind in regard to this.

MEMBERS of the senate committee on privileges and elections again failed to agree on a report in the case of Frank L. Smith, senator-designate from Illinois. A majority of the committee seemed to be in favor of recommending the seating of Smith, but several, including the Democrats, thought that evidence as to the facts in the case should be presented before a report was made to the senate. One may repeat the prediction, made several weeks ago, that the matter will not be settled before the present congress comes to an end on March 4.

FOR the second time President Coolidge withdrew the nomination of William J. Tilson of Atlanta to be federal judge for the middle district of Georgia. The senate was about to vote on the nomination and rejection was certain. Senator Harris of Georgia led the opposition, saying that Tilson was personally obnoxious to him. The judiciary committee had twice reported adversely on the nomination.

PORTUGAL enjoyed one of its periodic revolutionary movements last week. The revolt started with the military in Oporto and spread to Lisbon, the capital. There was fighting in both cities and considerable bloodshed, and before the week ended it was announced that the affair was practically over, the government having suppressed the rebellion. During the fighting in Lisbon the American legation was riddled by bullets and Minister Fred M. Dearing was forced to abandon it. The revolt was directed primarily against General Carmona, the president-dictator.

UNDETERRED by protests from both the Cantonese and the northern Chinese, Great Britain went ahead with her preparations for the defense of the international concession at Shanghai, and the Gloucestershire and Durham regiments, having reached Hongkong, proceeded to Shanghai as did a number of British warships. Dispatches from Hankow, headquarters of the Cantonese, said Eugene Chen, nationalist foreign minister, had resumed conversations with Owen O'Malley, the British charge d'affaires, and that an amicable agreement might result. One reason for this may have been the reported reverses suffered by the Cantonese troops in Chekiang province, which halted their progress toward Shanghai. Marshal Sun Chuanfang, allied with the northerners, was said to have captured Chuchow.

Much of the speech from the throne at the reopening of the British parliament was devoted to the Chinese tangle, and while both the king and Prime Minister Baldwin gave assurance that Great Britain desired a peaceful settlement by negotiation, the latter made it plain the government was determined to protect its nationals in China and would land troops at Shanghai if this was made advisable by local conditions, regardless of any protests.

Secretary of State Kellogg made an effort to solve the problem of Shanghai by proposing that that city be excluded from the zone of warfare between the Chinese factions, but this was not considered favorably by either the nationalists or the northerners, and of foreign nations only Japan gave it approval. Premier Mussolini announced that Italy would support Great Britain's program and sent a warship and marines to the scene of action. The transport Chaumont, carrying 1,200 American marines from San Diego, arrived at Honolulu and proceeded eastward, for either Guam or China. About six hundred American missionaries have taken refuge in Shanghai and more arrive from the interior daily.

THERE was heavy fighting in and about Chinandega between the Nicaraguan government forces and the rebels. The latter occupied the city but were driven out after Lee Mason and William Brookes, American aviators in the service of President Diaz, had raided and bombed them. The city was practically destroyed by bombardment and flames. A dispatch from Managua said Doctor Sacasa, leader of the liberals, was preparing to accept the government's peace terms or withdraw from the country.

FOR some two months following March 1 President Coolidge and his personal and official household will occupy the Patterson mansion on Dupont Circle, that residence having been selected as the temporary White House while the executive mansion is undergoing repairs. The house is one of the show places of Washington and is now owned by Mrs. Elmer Schlesinger, the daughter of the late Robert W. Patterson, editor of the Chicago Tribune.

YOSHIHITO, the late emperor of Japan, was buried last week with all the prescribed ancient rites, lasting for several days. A million and a half persons gathered in Tokyo to see the funeral procession, and in the crush two were killed and hundreds injured. After the ceremonies in a specially constructed pavilion, the body was taken by rail to Asakawa and placed in the tomb at the foot of a nearby hill.

Charles XII

A ROUGH LOOKING boy of fifteen came to the throne of Sweden in 1697, under the title of Charles XII, and started in at once on a cross between the simple and the strenuous life. He gave no sign that he was going to make a name for himself, for he hated the stupid business of state and spent most of his time in hunting and athletics. Nor was there anything very kingly in his looks. His habitual dress was an old blue coat with copper buttons, buffalo skin gloves and huge boots that came above the knees.

In those days of hard drinking and high living his way of life made him a marked man. He drank no wine, ate only coarse bread, and slept on the bare ground covered by a cloak.

Patkul, the wily Lithuanian diplomat, thought the boy king a fool and hit on a plan whereby other countries might take advantage of Charles' carelessness of state affairs. He formed a triple alliance—Russia, Poland and Denmark—against Sweden. Denmark opened operations by invading Swedish territory. Then, for the first time, the world realized what character of king this unkempt, sport-loving boy was destined to be.

For Charles, with a fierceness and vigor no one had dreamed he possessed, drove out the Danes and turned on the two other members of the alliance. He put away forever the pleasant outdoor home life he loved and turned to the wilder sport of hunting men. Russia, following Denmark's lead, had advanced on Narva and the country around the Gulf of Finland. Poland's army had besieged Riga.

Charles, with barely 20,000 men, marched against the 80,000 Russians encamped under the walls of Narva. Then followed one of the strangest and briefest battles in the annals of warfare. Charles, disdaining all known military tactics, "rushed" the enemy's camp, charging headlong into a force four times the size of his own. In less than fifteen minutes he had stormed it. Of the 80,000 soldiers, 30,000 were killed and the rest captured or scattered. Without pausing, Charles hurried his little army across the Dwina, attacked the Saxon army intrenched there and utterly routed it. Then he turned his attention to the Poles. By 1703 all Poland was helpless before the twenty-one-year-old Swedish youth, and three years later he dictated peace terms to his three enemies.

He had these once-powerful foes wholly at his mercy, yet he treated them magnanimously.

Having completely broken up the alliance against Sweden and saved his country, Charles might have been expected to go back with a clear conscience to his old, easy-going mode of life. But his fighting blood was up. The lust of conquest had fired his brain and his former pleasures no longer appealed to him. He planned to crush Russia, and in 1707, with an army 37,000 strong, he marched on Moscow. But instead of going thither direct and striking one decisive blow, as was his custom, he listened to the advice of his ally, the Cossack chief Mazeppa, that he march first through the Ukraine in the hope of inciting the Cossacks to join him. The Ukraine expedition was a failure. In 1709 Charles attacked the rich city of Pultowa and was about to capture it when Czar Peter I of Russia bore down upon him with 70,000 men.

Charles turned eagerly to meet this new foe. But in a preliminary skirmish he received a dangerous wound in the thigh. So, in the battle itself (July 8, 1709), he had to issue his commands from a litter. His troops, deprived of his inspiring presence, and weakened by starvation and fatigue, fell back before the superior Russian force.

His hopes baffled and his army beaten, Charles seemed to have lost all he had hitherto gained. But he wasted no time in despair. To check the Russia invasion, he promptly incited Turkey to war with Russia. The latter country's diplomats, however, persuaded the Turks that Charles had designs against Turkey, and an armed body of men was sent to arrest him.

Charles was still at Varnitza, in Turkish territory, and had a guard of less than 300 Swedes. Yet with this puny force he defied all Turkey. He defended his house against a whole army of Turks and fought off the besiegers until they burned the house over his head. He was captured, fighting, but escaped in disguise and made his way to the fortress of Stralsund. There a mighty army of Russians, Danes, Saxons and Prussians assailed him on December 23, 1715, and by sheer weight of numbers defeated him.

No longer able to win by force he now, for the first time, turned to statecraft. He formed a stupendous plan to win what might in time have amounted to a world empire. His idea, in brief, was to form an alliance with Russia, attack and conquer Norway, from Norway to cross to Scotland, invade Great Britain and dethrone King George I. The scheme almost succeeded. The alliance was made with Russia, Norway was invaded and partly conquered. But, on November 30, 1718, while besieging Fredrikshall, Charles' head was crushed by a cannon ball.

Charles XII was but thirty-six when he died, and with his death Sweden sank from the high power to which his genius and mad courage had raised her.

Good Health Requires Good Elimination.

ONE can't feel well when there is a retention of poisonous waste in the blood. This is often a toxic condition, and is apt to make one tired, dull and languid. Other symptoms are sometimes toxic backaches and headaches. That the kidneys are not functioning properly is often indicated by scanty or burning passages or secretions. CHAPTER XIII—Continued

—18—

There had been a long silence after his last words, but when she spoke it was as if there had been no interval between his chatter and her response.

"Almost any other man would have been heroic," she went on. "Almost any other man would have been excited and emotional at times, and then would have been exacting and difficult and rebellious over all the mystery, and the fact that I couldn't explain. I've set that pace myself," she confessed. "I haven't always been able to take things quietly and—and philosophically. The wonderful thing about you is that you've never been overwhelmed by any situation we've been in together. You've never even seemed to take them very seriously. And yet, when it came to a 'showdown,' as Shaw says, you've been right there, always."

"You're the kind," she said, "that in the French revolution, if you had been a victim of it, would have gone to the guillotine with a smile and a jest, and would have seen in the experience only a new adventure."

At that, he shook his head.

"I don't know," he said slowly, and with the seriousness he had shown her once or twice before. "Death is a rather important thing. I've been thinking about it a good deal lately."

"You have!" In her astonishment, she straightened in her chair. "Why?"

"Well," he hesitated, "I haven't spoken about it much, but—the truth is, I'm taking the European war more seriously than I have seemed to. I think America will swing into the fight in a month or two more; I really don't see how we can keep out any longer. And I've made up my mind to volunteer as soon as we declare war."

"Oh, Laurie!"

That was all she said, but it was enough. Again he turned away from her and looked into the fire.

"I want to talk to you about it sometime," he went on. "Not now, of course. I'm going in for the aviation end. That's my game."

"Yes, it would be," she corroborated, almost inaudibly.

"I've been thinking about it a lot," he repeated. There was an intense, unexpected relief in this confidence, which he had made to no one else but Bangs, and to him in only a casual phrase or two. "That's one reason why it has been hard for me to get down to work on a new play, as Bangs and Epstein have been hounding me to do. I was afraid I couldn't keep my mind on it. All I can think of, besides you—" he hesitated, then went on rather self-consciously—"are those fellows over there and the tremendous job they're doing. I want to help. I'm going to help. But I'm not going into it with any illusions about military bands and pretty uniforms and grand-stand plays. It's the biggest job in the world today, and it's got to be done. But what I see in it in the meantime are blood and filth and stench and suffering and horror and a limitless, stoical endurance. And—well, I know I'm going. But I can't quite see myself coming home."

Save for his revelation on the morning they met, this was the longest personal confidence Laurence Devon had ever made to another human being except his sister Barbara. At its end, as she could not speak, he watched her for a moment in silence, already half regretting what he had said. Then she rose with a fiercely abrupt movement, and going to the window stood looking at the storm. He followed her and stood beside her.

"Laurie," she said suddenly.

"Yes?"

"I can't stand it."

"Can't stand it?"

He repeated her words almost absently. His eyes were on a stocky figure moving among the trees below. It kept in constant motion and, he observed with pleasure, it occasionally stamped its feet and swung its arms as if suffering from the cold.

"I can't stand this situation."

"Then we must clear it up for you." He spoke reassuringly, his eyes still on the active figure. "Is that one of our keepers, down there?"

She nodded.

"He has instructions to watch the front entrance and windows. There's another man watching the rear."

"I hope he hasn't a nice little bottle of chloroform in his overcoat pocket, or vitriol," murmured Laurie, reflectively. "By the way," he turned to her with quickened interest, "something tells me it's long after lunch time. Is there any reason why we shouldn't eat?"

She smiled.

"None whatever. The icebox contains all the things a well-regulated larder is supposed to hold. I overheard Shaw and his secretary discussing their supplies."

"Good! Then we'll release Mother long enough to let her cook some of them."

He strolled to the bedroom door. On the threshold facing it the woman sat and glared at him with her fierce eyes.

"Would you like a little exercise?" he pleasantly inquired. There was no change of expression in the hostile face. "Because if you would," he went on, "and if you'll give me your word not to cry out, give any kind of alarm or signal, or start anything whatever, I'll take that bandage off your mouth and let you cook lunch for us and for yourself."

The fierce eyes set, then wavered. He waited patiently. At last the head nodded and he expeditiously untied the bandage.

"The very best you've got, please," he instructed. "And I hope you can cook. If you can't, I'll have to do it myself. I'm rather gifted that way."

"I can cook," avowed the old woman sullenly.

"Good work! Then go on your joyous way. But if you feel an impulse to invite into your kitchen any of the gentlemen out in the grounds, or to release the secretary, restrain it. They wouldn't like it in here. They wouldn't like it at all."

A strange grimace twisted the woman's sardonic features. He interpreted it rightly.

"I'm glad you agree with me," he said. "Now, brook trout, please, and broiled chickens, and early strawberries and clotted cream."

She looked at him with a return of the stoic expression that was her habitual one.

"We ain't got any of those things," she declared.

"We ain't?" Her guest was pained. "What have we got?"

"We got ham and eggs and lettuce and milk and coffee and squash pie."

He sighed.

"They will do," he said resignedly. "Do you think you could have them ready in five minutes?"

The luncheon was a cheerful meal, for Laurie made it so. When it was finished he went to the kitchen window, opened it, and carefully arranged several hot ham sandwiches in a row.

"For the birdies," he explained. "For the cold little birdies out in the grounds."

"This storm will be a good thing for us," he mentioned to Doris, when they had returned to the upstairs sitting room. "It will be dark soon after four, and the snow will cover our footsteps. But I'm inclined to think," he added, reflectively, "that before we start I'd better go out and truss up those two birds in the grounds."

She showed an immediate apprehension.

"No, no! you mustn't think of that!" she cried. "Promise me you won't."

He shrugged his shoulders.

"As you wish, of course. But if they interfere when we're getting started, surely you'll let me rock them to sleep, won't you?"

She did not move, but gave him a look that made him thoughtful. It was an odd, sidelong look, frightened but watchful. He remembered that once or twice before she had given him such a look. More than anything else that had happened, this glance chilled him. It was not thus that the woman he loved should look at him.

Suddenly he heard her gasp, and the next instant the silence of the room was broken by another voice, a voice of concentrated rage with a snarl running through it.

"So you're here, are you?" it jerked. "By G—d, I'm sick of you and of your d—d interference!"

He turned. Shaw was standing just inside the door. But he was not the sleek, familiar, torpid figure of recent encounter. He seemed mad clean through, fighting mad. His jaws were set; his sleek head and heavy shoulders were thrust forward as if he were ready to spring, and his protuberant eyes had lost their haze and held a new and unpleasant light.

But, angry though he appeared, Herbert Ransome Shaw was taking no chances in this encounter with his undesired guest. Behind him shone the now smug countenance of the blond secretary, and on each side he was flanked by another man. Powerful fellows these two seemed, evidently Italian laborers, gazing at the scene uncomprehendingly, but ready for any work their master set them. In stupefaction, Laurie stared at the tableau, while eight eyes unwinkingly stared back at him. Then he nodded.

"Well, Bertie," he said pleasantly, "you're outdoing yourself in the size of this delegation. Four to one. Quite some odds." His voice changed. "You contemptible coward! Why don't you take me on alone? Have you got your chloroform cone?"

The complexion of Shaw, red with cold, darkened to an apoplectic purple.

"You'll soon find out what we've got," he barked, "and what's coming to you. Now, are you going to put up a fight against four, or will you go quietly?"

"I think" said Laurie thoughtfully, "I'd rather go quietly. But just where is it I'm going?"

"You'll soon know." Shaw was carrying a coil of rope, light but strong, and now he tossed it to one of the Italians.

"Tie him up," he curtly ordered.

"Oh, no," said Laurie, backing a step. "Tut, tut! I wouldn't advise that. I really wouldn't. It would be one of those rash acts you read about."

Something in his voice checked the forward stride of the Italian with the rope. He hesitated, glancing at Shaw. With a gesture, the latter ordered the two men through the door.

"Wait just outside," he directed. He turned to Laurie. "Out you go!" he ordered brusquely.

Laurie hesitated, glancing at Doris, but he could not meet her eye. At the window, with her back to the room, she stared out at the storm. Even in that moment her attitude stunned him. Also, he felt an unconquerable aversion to anything in the nature of a struggle before her. Perhaps, once outside the room, he could take on those ruffians, together or in turn.

Without another word, he crossed the threshold into the hall. Before him hurried the two Italians. Behind him crowded Shaw and the secretary. He walked forward six strides. Then, as the side railing of the stairway rose beside him, he saw his opportunity. He struck out right and left with all his strength, flooring one of the Italians and sending the second helpless against the wall. In the next instant he had leaped over the slender rail of the stairway, landed half-way down the stairs, and made a jump for the front door.

As he had expected, the door was locked. Shaw, if he had entered that way, had not been too hurried to attend to this little detail. Laurie had just time to brace his back against it when the four men were upon him.

If he could have taken them on one by one he could have snapped their necks in turn, and he would have done so without compunction. As it was, with four leaping at him simultaneously, he called on all his reserve strength, his skill in boxing, and the strategy of his football days.

His first blow sent the blond secretary to the floor, where he lay motionless. After that it was hard to distinguish where blows fell. What Devon wanted and was striving to reach was the throat of Shaw, but the slippery thing eluded him.

He fought on with hands and feet, even drawing, against these odds, on the savate he had learned in Paris. Blood flowed from his nose, his ear and his lip. Shaw's face was bleeding, too, and soon one of the Italians had joined the meek young secretary in his slumbers on the floor. Then Laurie felt his head agonizingly twisted backward, heard the creak of a rusty bolt, and, in the next instant, was hurled headlong through the suddenly opened door, to the snow-covered veranda.

As he pulled himself up, crouching for a return spring, Shaw, disheveled and breathless on the threshold, jerkily addressed him.

"Try it again if you like, you young devil," he panted, "but remember one thing: the next time you won't get off so easily."

The door slammed, and again the bolt shot into place. Laurie listened. No sound whatever came from the inner hall. The old house was again apparently dead, after its moments of fierce life. He slowly descended the steps, and, bracing himself against the nearest tree, stared at the house, still gasping from the effects of the struggle.

He was out of it, but he had left Doris behind. The fact sickened him. So did the ignominy of his departure. He was not even to be followed. His absence was all the gang desired. His impulse was to force the door and again face the four of them. But he realized that he could accomplish nothing against such odds, and certainly, as a prisoner in the house, trussed up with Shaw's infernal rope, he would be of no use to either Doris or himself. He decided to return to the garage and get his car and the weapon he had left there. Then, if the four still wanted to fight, he would show them something that might take the spirit out of them.

Having arrived at this sane conclusion, he turned away from the silent house, and, hatless and coatless as he was, hurriedly made his way through the heavy snow-drifts toward the public road.

CHAPTER XIV

Mr. Shaw Decides to Talk

At the garage he found Burke faithful to his trust and with an alert eye out for more five-dollar bills. The proprietor temporarily lost sight of these, however, in his sudden and vivid interest in the new patron's appearance.

Laurie answered his questions with a word that definitely checked the further development of curiosity. Then, huddling over the stove, and warming his icy, soaked feet, he curtly outlined his intentions. He was going to change back into his own clothes, he explained, and he would want his car at five o'clock sharp. This, he intimated, would give Burke a little more than half an hour in which to get his mental processes started again and to have the car ready.

Burke whistled inaudibly. Obviously the joke the lad had played had not panned out to the young man's taste. Burke was sorry for that. His experience had been that with these young "rounders" generosity went hand in hand with success and its attendant exhilaration; and that when depression set in, as it obviously had done in this instance, a sudden paralysis numbed the open palm.

However, even granting that this was so, he had already been largely overpaid for anything he had done or might still be expected to do. He nodded his response to the young man's instructions, and though he was not a subtle person, he succeeded in conveying at the same time a sense of his sympathy with the natural annoyance of a high-spirited practical joker whose joke had plainly miscarried. Ordinarily his attitude would have amused Devon, but Laurie was far from his sense of humor just now. Still whistling softly, Burke departed, to make a final inspection of the car, leaving Laurie the sole occupant of the cramped and railed-in corner that represented the private office.

That young man was in the grip of a characteristic Devon rage, and as he rapidly got back into his own clothing his fury mounted until the blood pounded at his temples. He dared not let himself sum up the case against Shaw, though the manner in which he had been kicked out savored strongly of contempt. Evidently Shaw didn't care where he was, so long as he was outside of the house.

Neither dared he sum up the case against Doris, though he could not for a moment banish from his mind the picture of her as she had stood with her back to him and his four assailants. Why had she stood thus? Because she was indifferent to any fate that befell him? Or because she was numbed by her own misery? Crowding forward with these questions was a sick fear for her, alone in that sinister house with four thugs and an old hag whose sole human quality seemed to be a sardonic sense of humor exercised at his, Laurie's, expense.

Central Control for All Factory Windows

Anyone who has got up in the middle of the night to open and close windows would balk on being required to open a mile of windows; but if he were a night watchman in a certain Eastern factory, all he would have to do would be to press a button, and electric motors would open or close all the windows without any further attention on his part.

This factory has a building four stories high and more than 500 feet long, equipped with steel sash windows which open at the top, and an electric motor to turn the shafts upon which the windows are swung. It is so arranged that the windows on any side of any floor can be opened by separate controls, or the windows of the entire factory can be simultaneously closed. This system permits of a very considerable saving of individual labor and at the same time assures a maintenance of adequate ventilation and protection against the weather.—American Mutual Magazine.

Woodchucks Good Pets

The biological survey says woodchucks make very interesting pets, and are easily cared for. They should be given roomy quarters with a den and material for a nest in which they can retire in the fall for hibernation. They eat a great variety of green food.

Discord Her Specialty

In classic mythology, Eris was the goddess of discord, and the sister of the war god Mars. In the legend of the Trojan war, Eris was the goddess who, indignant that she was the only one of all the gods and goddesses who was not invited to the marriage festivities of Peleus and Thetis, threw into the midst of the guests a golden apple, known since as the "apple of discord," which bore the inscription "For the fairest of the fair." The rivalry of the three deities, Hera, Athene and Aphrodite, for the gift was left to the judgment of Paris, the son of the king of Troy, who, being appointed umpire by Zeus, bestowed it on Aphrodite.—Kansas City Star.

Around Orchard

IMPORTANCE OF PRUNING GRAPES

A small crop of fruit may be expected the third year after planting from grapevines which have been adequately pruned during the first two years in the vineyards, says J. H. Clark, assistant pomologist at the New Jersey College of Agriculture. Any time during February or early March will be suitable for this important operation.

All vines should be pruned when planted so that only two strong buds are left on each plant. After one year's growth it is desirable to prune back to two buds again. If both buds grow, the weaker shoot should be rubbed off so that the plant will use all its energy in developing one good strong cane, which will become the permanent trunk. During this second growing season the vines should have some support. This may be a stake such as an ordinary bean pole, or the regular Kniffen trellis may be erected at this time. Even where stakes have been used the trellis should be up by the beginning of the fourth season at the latest.

At the end of the second growing season the cane which is to become the permanent trunk of the vine should be pruned back to five and one-half or six feet, or to the top wire of the trellis.

After the third growing season the regular four-arm Kniffen type of vine can usually be formed by training one vigorous cane from the permanent trunk in each direction on each of the two wires. Canes on the top wire can carry about six buds this year, whereas those on the lower wire should be pruned to four or five. All other canes should be removed entirely. Another year may be necessary before weak vines are large enough to carry the four arms.

Advice on Fruit Pests Saves Growers $200,000

Fruit growers in western New York were saved about $200,000 in spraying and dusting material during the past season by spray information, according to an estimate made by the New York State College of Agriculture at Ithaca, N. Y., and the Geneva experiment station. The largest saving which came from the spray information was on material ordinarily used for the control of aphid or plant lice. Last spring the college saw that this pest was almost absent in most western New York orchards and that spraying for them would be unnecessary.

In previous seasons the use of an aphid killer was usually considered necessary, for although aphids are scarce in the spring, under favorable conditions, they multiply rapidly and, unless controlled, soon become destructive.

It was determined also that San Jose scale was not important enough in certain localities to need the strong lime-sulphur sprays to control it. The information about these two pests meant an average saving of about $45 to the grower, according to figures obtained from Wayne and Monroe counties.

The college states that this spray information could not have been used so well had it not been for the organization of the farm bureau in the counties, and in local communities, and that this saving was twice as much as the year's cost of the farm bureau in the fruit counties.

Mechanical Devices for Protecting Young Trees

Cylinders of woven wire netting are among the best mechanical contrivances for protecting young trees from rabbits, W. R. Martin, horticultural specialist at Kansas State Agricultural college, believes. Poultry netting of one inch mesh made of No. 20 galvanized wire is recommended. Rolls 18 inches wide may be used for cottontails, and the material cut into one-foot lengths. One of the sections is rolled into cylindrical shape about the trunk of each tree and fastened at several places by bending and twisting the projecting ends of wire.

Guards should be left on the trunks as long as the trees require protection. They may be adapted to protection from both meadow mice and rabbits by using wire of finer mesh and by passing the lower edge into the ground.

Veneer and other forms of wooden protectors are popular and have several advantages when used for cottontail rabbits. When left permanently upon the trees, however, they furnish retreats for insect pests. The labor of removing and replacing them is considerable but they have the advantage, when pressed well into the soil, of protecting the trees from both mice and rabbits.

Propagate Fruit Plants

Some farmers are able to propagate their fruit plants successfully, and thus eliminate the cost of purchasing from nurseries. In general, however, this is an unwise procedure. Particularly so for the farmer who is not acquainted with the various propagation methods. This is a day of specialization, and the nurseryman who makes a business of propagating fruit plants is usually able to grow much better nursery stock than the farmer.

If Kidneys Act Bad Take Salts

Says Backache Often Means You Have Not Been Drinking Enough Water

When you wake up with backache and dull misery in the kidney region it may mean that you have been eating foods which create acids, says a well-known authority. An excess of such acids overworks the kidneys in their effort to filter it from the blood and they become sort of paralyzed and loggy. When your kidneys get sluggish and clog you must relieve them, like you relieve your bowels, removing all the body's urinous waste, else you have backache, sick headache, dizzy spells; your stomach sours, tongue is coated and when the weather is bad you have rheumatic twinges. The urine is cloudy, full of sediment, channels often get sore, water scalds and you are obliged to seek relief two or three times during the night.

Either consult a good, reliable physician at once or get from your pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys may then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for years to help clean and stimulate sluggish kidneys, also to neutralize acids in the system, so they no longer irritate, thus often relieving bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive, cannot injure and makes a delightful, effervescent lithia-water drink. Drink lots of soft water.

Klemme Grade Boys Lose Game

The Klemme and Britt 8th Grade teams put on the preliminaries in a good game. The Britt boys were much larger than our boys but the Young Shamrocks put up a game battle that nearly won the game from Britt. Britt took a lead in all quarters and in the third quarter the game stood 6 to 12 in favor of Britt The Klemme graders held Britt for a one point lead only while the young Shamrocks piled up three counters, ending the game 13 to 9 in favor of Britt.

PREDICTS COMING SHORTAGE OF HORSES

Number Of Hores And Mules In Iowa Decreaing Rapidly

Waterloo, Iowa, February 17.—"Iowa farmers will soon be suffering from a shortage of horses and mules for work stock,' according to a statement of Carl N. Kennedy, Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, at a recent meeting of the Iowa Draft Horse Breeders' Association held in Waterloo.

"The 1925 census shows that the number of horses and mules decreased 11.6 percent since 1920," stated Mr. Kennedy. "Recent figures show a still further decrease of 34,000 in the past year.

"Iowa horses would need to live to an average age of 23 years if the present rate of breeding would merely supply replacements for Iowa farmers. Many inferior western horses are now being shipped into the state to supply work stock.

"Usually Iowa supplies many draft horses and mules for eastern and southern farmers who do not breed enough horses to meet their own needs. Some horses of this kind are being sold at the present time and are being replaced by cheaper horses. Good draft animals that are produced by breeding good mares to pure bred stallions or jacks are a more dependable source of power.

"Farmers are bginning to appreciate the probability of a horse shortage and have increased their breeding operations by 15 percent. The amount of such breeding operations will need to be increased at least another 50 percent if Iowa is to supply the amount of work stock needed to adequately tend her farms."

FARM RECORD SCHOOLS WERE HELD LAST WEEK

Record Books Are Furnished Free To Members Who Want Them

Five Farm Record Schools were held in the county during the past week by the Farm Bureau with Mr. J. C. Galloway of the Extension Service in charge. The object of these meetings was to help summarize the records that have been kept by the different members of these groups during the past year and to help start the records for the new year. New members were added to the groups. Meetings were held at Garner, Klemme, Britt, Goodell and Kanawha. Record books are furnished free to the members of these groups and it is the object of the Farm Bureau to encourage the keeping of a definite record on the farms in order that the farmers may definitely study his business.

YOUNG FARMER HAS FATAL ACCIDENT

HERMAN WACKER MANGLED IN GASOLINE ENGINE MONDAY

Brothers Were Crushing Corn As Fatal Accident Happened

Herman Wacker, 24-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Wacker who reside on a farm about four miles southeast of Klemme, met with a fatal accident Monday forenoon at about eleven o'clock.

Just exactly how the acident happened will never be known as Herman was alone when he met death. Herman and his brother, Sylvanius were crushing corn at the farm yard and using a tractor to drive the machine. The crusher was driven by a heavy belt from the tractor and it is supposed that Herman slipped into the belt or posibly got caught in the fly wheel as he was working around the machine. His brother, who was helping him had stepped away for a few minutes and when he returned found the mangled body of his older brother. So terribly was he thrown that both arms and both legs were broken in several places, his skull was crushed in the back and his back and other parts of his body badly bruised, so death must have been instant.

Herman is the oldest son of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Wacker, and besides his parents he is survived by one oled sister, two younger sisters and his younger brother. One of his younger sisters was attending school at Baxter, Iowa, and came home on Monday evening. Mrs. Wacker is a daughter of Fred Ax, who resides about three miles north of Klemme.

Funeral services are being held today (Thhursday) officiated by Rev. Schmid, and burial will be made in the Elltown cemetery north of this place.

The bereaved family have the sincere sympathy of the entire community in their hour of deepest sadness.

ALBERT SWANSON ENLARGES CHICK HATCHERY

Young Klemme Farmer Specializes In White Leghorns

Albert Swanson, a young farmer who lives 1 mile north and 1½ miles east of Klemme, has one of the best flocks of White Leghorn chickens in this vicinity. Mr. Swanson has over three hundred good laying hens which return him a handsome profit each month.

Last year Mr. Swanson went into the hatching business on a small scale to fill a demand for his Leghorn chicks. This year he has enlarged this branch of his poultry industry and has increased his incubator capacity from 2,000 eggs to 4,000 eggs by the addition of a new Jamesway incubator which he has just installed.

This is Albert's second year in his venture and we predict he will make good in the poultry business.

H. S. Orchestra Program Postponed Indefinitely

The Klemme High School Orchestra has been working on a mixed program which they intended to present in the near future. Due to the facts that some of the members have refused to practice and other activities have interferred with the rehearsals to such an extent that it was impossible to do satisfactory work there, it has been necessary to postpone the program indefinitely and to disorganize the entire group. They will be reorganized in the near future, probably with some of the old members missing and new ones present. There is a chance to get some very excellent results with the talent at our disposal this year. It is hoped that it will soon be possible to get the work into full swing again. E. G. Gary, director.

IT COSTS A LOT—BUT WHO GET'S THE MONEY?

An eastern paper is responsible for the statement that it costs $49,000,000 a day to nourish the bodies of the citizens of the United States. Two-thirds of this amount is for meat, fish, eggs, butter, cheese, milk lard and similar products of which Iowa is a leading producer, with the exception of fish.

The Iowa Department of Agriculture, in analyzing these figures, does not beleive that Iowa producers are getting their share of the consumer's dollar. The total returns from all agricultural products in the state last year was onl over $700,000,000. In other words, the heaviest food producing state in the nation only received the returns which were spent for food for 14½ days out of the whole years cost.

With other people getting such a large share of the food costs of the nation, it would seem fair to give the food producers a price that is somewhere near equal the cost of production. This is just another reason for "Equality for Agriculture."

The W. F. M. S. of the Methodist Church will meet at the home of Mrs. A. W. Gauger on Thursday afternoon, March 3rd.

DOINGS OF THE WEEK IN THE KLEMME SCHOOLS

Items Of Interest Furnished By The Superintendent

P. T. A. Will Meet March 7th

Our P. T. A., with permission of its president and program committee, has been postponed again until Monday evening, March 7th. This has been done because on the regular night, March 1, some of our school must attend the State Declamatory Contest at Kanawha.

8th Graders Write Exams

There were thirteen boys and girls from territory adjoining Klemme at our school last week writing the County Eighth Grade examination preparatory to high school entrance next fall. They are as follows:

Lester Merkel	Dorothy Carolus
Ethel Lemke	John Ash
Lorraine Lemke	Opal Poeton
Emma Kothenbeutel	Mabel Griffen
Glady Kothenbeutel	Vera Bachman
Esther Greiman	Ethel Baack
Edward Thieamnn.

These young people added to those of our own school who finish our eighth grade next May will make a splendid Freshman class in Klemme High School next year. We hope they were successful or may be in May and are ready for advanced work next September.

More and more students are enrolling each year in our high school Parents are anxious these days to have their children get a fair or equal start in life and are encouraging their children to take advantage of high school training. A High School education should be the mimimum of training for whatever one decides to work at.

Semester Exams This Week

This week ends the first six weeks of the last semester of our school year and tests are being conducted.

We hope there may be shown some improvement by some of our students, especially by those who received an E. in any subjects last semester. Parents whose children have been permitted to enroll for four ubjects should insist on some, quite a bit, of home study else failure is apt to result.

Tournament Begins Friday

School will begin on Friday morning at 8.30 o'clock and will close at 2:30 o'clock in order that those who must and those who desire can get to Britt for the afternoon games between grade teams. Klemme will play Hayfield at 4:00 o clock.

THE WORLD'S GREAT EVENTS

ALBERT PAYSON TERHUNE

Peter the Great

IN A shed in the great shipyard at Deptford, England, sat an uncouth laborer with shabby clothes, stained and dirty hands and tousled hair. He was toiling away at low wages, as a carpenter, and did not notice the looks of curiosity and awe that his fellow-workers ever cast toward him. He thought everybody about the yards believed him to be honest Peter, the foreign artisan recently hired by the superintendent. As a matter of fact, the entire force of laborers (as well as the authorities, the police and the British government) recognized the rough-looking fellow for what he was. They knew him to be Peter I, czar of the Russias, and knew that he was visiting England in disguise that he might study shipbuilding and pick out a force of sailors, laborers and engineers to carry back to Russia.

Peter I—known to history as Peter the Great—had chosen one of the most difficult life-tasks that can be imagined. He had resolved to make half-barbarous Russia an up-to-date, civilized, progressive nation.

Russia was semioriental, utterly unprogressive, with no navy worth mentioning, no army except a horde of ill-organized militia, and was woefully lacking in modern thought, culture or civilization. One man set out to reform all this. And he did it.

Peter was the third son of Czar Alexis. His eldest brother, Fedor, succeeded to the throne in 1676, when Peter was but four years old. Eight years later Fedor died, and Peter's next oldest brother, Ivan, a half-witted nonentity, came to the throne. Within a very few years Peter planned to oust Ivan and seize the reins of government. But his sister Sophia stirred up the militia against him, and he was forced to reign jointly with her and with Ivan. He bided his time and, by his marriage and other political moves, soon gained enough power to put Sophia into a convent for life and to convert Ivan into a mere figurehead The latter died in 1696, leaving Peter in undisputed control.

Peter at once began work on his plan to modernize Russia.

He wanted naval power, and for this reason mapped out a double course—first, to perfect the art of shipbuilding and naval warfare in Russia, and second, to win two outlets (at the Neva and the mouth of the Don) for Russian fleets and commerce. For the ice-blocked White sea was often useless for such purposes.

He personally went in disguise to Holland and England, where, working in shipyards, he gained a knowledge of the art and was able to hire workers for his own yards. He also entered the Russian army as a private, and worked his way up through each rank.

Eager to try his new navy and to win the desired "outlet," he waged war on Turkey and captured Azoff, at the Don's mouth. He made a second tour of Europe and took for Russia the best customs of each country.

Still in pursuit of his scheme to give Russia a seaboard, Peter joined Denmark and Poland in war against Sweden. Charles XII, the young Swedish king, put the allies to rout in the first campaign, but later Russia was victorious. In a war with the Turks Peter was less fortunate, and to save his army from destruction was obliged to surrender important strongholds. He captured the Finland gulf territory, and built at the outlet of the Neva a new city, which he named St. Petersburg. In 1713 he moved the seat of government there from Moscow.

Five years later occurred an event that placed an eternal stain on the czar's greatness. He had but one son living—a weak, lazy, dissolute youth, Alexis, on whom all his hopes were centered. Peter tried in every way to interest the boy in affairs of state. But Alexis could not or would not learn. Peter's hot temper blazed up, and henceforth the cowardly boy lied to his father about his progress in study; and, while loafing, pretended to be working hard. All this was a sore trial to the ambitious Peter, and he bore it with scant patience. At last Alexis woke up and showed for once a very keen interest in politics. But the political project in which he exhibited this lively enthusiasm was a plot against his father's throne and life.

Enraged beyond endurance, Peter had Alexis arrested, tried and condemned. On July 5, 1718, the young man was imprisoned. Two days later he was found dead in his cell. Three theories have been advanced as to his death. First, that in panic of fright, he committed suicide. Second, that Peter visited him in order to urge him to repentance, and in an excess of rage murdered him. Third, that he died under torture applied to make him confess his accomplices' names.

Seven years later Peter himself died at the age of fifty-two. Russia itself is this strange man's best epitaph and monument. He found it barbaric. He left it civilized. He added six great provinces to Russia's territory and made her a leading naval, political and commercial power. No man, perhaps, better deserves the two titles voted him by the Russian senate: "The Great" and "Father of His Country."

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

France and Italy Reject Coolidge Proposal for Naval Limitation.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

POLITELY but firmly, France and Italy have said "No" to President Coolidge's proposal that the five signatory powers of the Washington treaty negotiate a further reduction in naval armaments by limiting cruisers, submarines and other auxiliary vessels. Great Britain has showed approval of the plan, but delayed her formal reply until the dominions could be consulted Premier Wakatsuki said the Japanese government was strongly in favor of Mr. Coolidge's move and would do everything in its power to aid, but he intimated that Japan would not agree to a 5-5-3 ratio for cruisers and other lighter vessels.

The French government pronounced the American plan impracticable and in conflict with the aims and accomplishments of the preparatory disarmament commission of the League of Nations. It expressed the opinion that an agreement on further naval armaments limitation entered into by the five powers independently of the league undertaking for comprehensive limitation of land, sea and air armaments would compromise the latter project. The basic reason for France's rejection of the plan is her determination to make naval limitation dependent upon agreements as to the limitation of land and air forces. This she has consistently demanded at the Geneva conference. She is bound to maintain her submarine strength as a defense against the powerful British navy and the growing Italian fleet, and while those are as strong as they are, she refuses to decrease her land forces.

Because France is her potential rival in the Mediterranean, Italy also rejects the Coolidge proposal. She declines to participate in any conference on limitation so long as France refuses to limit lighter naval craft, especially submarines. She cannot at present compete with France in building cruisers and so must counter with plenty of submarines.

Washington dispatches said that Mr. Coolidge, realizing now that a five-power parley was out of the question, was considering an alternative proposal that the United States, Great Britain and Japan get together and extend the 5-5-3 limitation ratio to cruisers and other light naval craft. Admiral Jones, chairman of the navy's general board, has devised a formula that he believes would satisfy the British even with France left out of the agreement. He proposes a proviso to the limitation to the effect that any party to the agreement may exceed the maximum laid down whenever it considers its security menaced by the naval building operations of another power.

THAT Germany, with its cleverly constructed reichswehr, has evaded the efforts of the powers to effect its disarmament is the opinion of the military authorities of both France and Belgium. Laying before the French chamber of deputies the government's plans for reorganization of the army on a basis of 12 months of efficient, concentrated service of conscripts, Minister of War Painleve, Marshal Foch and General Debeney, chief of staff, described Germany's great potential military strength and the dangers involved. Minister of Defense de Broqueville of Belgium was still more of an alarmist. Asking parliament for frontier fortifications, he produced figures to show that the reichswehr is a formidable military force with the most modern of armaments It consists of 100,000 soldiers and 15,000 sailors and renews itself every four years, and therefore 200,000 reservists are now available. Premier Vandervelde said Germany "is capable of putting millions of well-equipped men in the field in a short time, while the recent completion of the German aviation cartel is the last step in the mighty industrial organization which will be the base of a future war."

HANGCHOW, a large and important rail and water communication center 113 miles southwest of Shanghai, was captured by the Nationalist troops, according to dispatches from the Orient, and thus the Cantonese took another long step in their march on the coast city. Hangchow had been held by Marshal Sun Chuan-feng, an ally of the northern generals and his army is about all that stands between the Cantonese and the occupation of Shanghai. More British troops were landed at that city last week, bringing the number up to about 4,000, besides a hospital unit. Measures for the defense of the international concession have been completed, and so far the British government is ignoring the flood of protests from Chinese organizations and from laborites in England.

American troops on shipboard ready for shore duty at Shanghai will number 2,300, for the transport Chaumont with 1,200 marines is due there February 24. The cruisers Cincinnati, Marblehead and Richmond were being held at Honolulu.

In Honan province there were preparations for a great battle. The Nationalists were concentrating north of the Yangtse river to meet the combined Manchurian and Shantung armies, which were about to attempt a drive through the province on Hankow and Kiukiang Marshal Wu Pei-fu and Gen. Feng Yu-hsiang have powerful armies in that region and were reported as waiting for an opportunity to jump in and help the winning side. That a terrific conflict is pending is undoubted.

SUCCESSFUL operations of the Liberal rebels of Nicaragua, especially in compelling the government forces to evacuate Matagalpa where there are large American interests, caused a good deal of anxiety in Washington. So last week the destroyer transport Melville, with 200 marines and six airplanes aboard, was ordered from San Diego to Corinto, and the Henderson was ordered to take 1,200 marines from Quantico. The airplanes, which are equipped for bombing, will be used for reconnoissance work and also probably will prevent the shipment of arms to the rebels. Rear Admiral Latimer recently had a conference with Dr. Juan B. Sacasa, the Liberal leader, and our government hopes this will result in a peaceful solution of the embroglio.

PARTS of Dalmatia, Bosnia and Herzegovina, in Jugo-Slavia, experienced a severe earthquake which took scores of lives—perhaps as many as 600—and destroyed many dwellings. In Sarajevo, a sinister memory, great masses of snow and ice, loosened by the tremors, crushed buildings and killed a dozen persons, and there were great mountain slides in other places. Railway lines were broken and relief trains were held up. Several days later another temblor demolished part of the city of Ljubinje, Herzegovina, and killed 91 persons.

The United States, too, had a disaster, this time in southern California where a violent storm that lasted several days resulted in destructive floods and snowslides. Coast towns and the Imperial valley suffered severely and thousands of persons were driven from their homes by the waters. Railroads and trolley lines were washed out, and for a time San Diego was cut off from outside communication. More than a dozen men were killed by a snowslide at Big Creek in a construction camp.

BY A vote of 71 to 17 the senate passed the McFadden bill after breaking up the filibuster by applying cloture. The house already had passed the measure. After the result was announced Senator Glass of Virginia, one of those most active in behalf of the bill, introduced a resolution authorizing the committee on banking and currency to conduct "a thorough investigation of alleged lobbying activities in connection with the banking bill."

The bill is designed to place national banks more on an equality with the banks chartered under state laws. As one means to this end, it permits national banks to establish city-wide branches in states where state laws permit branch banking by state banks.

IN ORDER to dispose of the matter speedily, the house substituted the senate McNary-Haugen farm relief measure for its own bill, and after consideration of it section by section, passed it by a vote of 214 to 178 exactly as it was adopted by the senate. The Republicans were almost evenly divided, 113 voting for the bill and 108 against it. Of the Democrats, 97 voted for the measure and 70 against it.

THREE personal encounters enlivened the proceedings of congress, or disgraced them, according to the point of view one takes. First Senators Glass and Wheeler wrangled over the banking bill, and the Virginian laid violent hands on the Westerner. Then Representatives Tincher and Strong, both of Kansas, fought over the farm relief measure and a few harmless blows were exchanged. On Tuesday that irrepressible pest of the house, Tom Blanton of Texas, tried to whip Representative Bloom of New York during a committee hearing on the District of Columbia Sunday closing bill, and started a general fight. Next day several congressmen commented caustically on Blanton's action and the Texan challenged them to fight him in the gymnasium. Mr. Gallivan of Massachusetts drafted a resolution providing for the appointment of a boxing board to manage future bouts between members.

SEVERAL changes in the diplomatic service were made last week. Hugh R. Wilson of Illinois, chief of the bureau of current information at the State department, was made minister to Switzerland to succeed Hugh Gibson, who goes as minister to Belgium It was announced that Theodore Brentano, minister to Hungary, was retiring, and J. Butler Wright, assistant secretary of state, was appointed to take his place. Leland Harrison, also an assistant secretary of state, was named minister to Sweden to replace Robert Woods Bliss.

Vincent Massey, the first Canadian minister to the United States, arrived in Washington with Mrs. Massey and was presented to the President.

PANAMA is not satisfied with the new treaty with the United States, and the assembly down there has rejected it in its present form. Minister Alfaro is trying to obtain a renewal of negotiations with the State department. The most objectionable article in the treaty is that which requires Panama to participate in any war involving the United States. This caused unfavorable comment in Europe, where it was alleged the terms affected Panama's participation in the League of Nations. Senor Alfaro was instructed to seek a clarification of the phraseology showing clearly that Panama is not obliged to supply troops to the United States, as is commonly understood from the text.

SECRETARY OF STATE KELLOGG, in an official communication to the senate, denied that the State department had advised or instructed Americans not to comply with the requirements of the Mexican oil laws. Nevertheless, he said, only four of the more than forty American corporations and individuals owning oil properties in Mexico prior to 1917 had applied for confirmatory concessions as required by Mexican law.

NEW wage agreement for the miners of the bituminous coal field was put up to a subcommittee appointed by the joint conference of miners and operators at Miami, Fla. The miners' proposal, offered by President John L. Lewis, called for a new wage contract for a two-year period based on the principle that wage reductions are "inadequate to solve the problems of the industry." Existing ills would be brought before the joint conference which would continue in operation for the duration of agreement.

The operators' proposal, presented by W. H. Haskins, Ohio operator, seeks a continuous wage agreement on a competitive basis with the non-union soft coal industry of West Virginia and Kentucky.

Lesson for February 27

MAKING THE COMMUNITY CHRISTIAN

Temperance Lesson.

LESSON TEXT—Gal. 5:13-25.

GOLDEN TEXT—Have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Serving One Another by Love.

JUNIOR TOPIC—The Law of Love.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Self-Control for the Sake of Others.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Works of Darkness and Works of Light.

The only way this can be called a way of making the world Christian is by leading the individuals to a personal knowledge and experience of Jesus Christ and entering therefore into the power of the new life. Having shown in chapters 3 and 4 of this epistle that the believer is free from the law as a means of justification, Paul makes practical application of this doctrine. The divine way of making the community Christian is to secure the regeneration of the individual. The way to destroy the work of the devil is through the sonship of believers.

I. Christian Freedom (vv. 13-15).

1. It is not an occasion to the "flesh" (v. 13).

Liberty is not license. The notion that when one is free from the law, that he is free from constraint, is wickedly erroneous. License of the flesh means not merely the indulgence of the flesh in actual material sins, but in the expression of a self-centered life in biting and devouring one another (v. 15).

2. By love serving one another (v. 13).

Freedom from the Mosaic law means slavery to the law of love.

The emerging from bondage through Christ is the passing into a sphere of life in which all the powers should act under the dominion of the true motive, love—Morgan. Love thus becomes the fulfillment of the law.

II. Walking in the Spirit (vv. 16-18).

This discloses the secret of how a life of service to another can be lived. The governing principle in the life of a believer is the Holy Spirit. Walking in the Spirit results in:

1. Loving service to others.
2. Victory over the flesh (vv. 16, 17).

By the flesh is meant the corrupt nature of man expressing itself in the realm of sense and self. The renewed man is two men between which is going on a mortal conflict. The Christian must choose between good and evil. When he chooses the evil, the Holy Spirit opposes, and when he chooses the good the flesh opposes. Notwithstanding this deadly conflict, victory is sure.

III. The Works of the Flesh (vv. 19-21).

By works of the flesh is meant the operation of the carnal nature. The one who chooses to live according to the impulse and desires of his natural heart will be practicing the following sins:

1. Sensuality (v. 19).
2. Irreligion (v. 20).

These acts take place in the realm of the spirit and are:

(1) Idolatry, which means the worshiping of idols.

(2) Witchcraft or sorcery. This means all dealing with the occult.

3. Sins of temper (vv. 20, 21).

These take place in the sphere of the mind and are:

(1) Hatred. (2) Variance, which means strife and contention. (3) Emulations, jealousy. (4) Wrath, bursts of passion. (5) Seditions, factions in the state. (6) Heresies, factions in the church. (7) Envyings. (8) Murders.

4. Sins of excess (v. 21).

(1) Drunkenness. This means indulgence in intoxicating liquors.

(2) Revelings, acts of dissipation under the influence of intoxicants. Those who practice such sins shall be excluded from the kingdom of God.

IV. The Fruit of the Spirit (vv. 22-24).

This indicates action in the realm of life. The product of the Holy Spirit indwelling the believer.

(1.) Love to God and man. (2) Joy, glad-heartedness because of what God has done. (3) Peace with God and fellowman. (4) Long-suffering, taking insult and injury without murmuring. (5) Gentleness, kindness to others. (6) Goodness, doing good to others. (7) Faith, believes God and commits all to Him. (8) Meekness, submission to God. (9) Temperance, self-control in all things. Against such there is no law.

Underrating Value

Oh, do we not too frequently underrate the value of the promises of God! They were made to us and we should trust them, for they are as true as the God by Whom they were made.—Echoes.

Exceedingly Difficult

It is exceedingly difficult for one's heart to bow and say, "I will be nothing but a lamb," but that is our place, for the Lord says, "Vengeance is mine."—Echoes.

Drugs Excite the Kidneys, Drink Water

Take Salts at First Sign of Bladder Irritation or Backache

The American men and women must guard constantly against kidney trouble because we often eat too much rich food. Our blood is filled with acids which the kidneys strive to filter out; they weaken from overwork, become sluggish, the eliminative tissues clog and the result is kidney trouble, bladder weakness and a general decline in health

When your kidneys feel like lumps of lead; your back hurts or the urine is cloudy, full of sediment, or you are obliged to seek relief two or three times during the night; if you suffer with sick headache, or dizzy, nervous spells, acid stomach, or if you have rheumatism when the weather is bad, begin drinking lots of good soft water and get from your pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts. Take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys may then act fine

This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice combined with lithia, and has been used for years to help flush and stimulate clogged kidneys, to neutralize the acids in the system so they no longer are a source of irritation, thus often relieving bladder disorders.

Jad Salts is inexpensive, cannot injure, makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink and belongs in every home, because nobody can make a mistake by having a good kidney flushing any time.

What might happen to her? What might be happening even now? And what assurance had he that even if he again succeeded in entering the house, a very remote possibility, he could accomplish anything against Shaw and his companions? Oh, if only he had waited and brought Rodney with him! Together, he felt, the two of them could have met and overcome a regiment of men like Shaw and his secretary.

A wild impulse came to him to take Burke with him in his second effort, but an appraising look at that seedy individual checked it. He was convinced that Burke could neither fight nor keep his mouth shut. Owing to his promise to Doris, police help, of course, was out of the question. No, he must go back alone. But this time there would be no semi-ignominious departure. He would either bring Doris away, or he would remain there with her. And if Shaw wanted trouble, he'd get it, and it would be the real thing.

That afternoon, on his first visit to The Cedars, his new instinct of caution had made him leave behind him the little revolver he had brought. He knew his own hot temperament too well to risk carrying it, and he had an arrogant faith in his own physical strength which, as a rule, had been justified. Now, however, he retrieved the weapon, and with a sudden tightening of the lips dropped it into his overcoat pocket.

When he was dressed he went out to look over his car. Burke, who was evidently fascinated by the slender racer, rose from an admiring inspection of the engine as its owner approached.

"She's ready any minute now," he reported. "She's had gas, oil and air, and I've put on the chains. Thought you'd want 'em, in this storm."

Laurie nodded and glanced out at the window. The storm had developed into a blizzard. His optimism, somewhat numbed in the past hour, reasserted itself to suggest that nature was helping him to meet the odds against him in the old house down the road. He glanced at his watch. It was not yet quite five, but certainly there was darkness enough for his purpose. He could safely take the car into the side wood road near The Cedars, and leave it there among the trees until he needed it. He handed Burke his final offering, the size of which wholly dispelled that philosopher's pessimistic forebodings. Jumping into his car, he backed it out into the storm.

"Hey, there! what about these clo'es?" demanded Burke, indicating with a thumb the abandoned heap of garments in the office.

"Eat 'em," briefly advised the occupant of the disappearing car. Burke shook his head. Garage men are used to hectic human types and strange happenings, but this particular type and incident were new to Burke. He was also interested in the discovery that the young fella wasn't going to New York, now that his joke was played. He was going straight up the road, in the wrong direction, and driving like the devil. Well, anyway, Burke had made a tidy bit on that joke, whatever it was. Gazing affectionately at the latest crisp bill, he thought of his wife and the seventh, and nobly decided to forgive them both.

Laurie, his hot head cooled by the storm that beat against him, raced through the gathering darkness. He had the road to himself. In weather like this no one was abroad who could stay at home. He turned off into the country road, already deep in snowdrifts, and swept on through the little wood whose leafless birches now looked unfamiliar, even spectral, in the increasing gloom. Save for the soft purr of his engine, his progress made no sound. He drove as far as he dared, then stopped the car off the road, in a clear space among the trees, and continued his way on foot. He must leave the car there, and take the chance of having it discovered. In the storm and darkness that chance seemed very remote.

He plunged on toward the house, knee-deep, now, in the drifts that swept across the narrow road. Soon the building was visible in its somber setting, and as he stared at its dim outlines his heart leaped. In the right-hand corner, on the second floor, a light showed faintly through drawn shades. The sight filled him with an overwhelming relief. Until he saw it, he had not realized how great his inner panic had been. He stopped, drew a deep breath, and stood staring up at it.

The rest of the house looked black and uninhabited, but somewhere within it, he was sure, Shaw and the blond secretary watched and waited. To the Italians he gave no thought. He was convinced that neither of them cared to come alone to close quarters with him; and this conviction was so strong that the prompt retreat of the fellow with the rope had not surprised him, either at the moment or in retrospect, though both men had fought well under Shaw's eyes. If the Italians were again on guard in the grounds, it would be his job to choke them off before they could warn Shaw of his presence. Warning Shaw, he hoped, was about all they were good for.

His plan, fully made, was very simple. He had no intention of risking another encounter if it could be avoided. His purpose was to get Doris out of that house, back to New York, and in Louise Ordway's care with the least possible difficulty and delay. That done, he could take up his little affair with Shaw. Even against the blond secretary he felt no personal rancor. The youth with the pursuing eyes and the chloroform was merely a wretched pawn in Shaw's game.

In Shaw's game! The phrase stuck, burning into his consciousness like the vitriol he believed the beast would use if he dared. What was Shaw's game? Why was he so smugly sure of it? And why, oh, why, why, was Doris seemingly numb to its danger, yet anxious for his help? For the first time he gave definite shape to a reflection that for hours had been trying to catch his attention, and from which he had restlessly turned. It was this:

When those four men, headed by Shaw, had entered that upper room, Doris had not been surprised. She had expected them. Moreover, she had not been really afraid. Instead, she had worn a look of flaming anger and of sudden resolution. She had stepped forward as if to speak. Her very lips had been parted for speech. Then, Shaw had looked at her, and slowly she had turned away and stood staring out of the window, her back to the room and its tableau. In short, with one glance of his veiled, protruding eyes, Shaw had conquered her, and Laurie himself had seen, what no one could have made him believe, her instantaneous and complete submission.

It was this revelation which had added the smoke barrage of doubt to the situation, clouding his faculties and temporarily stifling his faith. In the face of this, how could he still trust? Yet he had promised to trust, to believe, "whatever happened." Those had been his own words, and she had wept and told him he was "wonderful"!

The deep breath he had drawn ended in a sigh. He was fighting more than one storm, and in this instant he felt an indescribable weariness of soul and body. But not for a second did he hesitate in the course he had decided on. Later, when Doris was safe, perhaps things would clear up. For the moment there was one thing, and one alone, to be done.

The trees around the house made the approach under their cover a fairly easy one. However, he moved slowly, missing no precaution. He hardly believed the zeal of the Italians would keep them out in the storm, but they might have rigged up some sort of shelter, or, more probably, they might be doing sentry work at some of those dark windows.

Clinging close to the trees, he skirted the house, then approached it from the rear, and slipped along the side of the building, hugging the wall. As he noiselessly moved he listened, but no sound came from inside. When he reached the front right wing he stopped, and, looking up, verified his swift impressions of the afternoon.

A wide veranda swung around the front and side of this wing, supported by substantial pillars, up any one of which he knew he could climb like a cat. The roof of the veranda opened on the low French front windows of the upstairs sitting-room. There was no question that within a few moments he himself could enter that sitting-room.

The real question, and again he carefully considered it, was how, once in the room, he could get the girl out of it. She could not climb railings and slide down pillars. There was a window on the rear end of the wing, above what plainly served in summertime as a veranda dining-room. This end of the veranda was glassed in, and over it a trellis afforded a support for frozen vines that now shivered in the storm. If he could get Doris out at that window, he might be able to get her down to the ground with the help of the trellis. But from what room did the window open, and how much of the upper hall would they have to traverse before reaching it? Not much, he fancied.

Again he looked around, and listened. There was no sound or motion, save those caused by the storm. The next instant he was climbing the pillar toward the dimly lighted window. The ascent was not so easy as he had pictured it. To his chagrin, he made several unsuccessful efforts before he finally drew himself over the top of the veranda roof, and, lying flat in the snow, slowly recovered the breath exhausted by his efforts.

Lying thus, and stretching out an arm, he could almost touch the nearest window with his fingers, almost, but not quite. Still lying flat, he dragged himself a yard farther. His head was now in line with the window, but the close-drawn shade shut out all but the suggestion of the inner light. He hesitated a moment, then, very cautiously, tapped on the frosty pane.

There was no response. He tapped again, and then a third time, twice in succession and more compellingly. This time he thought he heard a movement in the room, but he was not sure.

He waited a moment, then softly signaled again. There was no question now about the movement in the room. He heard it distinctly, heard it approach the window, heard it cease, then saw the curtain slowly drawn. The face of Doris looked out, at first vaguely, as if she had fancied the noise some manifestation of the storm. But in the next instant she glanced down, saw him, and obviously checked an exclamation. In another moment she had opened the window, and without straightening up he had slipped across the sill.

Neither spoke. Laurie was looking about the room, reassuringly empty, save for those two. He closed the window, drew the shade, and became conscious that she held his hand and was drawing him urgently toward the fire. At the same time she answered his unasked question.

"They're all down in the kitchen, I think. Listen!"

She opened the door leading to the hall, and, going out, leaned over the stair-rail.

"Yes, they're still there," she reported when she came back. "All but one of the Italians. They're eating now, and after that I think they're planning to leave."

"Where's the hag?"

"Waiting on them."

She spoke detachedly, almost dully. As in the morning, she was not surprised; but tonight there was in her manner a suggestion of repressed excitement which it had not held before.

"Have you a heavy coat?" he asked her.

"Yes."

"Get it and put it on, quick. Don't waste any time." He indicated the buckled house-shoes she still wore. "And put on some real shoes, if you have them."

Without replying, she disappeared. He followed her into the bedroom in which, during the hours of his presence that afternoon, the hag had found uneasy asylum. He indicated a door.

"Where does that lead?"

"Into a bathroom."

"There's a back window over the veranda. What room does that mean?"

"A bedroom off the hall."

"Good!"

She followed his thought. "But I don't think we can risk that. One of the Italians is patrolling the hall. That's why they haven't locked the door. I caught a glimpse of him just now, coming toward the foot of the stairs."

He stared at her frowningly, then walking to the bed, stripped it with an arm-swing and seized the sheets.

"Then it's simply a question of lowering you from the front," he cried, curtly. "I'll lower you as far as I can, and we'll have to risk a drop of a few feet. Snow's safe."

As he spoke, he was hurriedly rearing and roping the sheets. "Used to do this at school when I was a kid," he explained. "Quite like old times. Now get on the coat and shoes, please."

She needed the reminder. She was staring at this visitor, who had the face of the man she knew and the voice and manner of a stranger. All trace of young Devon's debonair indifference was gone. He had the cold eyes and set jaw of a determined man, busy at some task which would assuredly be done, but his air of detachment equaled her own.

When she was ready, and still with his new air of businesslike concentration on the job in hand, he adjusted the linen ropes, and after a preliminary survey of the grounds, led her through the window and out on the veranda roof. Here he briefly told her what to do, suiting action to words with entire efficiency, and assuming her unquestioning obedience as a matter of course.

The lowering was not the simple exercise he had expected, any more than the upward climb had been. Light as she was, it was clear that her unsupported weight would be a heavy drag upon a body resting insecurely on a slippery roof with nothing more substantial than snow and ice to cling to. But eventually she was down, a little shaken but unhurt, and he was beside her.

"Now, let's see how fast you can run," he suggested; and for the first time his whispered voice held a ring of youth she knew. "Shaw's watchers may suddenly begin to watch, or even to see something."

She responded to his changed tone with an uncontrollable gasp of relief, which he attributed to excitement.

"Don't worry. All right now, I think," he said, with an immediate return to curtness. It steadied her as no other attitude on his part could have done.

"Can you drive a Pierce Arrow?" he asked, as they plunged ahead through the snowdrifts.

"Yes."

"That's fine. That's great. I was afraid you couldn't." This was Laurie again. He went on urgently. "If we're stopped or separated, do exactly as I say. Don't lose an instant. Rush to my car. It's over there, among the trees. See?—over there at the right. It's turned toward the road." He indicated the spot. "Get in, go to the left at the first turn, drive full speed to a garage a quarter of a mile down the main road. No matter what happens, don't stop till you reach it. Go into the garage, and wait half an hour for me. If I'm not there then, drive on to New York and go to this address." He gave her a penciled slip he had prepared. "Mrs. Ordway is a good friend of mine. She'll take you in and look after you. Will you do that?"

"Yes." The word was so low that he had to bend his head to catch it. His voice softened still more.

"Don't worry. It will be all right. Only, some way, I can't believe that Shaw is letting us off as easily as this."

She stumbled, but he caught her. For a moment he supported her, and in that moment, under the sense of her nearness and dearness and helplessness, the hardness of the past hour disappeared. He did not understand her. Perhaps he would never understand her. But whatever she was, she was all right.

Half leading, half carrying her, he got her to the car and into it. He had actually raised one foot to follow her when something stirred in the shadows near them, and the familiar, squat figure of Shaw stepped forth.

Though in his sudden appearance he had followed the dramatic instinct that seemed so strong in him, he had wholly lost the effect of unleashed fury he had worn in the afternoon. He was even smiling with an affectation of good-humored tolerance. He had the air of a man who, with the game in his hands, can afford to be patient and affable.

"Oh, come now," he said easily, "don't leave us quite so soon! Since you've come back for another visit, we've decided to keep you a while. You know, I warned you of that."

Laurie made a sign to Doris, which she instantly obeyed. Even before the indolent voice had finished speaking, she was at the wheel and the car had started. Shaw, springing forward with goggling eyes and dropped jaw, found his way blocked by a man as new to him as he had been to Doris, a Laurence Devon who all in an instant had taken on the black rage he himself had dropped. In the hands of this stranger was a revolver which neatly covered Shaw's plump chest. Before this apparition, Shaw backed away precipitately.

Peace and Promise in Nature's Temple

It was a swamp of the kind I love, miles upon miles of it, seldom marked by the footprints of men; a primitive swamp, hoary with age, where life had grown upon life through centuries of time; fragrant with a breath of mystery, filled with a vast contentment, a home for the creatures of the wild. But its age was what grew upon me.

I sat upon a fallen pine that had lived five hundred years, and then had lain a century where it had fallen, crumbling once more into dust of earth. Near me was a still mightier tree rearing its head to the sky. Under my feet was the soft and sweetly musty mold of prehistoric generations of God's greatest living things on earth—the trees. Age—age and life and death—breathed together in the air, and in their mingling there seemed to be a glorious symphony of fulfillment and promise.—James Oliver Curwood in Hearst's International-Cosmopolitan.

The Mad Book

Why doesn't somebody write a mad book, dedicated "to all the poor people who have lost their tempers and don't know where to find them?"

A few suggested chapters:

To have your feet stepped on.

To have a conductor abuse you before a carful of people.

To have a cross voice on the telephone tell you you to "Butt off the line."

To see what you want on the counter and have a clerk tell you: "We don't keep it."

To ask for the Mad Book and have a clerk say, "It's never been published."

Brought Back Old Times

Curiosity is certainly what makes the world go round and keeps people prying into things and learning something new all the time.

The other day a little boy busily engaged in passing time by playing around the parking space was seen to put a box and a paper bag underneath one of the windows of one of the shops that face on the space. Several people saw him leave this little bundle and walk away. One after another until three had done it, some men walked up to it and peeked in. They closed it up and walked away. The fourth could stand it no longer. He also walked up and on examining the contents laughed loud and long. The bag and box contained bits of iron and nails and other mysterious treasures dear to the childish heart.

The curiosity of these people had brought back to them memories of their own hoarding days.—Lawrence Telegram.

Tanlac Brought Her Back to Health

Dubuque man tells how his wife, mother of ten children, was attacked by nervous indigestion. For a whole year she suffered and went from bad to worse. Gives Tanlac sole credit for rapid recovery.

Mrs. Charles Hillary lives at 31 So. Locust Street, Dubuque, Iowa. Speaking of his wife's experience recently, Mr. Hillary said, "For a whole year she suffered from nervous attacks, violent headaches and dizzy spells. Even the lightest housework was too much for her. She lost her usual keen interest in reading, sewing, shopping and auto rides, and would lie awake all night too nervous to rest. Appetite she had none; what little she ate caused acute distress.

"The first relief she got was from Tanlac. She picked up quickly and now sleeps and eats normally, feels splendid, and is a picture of health. Her sickly color has vanished; her cheeks are clear and her eyes bright. Tanlac alone brought her back. I praise it at every opportunity."

Tanlac is nature's own tonic and body builder, made from roots, herbs and barks. If you're rundown and weak start taking it today. Your druggist has it. Over 52 million bottles sold.

FEDERAL INCOME TAX RETURNS 1926

WHO? Single persons who had net income of $1,500 or more or gross income of $5,000 or more, and married couples who had net income of $3,500 or more or gross income of $5,000 or more must file returns.

WHEN? During the filing period, January 1st to March 15th, 1927.

WHERE? Collector of internal revenue for the district in which the person lives or has his principal place of business, or a Deputy Collector.

HOW? Instructions on Form 1040 A and 1040; also the law and regulations.

RATES? One and one half percent normal tax on the first $4,000 in excess of the personal exemptions and credits. 3 per cent normal tax on the next $4,000. 5 per cent normal tax on the balance of net income. Surtax on net income in excess of $10,000.

The revenue act of 1926 requires that returns be filed by every single person whose net income for 1926 was $1,500 or more, or whose gross income was $5,000 or more, and by every married couple whose aggregate net income was $3,000 or more, or whose aggregate gross income was $5,000 or more. Husband and wife, living together, may include the income of each in a single joint return, or each may file a separate return showing the income of each. Net income is gross income less certain specified deductions for business expenses, losses, bad accounts, contributions, etc.

The period for filing returns ends March 15, 1927. The return, accompanied by at least one-fourth of the amount of tax due, must be filed with the collector of internal revenue for the district in which the taxpayer has his legal residence or has his principal place of business.

The exemptions under the revenue act of 1926 are $1,500 for single persons, and $3,500 for married persons living together and heads of families. In addition a $400 credit is allowed for each person depending upon and receiving his chief support from taxpayer, if such person is under 18 years of age or incapable of self-support because mentally or physically defective.

The normal tax rate under the revenue act of 1926 is 1½ per cent on the first $4,000 of net income in excess of the personal exemptions, credit for dependants, etc., 3 per cent on the next $4,000 and 5 per cent on the balance. Under the preceding act the normal tax rate was 2 per cent on the first $4,000 of net income above the exemptions and credits; 4 per cent on the next $4,000 and 6 per cent on the remaining net income.

In making out his income tax for the year 1926 the business man, professional man, and farmer is required to use Form 1040, regardless of whether his net income was or was not in excess of $5,000. The smaller form 1040 A is used for reporting income of $5,000 or less derived chiefly from salaries or wages.

Forms have been sent to persons who last year filed returns of income. Failure to receive a form, however, does not relieve the taxpayer from his obligation to file a return and pay the tax within the time prescribed, on or before March 15, 1927. Copies of the forms may be obtained from offices of collection of internal revenue and branch offices. The tax may be paid in full at the time of filing the return, or in four equal installments, due on or before March 15, June 15, September 15 and December 15.

Under the revenue act of 1926, thousands of persons are required to file returns of income although the incomes are not taxable. The act provides that returns shall be filed by every single person whose net income for 1926 was $1,500 or more or whose gross income was $5,000 or more, and by married cuples living together; whose aggregate net income was $3,000 or more, or whose aggregate gross income was $5,000 or more. The exemptions are $1,500 for single persons and $3,500 for married persons living together, plus a $400 credit for each dependant. A person may have a gross income of $5,000 and, by reason of the deductions for business expense, bad debts, losses, etc., a net income of less than $1,500. A single person may have an exemption of $3,500 as the head of a family. Nevertheless, returns are required in both cases.

Penalties are provided by the act for failure to file a return and pay at least one-fourth of the amount of tax due within the time prescribed, on or beore March 15, 1927.

Texas Declaration of Independence

(Preamble and Conclusion.)

When a government has ceased to protect the lives, liberty and property of the people from whom its legitimate powers are derived, and for the advancement of whose happiness it was instituted; and so far from being a guarantee for their inestimable and inalienable rights, becomes an instrument in the hands of evil rulers for their oppression—when the Federal Republican Constitution of their country, which they have sworn to support, no longer has a substantial existence, and the whole nature of their government has been forcibly changed, without their consent, from a restricted federative republic composed of sovereign states, to a consolidated, central, military despotism, in which every interest is disregarded but that of the army and priesthood, both of which are the eternal enemies of civil liberty, the ever-ready minions of power and the usual instruments of tyrants—when, long after the spirit of the Constitution has departed, moderation is at length so far lost by those in power that even the semblance of freedom is removed, and the forms even of the Constitution discontinued, and so far from their petitions and remonstrances being regarded, the agents who bear them are thrown into dungeons, and mercenary armies set forth to force a new government upon them at the point of the bayonet—when, in consequence of such acts of malfeasance and abduction on the part of the government, anarchy prevails and civil society is dissolved into its original elements—in such a crisis, the first law of nature, the right of preservation, and the inherent and inalienable right of the people to appeal to first principles and take their political affairs into their own hands in extreme cases, enjoins it as a right toward themselves, and a sacred obligation to their posterity, to abolish such a government and create another in its stead calculated to rescue them from impending dangers and to secure their welfare and happiness.

Nations as well as individuals are amenable for their acts to the public opinion of mankind.

A statement of a part of our grievances is therefore submitted to an impartial world in justification of the hazardous but unavoidable step now taken, of severing our political connection with the Mexican people, and assuming an independent attitude among the nations of the earth.

* * * * * * *

(Note: Here follows the list of grievances, fifteen in number)

* * * * * * *

These, and other grievances, were patiently borne by the people of Texas until they reached that point at which forbearance ceased to be a virtue. We then took up arms in defense of the national Constitution. We appealed to our Mexican brethren for assistance. Our appeal has been made in vain. Though months have elapsed, no sympathetic response has yet been heard from the interior. We are, therefore, forced to the melancholy conclusion that the Mexican people have acquiesced in the destruction of their liberty, and the substitution therefor of a military government, that they are unfit to be free and are incapable of self-government.

The necessity of self-preservation, therefore, decrees an eternal political separation.

We, therefore, the delegates with plenary powers of the people of Texas, in solemn convention assembled, appealing to the judgment of a candid world as to the necessities of our condition, DO HEREBY DISSOLVE and declare that our political connection with the Mexican nation has forever ended and that the people of Texas do now constitute a FREE, SOVEREIGN and INDEPENDENT REPUBLIC, and are fully invested with all the rights and attributes which properly belong to independent nations and, conscious of the rectitude of our intentions, we confidently and fearlessly commit the issue to the decision of the supreme arbiter of the destinies of nations.

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

IF BOYS in other states only realized it, they should be envious of the boys who live in Texas. Two Independence days to celebrate every year—think of it! For Texas, as one of the sisterhood of states, not only observes July 4 as the day when all Americans were freed from the British yoke, but it has an Independence day all of its own which it observes on March 2, when Texans were freed from the Mexican yoke.

Although March 2 is an Independence day which the Lone Star state claims as her own, the events which brought it about are a part of our national heritage and some of the men who played prominent roles in the fight for freedom are national heroes no less than Texas heroes. Let one of them tell in his own words the story of the document which is reproduced in part above. Here is what Davy Crockett, Tennessee frontiersman and former congressman, who had come to the aid of the Texans in their fight for liberty, wrote in his diary in 1836:

"March 2.—This day the delegates meet in general convention at the town of Washington to frame our Declaration of Independence. That that sacred instrument may never be trampled on by the children of those who have so freely shed their blood to establish it, is the sincere wish of David Crockett. Universal independence is an almighty idea, far too extensive for some brains to comprehend. It is a beautiful seed that germinates rapidly, and brings forth a large and vigorous tree, but, like the deadly upas, we sometimes find the smaller plants wither and die in its shade."

Those words are all the more remarkable when you consider the circumstances under which they were written. For they are not the ponderings of a philosopher on an abstract problem of "life," liberty and pursuit of happiness." When Crockett wrote those words he was penned up in the Alamo, the historic church in San Antonio. For him the problem of "life, liberty and pursuit of happiness" was an exceedingly concrete one of how long he and his comrades, 179 in number, could hold out against the assaults of more than 5,000 soldiers with which Santa Anna, the Mexican dictator, had surrounded the fortress.

The siege had begun on February 22—Washington's birthday (it would be interesting to know if the thoughts of these fighters turned to the soldier who, just sixty years before, had taken charge of the first American war for freedom from a foreign ruler, as they watched the Mexican horde gather around their fortress). In the meantime the patriots of Texas were gathering at Washington on the Brazos for the convention which was to declare Texas free and independent.

S. F. Austin

Some of the delegates were in favor of abandoning their purpose for gathering there and hurrying to the rescue of Travis, Bowie, Bonham, Crockett and their comrades in the Alamo. But Sam Houston and others pointed out that any force they could assemble in such a short time would be useless against Santa Anna's army and that their first responsibility was to create a government with a responsible head which could offer organized resistance to the enemy. Their counsels prevailed. It was not a matter of deserting their countrymen in peril as that bare statement of fact might indicate. For while the doomed men in the Alamo were fighting against overwhelming odds, the little group of men who met at Washington were hazarding their lives, too. Failure of their enterprise meant death for them if they fell into the hands of Santa Anna as surely as the fall of the Alamo meant death for its defenders.

So the convention went ahead with its work and on March 2 the declaration was signed. No word of what had taken place there got through to the defenders of the Alamo who may or may not have realized that they were to be the first to lay down their lives in defense of the principles set forth in that document. The final entry in Crockett's diary was written on March 5. This is what it said: "March 5. Pop, pop, pop! Bom, bom, bom! Throughout the day. No time for memorandums now. Go ahead! Liberty and independence forever!"

It was a fitting valedictory. The next day the Mexicans stormed the Alamo. Then followed "One hour! One short hour filled with such sublime struggle as has not been witnessed often in the brief compass of sixty minutes. The sun is shining. The plaza is filled with light, the light of morning, the light of heroic death, of self-sacrifice absolute, and the day breaks, a day of eternal remembrance." Accounts of the last desperate, hand-to-hand struggle vary, for, as the monument erected to the heroes of the Alamo at the state capitol in Austin proudly tells their story, "Thermopylae had its messenger of defeat, the Alamo had none." All that we know is that they died fighting.

If the story of the Alamo were the only tale of ruthless slaughter that could be told of Santa Anna, history might not remember his name with such loathing. For the men of the Alamo had disdained to ask for quarter and when their fortress was taken by storm it is not to be wondered at that the infuriated enemy should put them to death. But the years can never efface the disgrace which the Mexican dictator brought upon himself when he ordered the massacre of Col. J. W. Fannin and his men at Goliad on March 27. "Massacre" is a word which is often misused, and many so-called massacres are not that at all. But it only can be applied with all its shameful corollaries of treachery and broken word of honor to the murder of more than 300 members of Fannin's command, unarmed prisoners, many of them wounded and helpless, who had surrendered only upon a solemn convention, signed and witnessed by both Texans and Mexicans, that they would be honorably treated as prisoners of war. That murder was committed by orders of the man who loved to style himself "the Napolean of the West," but whom Texans remember as Santa Anna, "the prince of butchers."

From then on events marched rapidly. In fact the shortness and decisiveness of the Texan struggle is one of the most amazing things about it. The war for freedom in '76 lasted five years after independence had been declared. The war for freedom in '36 lasted less than three months after a similar declaration.

Enter now another hero which Texas shares with the nation, the Washington of '36, Sam Houston, frontiersman, lieutenant of "Old Hickory" Jackson when he crushed the Creek Indians at Tohopeka, governor of Tennessee and congressman. Stephen F. Austin, the "father of Texas," scholar, trained business man, legislator, who had planted the first American colony in that state in 1820, had returned from a Mexican prison at the outbreak of the war to organize an army to defend Texan liberties and assumed command of the army. Not long after the convention at San Felipe in June, 1835, Austin was appointed commissioner to obtain money and munitions from the United States, and Sam Houston became commander in chief of the little army of less than 1,000 men.

Then this master strategist began the retreat which lured Santa Anna into dividing his army and pursuing—just the thing that Houston wanted. Finally Houston decided that he had lured the enemy far enough and prepared to give battle. The position he took for his army was a dangerous one. On one side lay a deep marsh and the waters of San Jacinto bay. Behind them was a stream called Buffalo bayou, crossed about eight miles distant by Vince's bridge, the sole avenue of escape in event of disaster. And Houston, unknown to his men, sent Deaf Smith, the famous scout, and a companion to chop down this bridge!

On the afternoon of April 21, 1836, Houston led his little army of 783 men, poorly armed, against Santa Anna's 1,400 veterans and their artillery. As they advanced to attack the enemy, Deaf Smith dashed madly up on a horse and, swinging his ax over his head, shouted "I have cut down Vince's bridge. Now fight for your lives and remember the Alamo!" As the Texans, shouting the battle cry which Deaf Smith had given them, swept down upon the Mexican camp, the enemy, who had not dreamed of the possibility of an attack by the Texans, fled in dismay. In fifteen minutes Santa Anna's army was on the run. When the "battle" was over Alamo and Goliad had been revenged. Six hundred and thirty Mexicans were dead, 208 were wounded and 730 were prisoners. Houston's loss was 7 killed and 23 wounded! It was one of the most crushing defeats ever inflicted by Americans on an enemy.

The next day Santa Anna was captured and the war for independence was won, although it was not formally acknowledged until May 14 when the treaty of Velasco was signed. So it was eminently fitting that the Washington of the war for freedom in '36 should become the first President of the new Republic of Texas and later the first governor of the state of Texas when the Lone Star took its place on the blue field of the Stars and Stripes. Although the capital of Texas bears the name of Stephen F. Austin, the name of the hero of San Jacinto is immortalized in one of Texas' leading cities, which stands near the site of his great victory.

There two years ago the whole world joined in honoring his memory when delegates to the convention of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World witnessed the unveiling of the heroic statue shown above. In the picture appear, left to right, Enrico Cerracchio, the sculptor, and three descendants of the old general—David F. Houston, former secretary of agriculture and secretary of the treasury, Herbert Houston, noted publisher, and Frank K. Houston, a prominent New York banker.

A car for every purse and purpose

THIS YEAR the General Motors line is an imposing Automobile Show in itself.

Here is every style of body. Every type of design — four cylinder, six cylinder, eight cylinder. Every improvement. Every price, from the Chevrolet touring car at $510 to the Cadillac with special coach work at $9,000. A car for every purse and purpose.

Every one of the models now on display is different and distinguished. Yet two unifying characteristics bind them all together:

1 EVERY CLOSED BODY is by Fisher. The quality of all body workmanship is Fisher quality, and because Fisher is owned by General Motors, every resource has been utilized to make body and chassis a perfect quality unit.

2 EVERY MODEL has shared in the advantages of General Motors research, purchasing standards and Proving Ground tests; and in the economies of volume production. Dollar for dollar you will buy more value in the car you select because of General Motors quality and the public's purchase of more than 1,200,000 General Motors cars last year.

THE GENERAL MOTORS line is a direct result of the record-breaking patronage accorded by the public in 1926. The economies which this great volume afforded have been passed on to the car purchaser in even better quality. With great pride we invite you to inspect these new General Motors cars and to make one or more of them your own.

FLORAL PRINTS FOR HOUSEWEAR; SUPPLE SILHOUETTE IN FAVOR

SOME airs the erstwhile simple housedress is putting on nowadays! Even the materials from which it is made are delightfully camouflaging in appearance, especially the highly mercerized cottons whose colorful floral prints duplicate in patterning and in sheen the more expensive silks. When it comes to laundering, these handsome prints prove themselves not only lovable, but tubable to the point of perfection.

The compose mode is given a place of first importance in the styling of the "last word" washable frocks. To the "I-always-make-my-own-wash-dresses" enthusiast here is a timely hint—when you buy a dress length of fancy print or gay gingham, be sure to purchase a solid colored material for the pockets, necktie, collar, cuffs and other trimming details. Then again choose a rather "fussy" pattern, at least see to it that there be no suggestion of the at-one-time popular bungalow apron style. Rather select a model as here pictured, with circular skirt, fancy tie-collar 'n' everything.

Cotton fabrics were never so alluring as at this very moment. Highly mercerized weaves patterned in foulard suggestions are among most recent showings in the wash-goods section. One of these can't-tell-from-silk fabrics which glorifies the colorful cotton print was chosen for the attractive daytime washable frock in the picture. Its monotone color trim expresses an outstanding style note.

Sprightly floral prints prevail in spring cottons. Among charming new washable materials cotton crepes are shown patterned in tiny blossoms with a tweed-like background, batistes in alluring flower designs on a white base, voiles beflowered in resplendent coloring and the latest effects are printed linens which include both neat conventional motifs or themes as brilliantly colorful as one might make.

Organdie trimmings lend a charming trimming to materials of heavier weave. Pique, also organdie in pure white are used for collar, cuffs and pocket on gay ginghams.

What with a notably "different" play on color and a changing mood of the silhouette, it is just one thrill after another along the pathway of spring and summer fashions.

Especially are new color combinations and effects being whirled into the arena of the mode at a dizzying rate. Fashionists are defining color in the plural. This color compose idea, which is the underlying principle of most of the fashionable color schemes, interprets two methods, that of combining various tones and tints of the same color, or using contrast shades.

It is the modish color plus color idea which so enhances the attractive frock in this picture. For this model the designer employs queen's blue crepe with French gray. The latter is used for the blouse below the bolero outline and for the collar and below-the-elbow sleeve puffs. Another color version which could be successfully worked out in this frock would be that of Grecian rose with monkey skin, the new pinkish tone introduced this season. Which all goes to show that the two-color theme is playing a tremendously important part in the styling of crepe, also crepe-satin frocks for afternoon wear.

Of no less interest than the color question is that of the supple silhouette, which is giving such a feminized aspect to the mode. Skirts whose fullness is attained through plaits or gathers, the bolero and the blouse combine to achieve the soft, pretty comforts so approved for the coming months. The frock in the picture is characteristic of this new vogue. For the upper portion of the bodice the stylist uses the queen's blue crepe, simulating a bolero posed over a very smart blouse. Plaits at the front of the skirt only, further interpret the mode.

The fact that so many of the new materials are soft and often sheer gives impetus to the new graceful silhouette.

$500 IN DEBT— AND A BIG SUCCESS!

WHAT do you know of Timber Lake, in South Dakota? William Chapel most likely didn't know much more about it than you do, when he went there from Minnesota, five hundred dollars in debt! But this is what he says of it today:

"It is an opportunity to make five dollars to one dollar where I came from. Milk production here is the best paying business on the farm."

He has 350 acres under plow—and owns them! Grows wheat, oats, corn, millet, potatoes. Raises hogs, cows, sheep, chickens and turkeys. In his garden he has everything he needs.

"We have daily mail service," says Mr. Chapel, "good markets, roads, schools, churches and neighbors. Water is the finest to be had, and at small expense Lignite coal can be had within a few miles, and is all the fire we use"

BRITT CHAMPS OF HANCOCK COUNTY

BRITT QUINTET BEATS CORWITH IN FINALS 34 TO 25

Garner Defeated By Klemme For Third Time This Season

The fast Britt high school basket ball team romped to victory in the finals Saturday night at Britt by defeating Corwith, runners up, by the score of 34 to 25, thus cinching the Hancock County Championship. In the semi-finals Saturday afternoon Britt met Klemme in a fast game, which had the ear-marks of being nobody's game at the end of the half. Both teams played hard and Klemme gave the Britt team a good run before the latter broke away in the final quarter with a string of long baskets that put them safely in the lead. Britt has, without a doubt, one of the best and strongest teams in North Iowa and had anything in the county outclassed. Klemme put up a wonderful fight, however, and Britt did not have any walk-away.

With the final game with Corwith Saturday night, Britt did not show their speed that they did in the afternoon game with Klemme, and although the scores were larger, the game was not as hard fought.

Garner Goes Down For Third Time

In the opening game of the tournament Friday night Klemme and Garner put up a hot battle that was far from slow. Garner had been twice defeated by Klemme this season and were hot for a victory. The Garner boys put up a game fight and played things even during the first half. They fought hard for a victory, but when Klemme began to press them by speedy floor work Garner began to wilt, and when Tanner started flopping clean, long ones from beyond center Klemme walked right away from their enemy and cinched the score 30 to 21.

In the grade tournament held in connection with the high school, the Hayfield graders defeated the Corwith graders 21 to 14 in the finals.

Tournament summary:

First Round

Klemme 30, Garner 21.
Corwith 35, Hayfield 19.
Kanawha 2, Crystal Lake 0 (this was a forfeit game, as Crystal Lake failed to show up.)

Second Round

Britt 31, Klemme 16.
Corwith 29, Kanawha 15.

Finals

Britt 34, Corwith 25.

This was the best attended tournament ever held in Hancock County and over seven hundred people saw the games. Large crowds of Klemme fans took in the games. Friday night the entire south section in the Britt gym and part of the north side was filled with Klemme rooters.

THE BEE THAT SWARMED ALONE

Said a wise old bee at the close of day: "This colony business doesn't pay. I put my money in that old hive that others may eat and live and thrive; and I do more work in a day, by gee, than some of the fellows do in three. I toil and worry and save and hoard, and all I get is my room and board. It's me for a hive I can run myself, and me for the sweets of my hard-earned pelf." So the old bee flew to a meadow alone and started a business of his own. He gave no thought to the buzzing clan, but all intent on his selfish plan he lived the life of a hermit free. "Ah, this is great," said the wise old bee. But the summer waned and the days grew drear and the lone bee wailed as he dropped a tear; for the varments gobbled his little store and his wax played out and his heart was sore, so he winged his way to the old home land, and took his meal at a side-door stand. Alone, our work is of little worth, but together we're the lords of the earth; so it's all for each and each for all—united we stand, divided we fall.

Moral: Klemme needs a business men's club and more co-operation

METHODIST CHURCH NOTES
A. W. Gauger, Pastor

With the activities of springtime approaching when everything takes on new life, it is well to keep the spiritual interests of life in our thought. Springtime means work and much of it. Likewise kingdom-building means real work. Our subject for the coming Sunday morning will be: "Workers together with Christ." We will have a vital message to all. Our subject for the evening will be :"That Lad, what will you do with him?" We want everyone having a lad or interested in lads to hear this message. This is based on the text: "There is a lad here.' Truly he is here in and about Klemme—what are we going to do about him?

Both leagues are going well and will be regular next Sunday. Let's be there!

Increased attendance and interest in Sunday school will be looked for with the approach of warmer weather. What kind of a Sunday school would my Sunday school be if every member were a member just like me?

Midweek prayer meeting will be at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Levi Klotzbach on Thursday evening.

The Woman's Foriegn Missionary Society meets at the parsonage this Thursday afternoon.

A great men's meeting is planned for the men of the Algona District to be held in Britt on the evening of March the 8th. We desire to have every man in on this as it will be well worth your while. Further information will be given from the pulpit.

Joe Johnson returned from Chicago Wednesday morning. He took in a shipment of live stock Saturday night for the Shipping Association.

PAUL MULLER WEDS GARNER GIRL TODAY

PAUL MUELLER AND MISS EVA REIBE MARRIED AT GARNER

Bride Is Daughter Of Mr. and Mrs. Christ Reibe

This afternoon at 2:00 o'clock at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Christ Reibe, of Garner, occured the marriage of Miss Eva L Reibe and Mr. Paul B. Mueller, of Klemme. Rev. P. Mueller, of Winthrop, Minn, father of the groom, officiated at the ceremony.

The bride was attended by two young ladies, Miss Magdeline Mueller, a sister of the groom, and Miss Delila Lenz. Edward Woiwood, and Arthur Mueller, brother of the groom, acted as best men. The bride and her bridesmaids wore pink georgette gowns, while the gentlemen were attired in conventional style.

The bride is the only daughter of Mr and Mrs. Christ Reibe, who are old residents of Garner. She is a graduate of the Garner high school in the class of 1919 and since then has sucessfully taught a rural school near Garner. She is a very pleasant young lady and of a good character, being active in church and Sunday school work.

The groom is one of Klemme's best young men, who has been employed at the local creamery for a number of years and holds the position f buttermaker and assistant to Mr. Gimer, the manager. He is an honest and industrious young man and is making good in his chosen work.

The happy young couple will begin housekeeping in Klemme and will reside in the John Sanderfelt house in the south part of town.

The Times joins with their many friends in extending congratulations and best wishes.

First Setting Of Eggs At Klemme Hatchery

Arley Blickendorfer, proprietor of the Klemme Hatchery was busy the past week getting things in order for the first setting of eggs which were placed in the big incubator Saturday. The settings will be put in about a week apart, we understand, so that soon chicks will be taken out every few days. His first hatch from his other plant at Garner comes off today.

Spent Winter In Tent In Northern Minnesota

Herb Greimann and Bill Hodek returned Saturday from northern Minnesota where they went last fall to hunt wolves during the winter. They were up near Thief River Falls and lived in a tent all winter. They had intended to do a lot of hunting but a heavy snow fell a few days after they got there and they have been "snowed in" until this time and so only enjoyed the camping.

To The Businsss Men Of Klemme

I want to thank you for your PAST Patronage. If I am to continue operating a Motion Picture Show in Klemme I will have to have the co-operation of one and all. I have lacked the promised support of a majority of Klemme business men and have been operating on a losing basis, due largely to poor support of Klemme business men whose promises of support have not as yet been fulfilled. If you want a show in Klemme it's up to YOU to assist.

SHAMROCKS ENTER SECTIONALS FRIDAY

WILL PLAY FIRST GAME WITH NORA SPRINGS FRI. A. M.

Many Klemme Fans Expected To Take In Evening Games

Our Basket Ball Team will be playing their first game at Mason City Tournament on Friday morning of this week at 9:00 o'clock against Nora Springs. If they win it they will be playing on Friday evening at 8:00 o'clock either Kensett or Hayfield. If they win this game they will be playing again on Saturday. Notice of games to be played after Friday night will be left at our local post office. A number are planning to attend, especially on Friday evening for we confidently expect to defeat Nora Springs and we ought to defeat Hayfield, as we have defeated them twice before during the season, once on their own floor.

School will not be closed Friday. Only those of our team who may be called upon to play in Friday morning's game will be excused from school Friday. On Friday night we hope all of our students who can will be at Mason City rooting for our team. We appreciate the enthusiasm folks out of school have displayed in the interests of our High School Team this year. We feel it has helped us win many of our games.

Glee Club To Stage Operetta

On Friday night of next week our High School Girls' Glee Club will stage a pretty operetta, "Miss Carruther's Return," which they have been working on for the last few weeks. Our school orchestra will play and we are confident the program will be one most every one will enjoy. Watch for furthre announcement next week.

New Stage Curtain Installed

The new curtain ordered for our stage has arrived and on Monday evening our Editor, Mr. Jorgenson and Mr. Will Keraus installed it. It seems to promise very satisfactory service and is very attractive in appearance.

P. T. A. Program Monday Eve

Our next P. T. A. program will be given next Monday night at 8:00 P. M. There will be two subjects discussed and some entertainment features provided by our children. We hope many will come and see the stage curtain purchased largely thru the funds earned by our Association. Come with questions for our question box. Let's make the next meeting a good one.

Miss Kidder and her domestic science girls will again serve a lunch after the program at 25 cents.

Declamatory Winners

Kanawha won one first in the First Round of the State Contests at Kanawha and Belmond won two firsts. Our contestants did not place although every one of them did splendidly.

Sidney Berhow, of Kanawha, won first place in Oratory; Olga Kalvig, of Belmond, won first in Dramatics and Mildred Jacobson, of Belmond, won first place in Humorous.

EDUCATIONAL NOTE

A New York novelist says that a man who uses 8,000 words is "well educated"; that Milton used 13,000 and Shakespeare 24,000. Huh! The Times uses thirty or forty thousand every week—not all there are in the dictionary, but some that are not. Doc Anderson or Chris Gram, on occassion, may use more words than the Times, but they don't use 'em as often. The Times isn't bragging about its superior 'education"—just noting an interesting fact, you know.

Former Klemme People Like Wisconsin

Mr. and Mrs. Ingi Lauritsen drove in Sunday evening at 7:30 from Sheboygan, Wisconsin, where they have lived the past few months. Mr Lauritsen has had a fine job with a large contracting concern and has been busy all the time. He has a couple of contracts to build houses and when he goes back next week will go back to contracting on his "own hook." He says that he and Mrs. Lauritsen like Sheboygan very much. He reports that Gus Baack is working at the carpenter trade, and that Rudy Baack is working in a tannery, and both making good.

Mrs. Irmscher is well known by a number of people in this vicinity.

DR. ZINN'S FATHER OLDEST PIONEER

WAS OLDEST RESIDENT OF HANOVER, ONTARIO, CANADA

Brothers And Sister Lived To Ripo Old Age

(Hanover Post, Hanover, Ont., Can.)

The last of the "old guard" of the township of Carrick, in the person of Mr. Frederick Zinn, passed away in Hanover at the home of his daughter, Mrs Henry Reuber, last Saturday evening at 7 o'clock He was in his 97th year. Death was the result of a general breakdown due to his advanced age.

The late Mr Zinn could tell a colorful story of the pioneer days in Carrick township. He went there when it was a wilderness, but, with indomitable courage, hewed out a home for himself and his family. His homestead of 100 acres was on the 10th concession, and his neighbors of that concession have been gathered to their fathers these many years They took their grain to Guelph, a distance of some sixty miles, by oxen. These first settlers had great trouble with wild animals, the late Mr. Zinn often relating how his hog pens were often depleted by marauding bears.

Deceased was a quiet, formal man whose main interests lay in home He never accepted public office His main characteristic was his independence of thought and ability to know his own mind. He worked hard and prospered, but never speculated He was upright honest and fair in his dealings, he had something of the attitude of the "man from Missouri'—he had to be shown. He was a member of the Evangelical church since early in life and assisted to build the church, on the 10th of Carrick. In his religious beliefs he was firm and steadfast, but his was an unemotional nature and his religion was practical and had to appeal to his reason In politics, he was a Liberal, but, while staunch, he was not bitter. He was ever a strong prohibitionist, and was particularly keen to cast his vote for that cause whenever he had the opportunity, even in the latter votes of recent years. Personally he never drank intoxicating liquor, even in the early days when it was more of a custom than it is now, and he never smoked. As he reached the advanced age of 97 years it would appear that liquor and tobacco are not conducive to long life But he had a superb constitution and hardly knew a day's illness all his long life until recent years.

Deceased was born in Breitenbach, Germany, on October 19, 1830, being a son of Mr and Mrs. George Zinn. In 1847 he emigrated to Canada with his parents, settling in Sebringville, Ont In 1852 he was married there to Caroline Kleeman. They moved to Carrick in 1854. With the exception of a few years spent in Mildmay, deceased lived all his life in Carrick until he came to Hanover 13 years ago to live with his daughter. Mrs. Zinn died October 13, 1896, and the following year he married Elizabeth Dippel, who died on July 21, 1877. Of the first union, 2 sons and 2 daughters survive, as follows: A. K. Zinn of Battle Creek, Mich., Dr. George Zinn, of Klemme, Iowa, Mrs. John Quanz of Gowanstown and Mrs. H. Reuber of Hanover Of the second union, three children were born, one son and two daughters The son is deceased. The daughters are Mrs John Rapp of Walkerton and Mrs. Cornelius Walter of Waterloo. There are also 29 grandchildren living. That the Zinn family are long-lived is evidenced by the fact that his oldest brother, Henry, died at the age of 92 years; his youngest brother, Ernest, at the age of 81 years, and his only sister, Mrs. Geo. Boettger, at the age of 89 years. The funeral took place yesterday afternoon to the Hanover cemetery, Rev. Mr. Becker having charge of the obsequies.

Mysterious Miller will be in this city soon. Watch for dates.

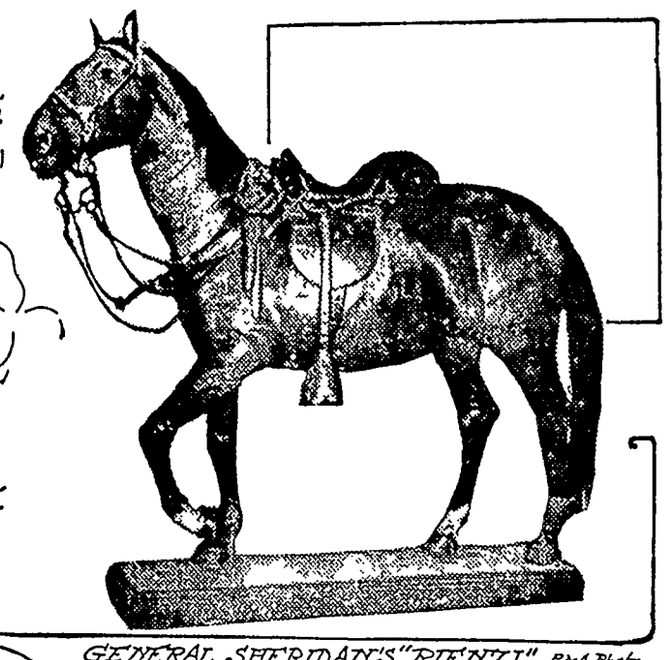
PAUL REVERE'S RIDE



GENERAL SHERIDAN'S "RIENZI" P&A. Photo

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

THE dog may be our most faithful friend, but even he can never displace in the affection of mankind that noblest of all four-footed animals, the horse. About every so often some ill-advised prophet arises to declare gloomily that the motor age is about to mark the passing for all time of faithful Old Dobbin. But strangely enough Old Dobbin refuses to be doomed. He keeps right on plodding along as he has for centuries, proving himself indispensable in a host of ways and refusing to allow any man-made contraption by its popping, smoking multicylindered salvos to frighten him away from his place beside man in getting the world's work done.

The horse is not losing ground to the gasoline engine. He is more than holding his own. No less an authority than Wayne Dinsmore, secretary of the Horse Association of America, pointed out at the annual meeting of that organization that at the close of 1926 there had been four outstanding accomplishments of the year as regards the horse. These were an increase in breeding of horses and mules in those states having the best type of foundation stock, an improvement in the attitude of city users toward horse-drawn vehicles, a marked improvement in the position of farmers toward the use of horses and mules and a rapid gain in the numbers of horses for polo, general riding, exhibition and commercial purposes.

Here is the opinion of another expert—J. O. Williams, chief horse husbandryman for the United States Department of Agriculture. He says: "Many signs indicate that the horse as an institution is no longer on the down grade in this country. The best one of these signs is the growing use of the horse for riding—not riding to get somewhere, as in former times, but for sheer pleasure and esthetic and physical benefit. Five years ago an estimate of 100,000 horses maintained in this country for pleasure riding alone would have been a liberal one. At present it is conservative to say that 500,000 horses are kept solely for that purpose. And the number is increasing rapidly with the result that the breeding of good horses has been stimulated. In fact a serious shortage of horses probably impends. In a year or two horses may be riding a boom as striking as the recession which for a time seemed almost to threaten the continued existence of trained horses on a large scale in this country."

Quite aside from the economic factors which might save Old Dobbin from extinction, there is the matter of sentiment which undoubtedly will stave off impending doom for many, many years. In fact, man's sentimental attachment for his horse has always been second only to his attachment for members of his family or some other human being and no other animal, with the possible exception of the dog, can claim such a strong bond of affection. To the white man, the custom among many Indian tribes of slaying a dead warrior's favorite horse on his grave, may have seemed a bit queer. Yet the following news story which went out over the wires only last December indicates that red man and white are brothers under the skin where a horse is concerned:

The Dalles, Ore.—The strong friendship of a man for his horse, developed through a score of years in a lonely homestead in the Mosier hills, has ended in death for P. J. Frederickson and Polly, his twenty-two-year-old companion. Frederickson died first, and his last request was that four of his neighbors dispatch Polly as humanely as possible. He did not want the animal to fall into less kindly hands than his. The reports of four rifles echoed through the Mosier hills Friday and Frederickson's last wish had been fulfilled. According to the ranchers who carried out their neighbor's request, Frederickson had raised the animal from colthood. The man's last act before he died, they said, was to feed and bed down his equine "partner."

Out in Hawaii near an army post a four-footed veteran of more than thirty years of active service is browsing in a pleasant pasture, secure perhaps in the knowledge that the peace and comfort due an old soldier is to be his until his death. His name is "Whiskers" and he was just a troop horse in Uncle Sam's cavalry, but he is typical of a long list of these faithful mounts for whom the troopers themselves have decreed a peaceful old age and for whom the troopers are willing to dig deep in their pockets to assure it.

But lest you think that it is only the soldier who thus rewards the comrade of his battle days, read this item which appeared in the newspapers the other day:

Pueblo, Colo.—A "green grass" pension has been awarded to 13 horses which have drawn laundry wagons here for many years. They were retired in favor of motorized equipment. The owners decided the steeds had served their time in the harness and placed them in a large pasture.

Go down into Kentucky and visit some of the farms in the Blue Grass country, famous for its thoroughbreds, where you can see the ease and luxury to which some of the kings and queens of the turf have been retired when their racing days were over. Visit Faraway farm in Fayette county, owned by Elizabeth Daingerfield, and see the royal state in which Man O' War, called by experts the greatest race horse of all time, lives.

Or visit the great Hamburg Place farm on the Winchester pike near Lexington, the property of John E. Madden, where they will show you "The Resting Place of Celebrities," where lies Nancy Hanks, 2:04 world's champion trotter from 1892 to 1894; Major Delmar, 1:59; Hamburg Belle, 2:01½, and Silicon, 2:18½. There also lie the thoroughbreds Ida Pickwick, known as the "Queen of the West; Ogden, Plaudit, Star Shoot, for five consecutive years the running world's leading sire; the "Black Whirlwind" Imp, credited with having won 60 races, thus earning the title "Queen of the East," and Lady Sterling, famous as the dam of Sir Barton and Sir Martin. Thus does man honor and cherish his friend, the horse, even in death.

In fact the honor roll of horses who deserve to be remembered by man is a long one and many of them are world famous. There was Bucephalus, the famous charger and companion of the great Alexander, who conquered the world and then sighed for more worlds to conquer. There was Marengo, the white horse which Napoleon rode at the battle of Waterloo, and Copenhagen, the handsome chestnut steed which bore upon its back on that momentous day the victor, duke of Wellington—"God's humbler instrument, though meaner clay, should share the glory of that glorious day."

America, too, has its roll of honor of horses who have played a distinguished part in making history. Although history has not preserved the name of the "steed flying fearless and fleet" one night some hundred and fifty years ago, no one ever thinks of Paul Revere without thinking of the horse which bore him when "the fate of a nation was riding that night."

Then there was the horse hero of another famous ride. Remember:

> Hurrah! Hurrah for Sheridan!
> Hurrah! Hurrah for horse and man!
> And when their statues are placed on high,
> Under the dome of the Union sky,
> The American soldier's Temple of Fame,
> There, with the glorious general's name,
> Be it said, in letters both bold and bright:
> "Here is the steed that saved the day
> By carrying Sheridan into the fight,
> From Winchester—twenty miles away!"

Unfortunately the poet's words were not prophetic for it is doubtful if one American out of ten can tell you the name of Sheridan's mount on that historic day in October, 1864. (Incidentally, the writer of this article had to search through half a dozen volumes before discovering it.) The "steed as black as the steeds of night" bore the name of Rienzi. He had been presented to Sheridan by Captain Campbell of the Second Michigan cavalry, had carried the general through nearly all the battles from the Rapidan to Petersburg and had several times been wounded. He was a powerful animal, so nimble of foot that it was said he could walk five miles an hour. Not only has Rienzi's name been forgotten, but after he died he was sadly neglected. The stuffed body of the black charger several years ago was found abandoned in a shed at Governor's island, New York, in a rather delapidated condition, but it has since been restored and, bearing the original saddle and bridle which Rienzi wore that historic day, it now stands in the National museum in Washington.

A Civil war charger that is even more famous than Rienzi was General Lee's Traveler, the stocky little gray which bore its master safely through all the bloody conflict from 1862 to the end of the war and then became his daily companion until death finally claimed the great leader. At his master's funeral the horse was placed close to the hearse and it is said that when the coffin was carried out from the church Traveler put his nose on it and whinnied inquiringly. Traveler survived General Lee two years. His skeleton is now preserved in Lexington, Va.

In the Dyche museum of the University of Kansas is preserved the mounted skin of another famous horse. He is Comanche, the claybank sorrel ridden by Capt. Miles Keogh in the fatal battle of the Little Big Horn, where General Custer's Seventh cavalry was nearly wiped out by the Sioux and Cheyennes. Comanche, bleeding from seven wounds and barely able to stagger about, was the only living thing found on that awful field a few days after the battle when General Terry's relief column approached. He was tenderly cared for and wherever the Seventh cavalry went thereafter Comanche went with it, but no man ever sat on his back again. Comanche died at a ripe old age while the regiment was stationed at Fort Riley.

ORCHARD GLEANINGS

SPRING PRUNING OF BERRY BUSHES

The pruning of blackberries and raspberries at this time of year is most important, since it will affect the size and quality of the fruit produced this summer. It may be done satisfactorily any time from now until growth starts, says J. Harold Clark, instructor in pomology at the college of agriculture in New Brunswick, N. J. If the plants are carefully pruned, they will be more vigorous and although fewer fruits may be produced, the increase in size will be great enough so that there will be no decrease in total yield. Plants that are pruned annually will remain vigorous and productive much longer than unpruned ones. Pruning is also essential if the plantation is to be cultivated efficiently and the fruit picked economically.

Blackberries and raspberries have biennial canes which bear fruit the year after they are formed, and then die. The first pruning operation, therefore, will be to remove these dead canes, as well as weak canes which would bear very little fruit. It is recommended that the old canes be removed as soon as the crop is picked, but often it is not done then, owing to lack of time.

Canes of blackberries and black raspberries should be headed back to a height of 2 to 3 feet, and the laterals shortened to a length of 12 to 18 inches, depending upon the vigor of the individual plant. Summer pinching of the canes when they reach the desired height is recommended, since it is desirable to have the fruiting area fairly close to the ground and on a stocky cane with several laterals, rather than have it on a long unbranched cane which is apt to bend to the ground under a heavy crop.

Red raspberries do not have these strong lateral branches and should be headed back to 2 or 3 feet, depending upon the apparent vigor of the plant.

Manure Benefits Heavy Soil in Fruit Orchard

Applied to orchards on a heavy soil, the benefits of manures are equally advantageous, or even more so than those on light soils. While the latter are made more compact, the reverse situation is true with the heavier soils. They become lighter and easier to work. The individual soil particles are kept from running together and thus there is less baking of the surface after a rain or irrigation. The larger the proportion of straw in the manure applied, the greater will be the extent to which this will be true. Combining the chemical and physical effects of manure in the soil, it would seem difficult to find a more suitable fertilizer for orchards. While the chemical plant food elements which it contains are not so readily available for the plant's use, as is the case with some commercial fertilizers, it accomplishes the important purpose of adding the limiting element of most soils—humus. In some sections a much more satisfactory cover crop growth—further increasing the organic matter of the soil—is secured following the application of manures.

The rate of application usually depends upon the available supply. Generally speaking, there is no danger of putting on too much. Ten tons per acre, however, every two years is considered a very fair application, although twice that amount will do no harm. Apply in the fall or winter and plow under early the following spring in order that the process or decay may begin before there is a lack of moisture.

Profitable to Buy All Orchard Supplies Early

"The early bird catches the worm" is a saying as widely known as any in the English language. The truth of its application is very great.

There is considerable doubt in the minds of most fruit-growers at the present time whether they are birds or worms. In fact, the general opinion seems to favor the latter view. It will pay the fruit grower well to buy his supplies early and through some organization that gets the lowest possible prices.

Think about your future requirements now. You may need arsenate of lead, blue stone, ammonium sulphate, nitrate of soda or many other supplies. Often big savings can be made by buying now before the peak demand is reached for these materials. It is not uncommon to get large discounts for early payment. Few farmers have all the money they need for working capital but many have borrowing power with their local bank and can thus take advantage of these discounts.

Crown Gall Pest

A nursery pest which is sometimes found on young trees is the crown gall. This is a bacterial disease which is indicated by tumors or swellings near the crown or at the point where the graft was made or by an immense number of fine hair-like roots growing from the same point. Trees infected with this disease should be burned.

The future growth and health of an orchard tree will average much higher if care is taken to exclude this pest at planting time.

THE WORLD'S GREAT EVENTS

ALBERT PAYSON TERHUNE

(© by Dodd, Mead & Company.)

Frederick the Great

An unhappy boy, imprisoned and in danger of death, was one day forced by his father to stand at the grated window of his cell and watch his dearest friend executed. The boy was Prince Frederick of Prussia, later known as Frederick II, or Frederick the Great. He had a sadder, more unfortunate boyhood than did any beggar in his kingdom. His father, Frederick William, was a stern, harsh king, and a harsher parent. He was military-mad and would allow his young son Frederick to study nothing but the art of war. The boy loved poetry, music and science.

It was, in a measure, the old story of Peter the Great and Alexis over again. And it almost had the same terrible climax. For, at last, wearied by his father's abuse and cruelty, and resentful of the injustice to which he was subjected, Frederick made up his mind to run away from the life he hated and to take refuge with his mother's brother, King George I of England. His most intimate friend, Lieutenant Katt, helped him escape from Berlin; but their flight was discovered and they were caught and brought back. Then came such punishment as few fathers could have devised.

Frederick was sent to prison and Katt was put to death directly outside the prince's cell. King Frederick William then demanded that Frederick renounce all rights to the throne. This the prisoner pluckily refused to do. The king in rage declared he would put Frederick to death, and was with difficulty dissuaded from the plan. He contented himself with exiling his son from court; and, in 1733, when Frederick was but twenty-one, forced him to marry a princess for whom the young bridegroom had not the slightest liking. For seventeen years after that Frederick lived in semi-seclusion on one of his estates, only returning to public life when, on the death of his father, in 1740, he came to the throne of Prussia.

During the forty-six years of his reign Frederick well earned his title of "The Great." He found Prussia a secondary German state with a population of barely 2,240,000. He left it rich in new possessions, territory and power and with a population of 6,000,000.

The fair principalities of Silesia, according to Frederick's ideas, ought to belong to Prussia. So, the same year he became king, he set out to acquire them. A two years' war followed, in which Frederick's hardly acquired military education stood him in good stead. For he was victorious, and Silesia was annexed to Prussia. Frederick ruled his new possessions well and with mildness; and, although a Protestant, allowed religious freedom to Silesian Catholics. Knowing the unsettled condition of Europe and having fresh conquests in view, the victor now devoted himself to building up the strength of his armies; and, in 1743, he annexed East Friesland to his kingdom.

Austria, so Frederick believed, had designs on Silesia; so he formed an alliance with France and other countries and (to keep Austria's mind on matters of defense rather than aggression) invaded Bohemia in 1744. But the Austrians and Saxons combined and repelled the invasion. The campaign dragged on with varying fortunes until a peace treaty was signed by whose terms Frederick still held Silesia, and received $1,000,000 war indemnity.

Eleven years of peace followed, which were spent by Frederick in strengthening Prussia at home and abroad, in promoting arts and industries and in raising his army to 160,000 men. This peace period was broken by a rumor that Russia, Austria and Saxony were combining against Prussia. Fearing lest he might lose his cherished provinces of Silesia, Frederick forestalled the allies' action by invading Saxony. This started a seven years' war, in which Frederick won little except a military reputation that rendered him a strong and decisive power in European politics. When peace was declared he used his own private fortune in repairing the ravages made by war.

In the same year he concluded a treaty with Russia and was active in the first partition of Poland. By the terms of this division he acquired all of Polish Prussia and part of Great Poland to the north. Henceforth, Frederick's kingdom was divided into West and East Prussia.

The crowning act of Frederick's statecraft, and one that stirred the political system of the whole continent (as well as marking Prussia's first open attempt to lead all the German states), was the forming, in 1785, of the "Furstenbund" (League of Princes) of the German kingdoms and principalities into a solid federation; thus beginning what, in 1870, his descendant completed.

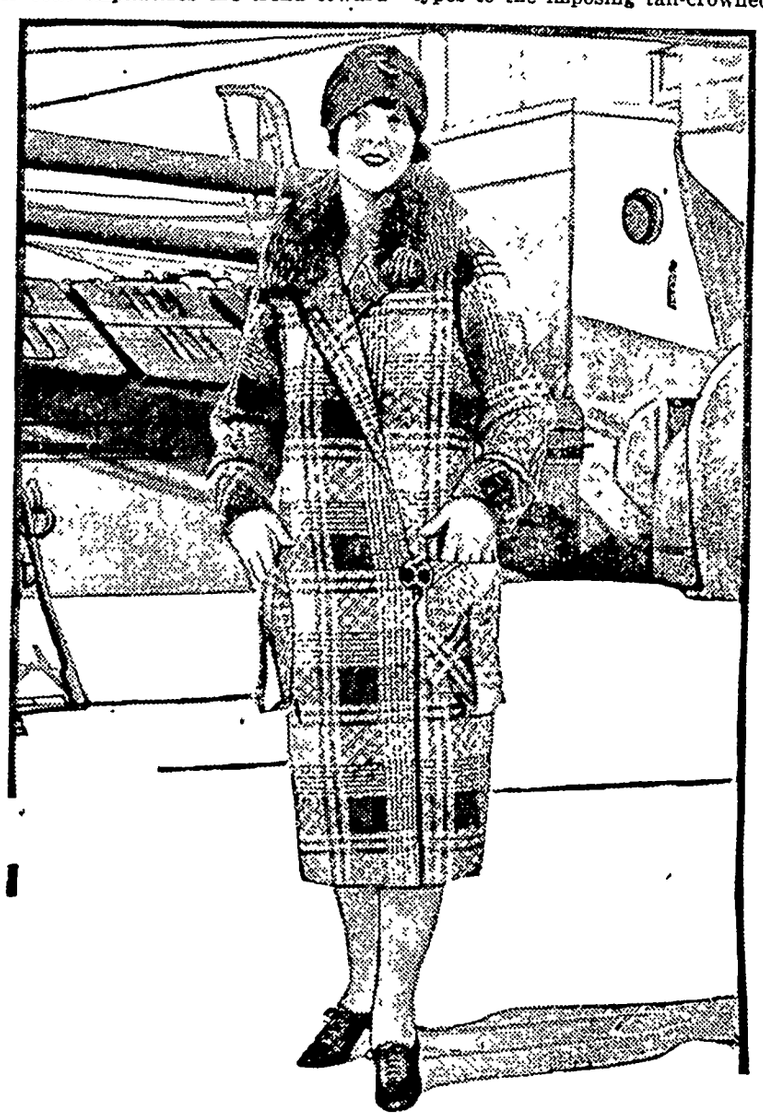
In 1786 Frederick the Great died, leaving his nephew, who succeeded him, a kingdom his genius had increased in area by 29,000 square miles, a population increased by 3,600,000, a treasury containing over $70,000,000 (the richest in Europe), an army of 200,000 and boundless credit with every other nation.

Thus, in his seventy-fourth year, perished the greatest of German monarchs, a man whose father had thought him a fool and unfit to reign.

COATS OF NOVELTY WORSTEDS; SPRING HATS FEATURE CROWNS

The black and white vogue is "carrying on" at a fast and furious rate for spring. Especially is this true in the realm of sports coats, where startling black and white plaids are considered one of the smartest items for the coming season.

Choose a model such as the one in this picture and you will be credited as being cloaked most fashionably. The basket weave plaided worsted which contrasts black with white, selected as the medium for this swagger coat emphasizes the trend toward extreme novelty and startling effect. Most of the spring sports coats are fur-collared. Natural lynx, collars this one.



Vogue Is for Black and White.

The latest coats are noted for their unusual pockets. In the instance of the smart spring mode here pictured, the looping of a wide strap of the fabric from beneath a large button centered in the pocket imparts to it an unmistakable style touch.

Black and white plaids with stripings of brilliant red, green and yellow rayon are the "last word" in cloakings for sportswear.

Dressier coats also register black and white combinations, but in a different manner from sports models. That is, they achieve the contrast of black and white in the trimming rather than in the weave itself. Of such are the patrician looking slim black suede models which are collared with white calfskin. Satin, moire and flat crepe are strongly advocated for the black coat for spring, for the style message from across seas places especial stress on the silk coat for the coming months. These are variously detailed with white ermine or baby fox and the combining of monkey fur with ermine is an effective new touch.

Black cloth or silk coats with white embroidery are attracting much interest. These are timely for immediate wear. Later the white coat quilted or hand embroidered in black will make its appearance.

To the crowns of our chapeaux do we pay homage these days, for apparently they are "doing the honors" in conveying the spring millinery style message. Especially do crowns have everything to do with the smartness of the new felts. Such acrobatic feats as these tall crowns do perform—they turn, they twist, they double over, and when all is said and done, they come forth in handsome form. In the manipulation of the fashionable crown, not a trick does the milliner miss in the way of latest "wrinkles," creases, folds and other details which trend to mold into becomingness.

The choice of the Parisienne for the practical hat for immediate wear still rests on felt, and it includes every version from the youthful skull cap types to the imposing tall-crowned effects which are so eminently suited to the matron. As the French milliners see it, the style is all in the felt itself and its manipulation. It needs little or no trimming—a modish touch of grosgrain ribbon, a sparkling ornament to distinguish it, or that which is latest of all, a novel flat feather motif.

There is also an inclination manifest to give a springlike aspect to the felt hat with a cluster of flowers cunningly posed either low on the left brim or conspicuously high on the crown. The vogue is especially for violets, either white or purple. Sometimes there is a violet-colored scarf to match.

From the standpoint of draped crowns which spell extreme chic, the hats herewith pictured are fraught with interest.

An outstanding feature of the first model in this group is that the milliner makes part of the hat of felt piecegoods, using a felt hood for the muchly bedraped crown. The brim of the hat of imposing crown, shown at the top to the right, rolls up at one side, which is a most stylish thing for it to do. The fact that it is velvet-faced, and that the tall tabs are stitched row-and-row adds to its "Frenchiness." The crown of the center hat expresses the "last word" of the mode. In the hat pictured below to the left we see a happy combination of style details, such as the beret suggestion for the crown, its multitudinous creases and especially its ribbon trim. The last model in the group is noteworthy in that it reveals the trend toward the cloche silhouette.

Drink Water to Help Wash Out Kidney Poison

If Your Back Hurts or Bladder Bothers You, Begin Taking Salts

When your kidneys hurt and your back feels sore don't get scared and proceed to load your stomach with a lot of drugs that excite the kidneys and irritate the entire urinary tract. Keep your kidneys clean like you keep your bowels clean, by flushing them with a mild, harmless salts which helps to remove the body's urinous waste and stimulates them to their normal activity. The function of the kidneys is to filter the blood. In 24 hours they strain from it 500 grains of acid and waste, so we can readily understand the vital importance of keeping the kidneys active.

Drink lots of good water—you can't drink too much; also get from any pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast each morning for a few days and your kidneys may then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for years to help clean and stimulate clogged kidneys; also to neutralize the acids in the system so they are no longer a source of irritation, thus often relieving bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive, cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink, which everyone should take now and then to help keep their kidneys clean and active. Try this; also keep up the water drinking, and no doubt you will wonder what became of your kidney trouble and backache.

"That's funny. You look just like a friend of mine, named John. Your hat is like his; your overcoat is like his; your scarf is like his, and even your attempted mustache is like his."

Women Need a Mild Laxative —Not a "Physic"

Countless girls and women now know how foolish and needless it is to "purge" and "physic" themselves to avoid sick headache, dizziness, biliousness, sallow skin, colds, or sour, gassy stomach.

They have found that Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin helps to establish natural bowel "regularity" even for those heretofore chronically constipated. Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin not only causes a gentle, easy bowel movement but, best of all, it never gripes, sickens or upsets the most delicate girl or woman. Besides, it is absolutely harmless and so pleasant that even a cross, feverish, bilious, sick child gladly takes it.

HE MADE $40,000 IN JUDITH BASIN!

"A MAN that wants to be independent with a small start," says G. J. Dickson, of Coffee Creek, Montana, in the heart of the Judith Basin, "could never come to a better country than this! Nor meet a more generous and friendly people! We are satisfied and cannot say too much for the country!"

Mr. Dickson has good reason for enthusiasm. He came here empty-handed from Kansas, and is now worth $40,000. He owns 800 acres, and leases 400 more.

His crops average per acre: 18 bus. wheat, 40 bus. oats, a ton of alfalfa, 300 bus. potatoes. In his garden he grows beets, peas, onions, carrots, radishes, beans, cabbage, parsnips, lettuce, cucumbers. He raises some shorthorn cattle, Chester white hogs, turkeys, Rhode Island Reds, and his own horses for farming. He gets a $30 cream check every month, and keeps three gallons for home use.

"I like it fine," says Dickson. "The horses feed out all winter. There's no comparison between this locality and the one I came from."

THE LIQUOR PROBLEM

By Donald Gibbs

(Editor's Note: This is the first of a series of essays written by the students in Mr. Gary's Economics Class. These essays will be published from time to time.)

EARLY PHASES OF THE PROBLEM. The use of liquor dates back almost to the beginning of civilization. When grains and fruits were first grown, drinks were being made, and the earliest history of all peoples shows their familiarity with alcoholic beverages. The writings of all early people refer to the use of liquors, and also make frequent references to the dunkenness of the people. Most nations of today have some more or less characteristic national drinks. The Russians have their "vodka," a distilled liquor commonly made from rye. The Japanese their "sake," which is made from rice The Mexicans their "pulque," made from the juice of the agave; and the Tartar tribes their "Kumiss," a fermented liquor made from milk; while the Teuotrs have their beer and the Latin races their wines, all of these drinks being alcoholic and to a greater or less degree intoxicating.

LIQUOR IN THE COLONIES—Among the early American colonists liquor was more universally used than it is today. Drink was used in the home and on all special occasions, and it was not considered any disgrace to become intoxicated or for the clergy to drink with the people. Although drink was more widely used than now, the amount consumed per capita was a great deal less, as drinking in those days was not a regular habit, but was used rather on "occasions."

MOVEMENT AGAINST INTEMPERANCE.—On January 16, 1920, every saloon in the United States was abolished and the manufacture, importation, and sale of intoxicating liquor was prohibited. This was the result of a battle which was waged for nearly two centuries. In 1639 Massachusetts made the first law against the use of intoxicating liquor, Connecticut following soon after. From then on other states made laws against the use and importation of liquor. In 1847 the Supreme Court decided in favor of the power of states to pass prohibitory laws. Maine was the first to use this power and the only state which did not repeal the law. All the others either repealed it, declared it inconstitutional, or annulled them by a license tax law. It was during this quarter century (1850-1875) that the order of Good Templars, The Prohibition Party, and the W. C. T. U. was formed. Many religious denominations also organized temperance societies within ranks at that time.

CHANGE IN CHARACTER OF LATER MOVEMENTS.—The earlier temperance movement was directed against the drink traffic. It was more of an appeal to the drunkard than anything else. Later movements, while not forgetting the individual, approached the question more from a social poin of view. It recognized the evils of the drink habit, but went against the drink traffic as a most effective way of reaching the habit. It is only in recent years that we tried to determine the cause of feeblemindedness, insanity, poverty, divorce, crime, unemployment, and disease, and have begun to realize the great part intemperance has played in all these problems. We are approaching problems like these in a more scientific way than formerly, and are beginning to realize one affects the many. And if one person, through his intemperance, adds to the burden of poverty and crime, which we have to pay for, it concerns us all.

The liquor problem is being studied now from a broader point of view than ever before. The criminologist is studying it from the stand point of its relation to crime; the biologist studies it for its effect on heredity and its relation to feeble mindedness and insanity; and the social worker studies it from the standpoint of its relation to poverty; while the Captains of Industry and economist studies it from still other points of view.

As to how effective the 18th Amendment is, we have many different opinions. There is no doubt but that we still have much violation of the problem, especially where the people were strongly opposed to prohibition. But then, we cannot expect to have the whole country dry in a year or two. All social adjustments require time. President Harding, who took a strong stand for law enforcement, suggested that it may take twenty years for the nation to become really dry.

Taking into consideration that there is a lot of "Home brew" being made, and lots of "blind pigging" going on in all sections of the country, not to mention the liquor traffic, there has been a marked decrease in crime, insanity, and liquor consumed. This proves that the 18th Amendment is not a total failure.

EFFECTS OF INTEMPERANCE.—Although we can see the effects of intemperance all about us, it is impossible to make any estimate of relation of liquor to crime, insanity, disease, poverty and other social conditions. Many people are studying this problem and the reports vary a lot. I shall give a few reasons however why alcohol is not a food.

LIQUOR AND THE ACQUIRING OF WEALTH.—Whether in a trade, profession, or business, efficiency and alcohol cannot go together The loss of skill in the manual labor is noticed even with the temperate drinker. The loss of force in intellectual pursuits is greater. The lossloss of character, stability, honesty, and integrity, the foundations of true success are the greatest losses of all. Since it is known that even temperate drinking makes a worker less efficient, alcohol can be said to have barred the way to promotion, and careers of thousands of men who may have been the world's largest producers. Drunkards must be content with the husks and dregs of Industrial life

ALCOHOL AND HEREDITY.—Children are greatly affected if their parents are users of alcohol. Of ten families, the parents of which used alcohol, there were fifty-seven children born. Of these children 18 were deformed, six were idiots, six were epileptics, twenty-five failed to live, and only ten of the fifty-seven or seventeen percent normal and healthy. In ten families not using alcohol, there were sixty-one children born. Of these two were deformed, five failed to live, and fifty-four, or eighty-eight and five-tenths percent, were normal and healthy.

We thus see that the evil affects of alcohol on both mind and body are inherited.

ALCOHOL AND INSANITY.—The great increase in recent years of the number of insane has excited alarm, and considerable time has been spent to look into the problem In England, Wales, and Ireland it is estimated that alcohol causes about twenty percent of all insanity In England intemperance of the insane person himself costs about fifteen percent, and intemperance of parents brought the total up to twenty percent But when one thinks of the effect alcohol has on the mind and nerve tissue, it does not seem at all strange that continued drinking should bring on insanity.

POVERTY.—A committee of fifty men, each of national prominence in his own field of work, upon investigating found that about 25 per cent of the poverty which comes under charity societies, and about 37 percent of the poverty found in alms houses, can be traced back to liquor. A still larger percent of destitution of children was found to be due to the liquor habits of parents or guardians.

Dr. Devine says one-fourth of all destitution can be traced to liquor.

CRIME.—Intemperance causes about 50 percent of all crimes committed. The committee of fifty visited 13,000 convicts and found that liquor was one of the causes of the downfall of fifty percent of them and the first cause of 31 percent.

CONCLUSION.—The many investigations which were made into all phases of the liquor traffic in its relations to various social problems; the scientific research which was conducted; and the wide dissemination through the lecture platforms, the press, the church, and the school, of the information secured all these agencies brought to the people, as never before, a realization of actual conditions. At the same time there was growth of social consciousness and a recognition of the neccessity for, and the power of social action. These are the forces which led to the 18th Amendment and which encourages one in the belief that the liquor traffic may, in the near future, be eliminated from our social order.

Clarence Newberger had a peculiar and painful accident Tuesday. Clarence was driving to town in a lumber wagon and had a pitch fork laying in the front of the box, with the handle laying against the front of the box as so many farmers do. His horses started to run, and in grabing the lines to slow them down Clarence slipped on the wagon box floor and his foot pushed against the tines of the fork with such force that the tines punctured his shoes and stuck deeply into his foot. At this time Clarence is getting along quite well but has a very sore foot. He says, "never again will I throw a pitch fork onto the floor of a wagon box again."

Mrs. Sam Hammon, who has been at the Mercy hospital at Mason City for the past few months, returned home last week and is reported as getting along quite well. The Hammon family have been living a few miles northeast of Klemme but the first of March moved to his father's farm east of Garner.

Mr. and Mrs. Ed. Jacobs and son, Elwyn, visited at the home of Mr and Mrs. Chris Jacobs at Garner last Friday evening.

SHARING THE GOOD NEWS

LESSON TEXT—Acts 8:4-8; II Cor. 5:14-20.

GOLDEN TEXT—Ye shall be my witnesses.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Telling Others About Jesus.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Winning Recruits for Christ's Army.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Telling Our Companions About Jesus.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Christian Evangelism: Duty, Method, Results.

I. Preaching Everywhere (Acts 8:4).

Following the stoning of Stephen, the enemies of the Lord were more active than ever in their efforts to stamp out the new faith. With Saul as their leader they dragged men and women from their homes and imprisoned those who confessed Christ. The devil overreached himself in this for this persecution scattered the believers everywhere and they preached the gospel as they went. The time had now come for this witness-bearing to extend beyond Jerusalem as the Lord had commanded. The Lord permitted this persecution so as to scatter them.

II. Philip Preaching the Gospel in Samaria (vv. 5-8).

Philip was one of the seven so-called deacons. He was not an apostle, nor a minister in the accepted sense of that term, but a layman. He is the only man called an evangelist in the New Testament. He is an example of what a devoted layman can do in preaching the gospel in the evangelisation of the world. He went to the city of Samaria and preached Christ, showing that the purpose of God included these despised people. The fact that Philip preached Christ unto these people shows that the true evangelist's message is Jesus Christ. He did not preach Christ as an ethical teacher or an example merely, but Christ as the Savior from sin through the substitutionary offering of Himself on the cross. This is shown by the fact that he preached Christ to the eunuch from the fifty-third chapter of Isaiah. He not only preached Christ as the Savior from the guilt of sin, but from the power of sin as symbolized in baptism, which means not only identification with Christ in His death, but to arise in the power of His resurrection, to walk in newness of life. Then, too, according to verve 12 he preached Christ as a reigning king. Philip's preaching was fruitful, for mutitudes believed his message which was accompanied with numerous miracles. He cast out unclean spirits, healed the palsied and the lame. Great joy accompanied the reception of the gospel by these Samaritans.

III. Paul an Example of a True Preacher of the Gospel (II Cor. 5:9-20).

1. His supreme aim was to please God (v. 9).

To live or to die was immaterial to him if his service was but acceptable to God. This transcendent aim was strengthened by the consciousness that every one must one day stand before the judgment seat of Christ. This aim explains Paul's devotion.

2. His consciousness of responsibility (v. 11).

His sense of solemn responsibility was the explanation of Paul's behavior. Some thought that he was mentally unbalanced. His knowledge of God's holy nature and of man's sinful condition moved him earnestly to persuade men to be reconciled to God. No one who knows God's terror will be half-hearted in his ministry.

3. He was constrained by the love of Christ (v. 14).

This means that he was governed by Christ's love. Ministerial devotion is the expression of reciprocal love. Christ's supreme love was expressed in His death for us. Our love in return is expressed in our devotion to Him.

4. Consciousness of the God-wrought change in Him (v. 17).

It was because he was wrought upon by God and was therefore a new creature that he sought to do His will.

5. The content of the gospel which he preached (vv. 18, 19).

The reconciliation of God through the death of Christ was his central message. In the incarnation God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto Himself.

6. Paul was an ambassador sent from God to appeal to the world to be reconciled unto God (v. 20).

He was the ambassador from the high court of heaven sent to this rebellious world. In a real sense, every Christian minister is occupying the same position.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

President Coolidge Vetoes the Farm Relief Bill—Crisis at Shanghai.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

PRESIDENT COOLIDGE on Friday vetoed the McNary-Haugen farm relief bill, and all hope for governmental relief for the agriculturists was abandoned until the next congress shall meet. The chief executive, in one of the longest veto messages ever received by congress, repeated his already well-known reasons for considering the bill economically unsound and fallacious. He said it was a price fixing scheme indirectly and would put the government into buying and selling. He condemned the equalization fee as a tax on some farmers for the benefit of others. He asserted the plan would increase production and lower the world price to a point that would result in flooding the country with foreign farm product imports over the tariff wall. The President appended an opinion by Attorney General Sargent holding the bill unconstitutional in numerous particulars.

Whatever may be the opinion of the soundness of Mr. Coolidge's reasons for vetoing the bill or of his political wisdom in this respect, there is no question of his consistency and his courage in the matter. In the central West the immediate reaction to the veto was a definite determination to put Frank O. Lowden in the running for the Presidential nomination at the next national convention. The Democrats in congress saw an opportunity to win the farmer votes for tariff reduction.

MATTERS in China moved rapidly toward a crisis last week. Following his crushing defeat at Hangchow by the Nationalists, Marshal Sun Chuan-fang, hitherto ruler of Kiangsu province, gave up Hangchow, Kashing and Ningpo, second largest port in Chekiang province, and retired on Shanghai. At the same time the Nationalists in Shanghai started a general strike which, though nominally directed against Sun, was actually an anti-foreign demonstration and pretty effectually tied up business and traffic in the city. The Chinese officials tried to curb it by the summary execution of scores of leaders and student agitators whose heads were sliced off and stuck on poles in the streets. In the midst of the ruction Sun decided he was beaten and practically surrendered leadership of the anti-Canton forces there to Gen. Chang Chung-chang, boss of Fengtien, who entered the lower Yangtse valley with a large army. Crews of two of Sun's gunboats anchored in the Whangpoo river rebelled and began firing three-inch shells in the direction of the Shanghai arsenal. Owing to poor markmanship nearly all the shells fell in the French concession, where several residences were struck. French gunboats speedily put an end to this performance. On Thursday the Nationalists called off the strike, partly because they were runing out of funds and partly because of the terrorism of the executions. The beheadings ceased and most of the workers returned to their jobs.

Twelve hundred American marines arrived from San Diego on the transport Chaumont but not disembark. That made the total of American armed forces there about 2,300. Five American warships were at anchor in the Whangpoo and four more destroyers were on the way there. The British forces were constantly being strengthened, and the French were reinforced. All these may be needed when the expected struggle for possession of Shanghai starts between the Cantonese and the armies of Marshal Chang Tso-lin which are moving from the north.

BY A vote of 208 to 172 the house accepted the senate amendment to the navy appropriation bill providing money for beginning the three light cruisers whose construction the President has insisted should be delayed. The house reduced the amount from $1,200,000 to $450,000, and the senate acquiesced in this change.

IN ORDER to provide a place of refuge for British subjects imperiled by the civil warfare in Nicaragua, the British government decided to send a cruiser to the Central American republic. This plan was adopted after the British charge d'affaires at Managua had notified the government that President Diaz and the American minister, Mr. Eberhardt, had stated they could not guarantee to protect British lives and property in case of renewed street fighting. It was stated in London that the sending of the warship does not indicate a change in the British policy in Latin America nor a change in attitude toward the Monroe doctrine. Secretary of State Kellogg in a formal statement said that "Admiral Latimer has been instructed from the beginning to protect foreign as well as American lives and property and is doing everything he can to do so."

Seemingly determined to put an end to the Sacasa rebellion, the American government sent more marines to Nicaragua and Admiral Latimer created new neutral zones for the purpose of keeping the railway in operation and of protecting the cities. Dispatches from Managua said President Diaz was about to submit to the Nicaraguan congress a proposal for a 100 year alliance with the United States which would mean practically the creation of a protectorate.

ITALY'S formal reply to President Coolidge's naval disarmament proposal was transmitted to Washington. It was a politely worded but flat rejection, and was drafted by Premier Mussolini himself. Before being a military or even political problem, naval defense is for Italy one of existence, the note says. Geography establishes characteristics which cannot be disregarded. Italy's position in Europe is determined entirely by the fact that her territorial limits are within one body of water, outlets of which are entirely controlled by other nations.

The note declares that so far as the European continent is concerned, there is an inalienable interdependence of all categories of armaments of every single power and that it is impossible to adopt the measure for only the five great naval powers.

Japan, on the other hand, has accepted the Coolidge proposal and says its delegates at Geneva will have full power to negotiate an agreement extending the limitation to all classes of fighting ships. But the Japanese reply makes it plain that the government is unwilling to extend the 5-5-3 ratio to cruisers, destroyers and submarines. For these vessels it wants a ratio nearer a parity with America and Great Britain.

SOVIET Russia has been twisting the British lion's tail too persistently, and last week it received from the British government a blunt warning that all relations between the two nations would be broken off unless it mended its ways at once. In the note, called one of the most outspoken ever formulated by the British foreign office, Sir Austen Chamberlain, foreign secretary, says that the relations between the British government and the union of soviet socialist republics "continue notoriously of an unsatisfactory nature." He declares that "there are limits beyond which it is dangerous to drive public opinion in Great Britain" and that a continuance of the breeches of the agreement sooner or later will cause a break between the two countries.

All Russia celebrated the ninth anniversary of the establishment of the Red army, and the press carried articles by leading soviet authorities asserting that the army was prepared to meet all eventualities.

WITH only a few days remaining before the end of the session, congressmen made an effort to rush through a lot of legislation. In the senate this was hampered by the filibuster carried on for the purpose of defeating the bill to dam the Colorado river in Boulder canyon. Ashurst of Arizona led this filibuster and frustrated all efforts of Johnson of California, author of the bill, to bring it to a vote. As the house steering committee had decided the measure should not be taken up in the house unless acted on by the senate, it was considered practically dead so far as this congress was concerned.

In its intervals of real work the senate passed the house bill authorizing the veterans' bureau to make loans to veterans on their adjusted service certificates. The house passed the James bill authorizing an appropriation of $8,491,000 for new barracks at various army posts. President Coolidge signed the radio act and the army appropriation bill.

WHEN Samuel Insull of Chicago appeared before the Reed committee in Washington he answered most of the questions concerning his contributions to the Illinois primary campaign funds, but flatly refused to tell to whom he gave $40,000 for local political campaigns. Nor would he permit his attorney to reveal this. The public utilities magnate was instructed to return to the committee room at the end of the week, and it was expected that he would persist in his refusal to reply to the question. Then, probably he will be cited for contempt, as will be Thomas W. Cunningham of Philadelphia, who would not reveal the source of $50,000 he contributed to the Vare-Beidleman fund. State's Attorney Crowe of Chicago avoided citation by answering all questions.

SENATOR LA FOLLETTE of Wisconsin took the occasion of Washington's birthday to introduce in the senate this resolution:

"Resolved, That it is the sense of the senate that the precedent established by Washington and other Presidents of the United States in retiring from Presidential office after their second term, has become, by universal concurrence, a part of our republican system of government, and that any departure from this time-honored custom would be unwise, unpatriotic and fraught with peril to our free institutions."

In the house Representative Fairchild of New York introduced a resolution for amending the federal Constitution so that "no person shall be eligible to the office of President who has previously served two terms, whether by election or by succession due to the removal, death, resignation or inability of the President where the term of succession shall have continued for a period of two years or more."

Under the terms of the La Follette resolution, Mr. Coolidge would be ineligible for re-election next year. Under the Fairchild plan, he would be eligible.

COMMANDER FRANCESCO DI PINEDO of Italy, for the glory of Fascism, flew across the Atlantic ocean last week. He started from the Cape Verde islands, off the coast of Africa, and flew direct to Fernando Noronha island, Brazil. He passed on with the intention of making the main land but encountered heavy seas off the coast and was forced to return to the island. After his plane is repaired Di Pinedo plans to fly to Jamaica, Cuba, New Orleans, St. Louis, Chicago and New York.

FOR two days and nights the North Atlantic seaboard was swept by furious winds and tremendous seas, and before the storm subsided it had taken nearly two score lives. Boats were wrecked, beach structures razed and sea wals smashed. Far out at sea the transatlantic shipping was crippled and the great liners were all many hours late.

COAL operators and miners in conference at Miami failed to agree on a wage scale for the bituminous field. The workers consistently refused to consider a reduction of wages. It is supposed generally that this means a strike on April 1, but authorities assert there will not be a complete cessation of production in the field.

OHIO lost one of her most distinguished sons in the death of Judson Harmon, who passed away unexpectedly in Cincinnati at the age of eighty-one years. Mr. Harmon was twice governor of Ohio, once attorney general of the United States, and several times a prominent possibility for the Democratic Presidential nomination.

Skim Milk Good for Farm Stock

Can Be Made Into Concentrated Product for Poultry and Hogs.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Surplus skim milk at creameries and city milk plants can be made into a concentrated product suitable for poultry and hog feeding, says the United States Department of Agriculture. Improved methods of souring and concentrating skim milk, developed by the bureau of dairy industry, make it possible to manufacture a product that will keep without spoiling, thus overcoming the chief difficulty experienced in the past in using skim milk in this way. The method is described in department circular 404 C, just issued and now ready for distribution.

Special Culture Used.

Concentrated skim milk must have an acidity high enough to keep it from spoiling. The ordinary lactic bacteria in milk do not produce sufficient acidity for this purpose. In the new method a special culture which develops a high acidity is used. By this method the bureau has been able to develop an acidity in concentrated skim milk of 6 per cent, which is sufficient to keep the product indefinitely without appreciable change.

Many concerns are now making poultry and hog feed from skim milk concentrated by these improved methods. The product usually sells from 8 cents a pound at the factory when sold in car lots to 4 cents in small packages. No difficulty has been experienced in disposing of large quantities, either to poultrymen and hog raisers in the vicinity of the plant or to jobbers who specialize in poultry feeds.

Estimated Cost of Production.

At an estimated production cost of 1½ cents per pound for the product, a price of 3 cents at the factory would net about 25 cents per hundred for skim milk, and at 4 cents the return would be about 58 cents. As a means of disposing of surplus skim milk this product has certain advantages, says the bureau of dairy industry. It is a staple product with an established market. It can be made at any season of the year and stored to supply a uniform demand, or it can be sold to jobbers whenever a sufficient quantity for shipment has accumulated.

Copies of the circular may be obtained, as long as the supply lasts, by writing to the United States Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C.

Three Good Methods of Treating Oats for Smut

Three methods of treating seed oats for control of smut have been suggested. In the formaldehyde treatment the grain is spread on a clean floor or canvas and sprinkled with a solution of 1 pint of formaldehyde to 40 gallons of water. The solution is applied at the rate of three-fourths of a gallon to each bushel as the grain is shoveled and then the pile covered with a blanket or canvas for two or three hours. After the seed has been spread to dry, it should be sown as soon as possible to avoid injury to germination.

In the dry method, 1 pint of formaldehyde is diluted in 10 gallons of water. This being a stronger solution, only 1 pint per bushel is required and may be spread with a vapor sprayer, after which the grain is covered for two hours and then spread to dry.

The dust treatment, though more expensive, has an advantage inasmuch as the grain may be treated at any time before seeding, without impairing the germination. The dust is prepared by thoroughly mixing and pulverizing together 2 pounds of corrosive sublimate and 1 pound of copper sulphate or blue stone, and dusted on, 8 ounces to each bushel of grain.

FARM NOTES

Idle land is an expensive luxury.

One of the best uses of waste land is for growing a farm wood lot.

Lime put on the soil in the fall is best for the crops which follow and saves labor in the spring also.

* * *

Lime is a bulky product. The economical way to handle it is to haul direct from the car to the field. Extra handling means added expense.

Kill ants in the garden with carbon bisulphide. Thrust a stick into the middle of the hill. Pour in a spoonful of bisulphide and cover the hole.

Mixtures of sudan and soy beans grown together did not yield as much as sudan alone, but the quality of the hay was improved in test experiments carried out.

Late fall and winter dressings of manure on old stands of alfalfa have increased the hay yields by nearly one ton per acre, when the manure was applied at 2½ tons annually.

The sweet clover plant is hardy but that does not mean it needs no care or management. This crop is used in a number of different ways and its proper management is, therefore, dependent very largely upon the use made of it.

haw did understand. The look in protruding eyes proved that. Those s shifted wildly, turning this way l that, as if in search of the help ich lurked among those spectral es. He himself stood as motionss as one of them, and as he stood moistened his thin lips with the tip a trembling tongue.

"Now," said Laurie, "I'm going to ve the truth. I'm going to have it and I'm going to have it quick. you don't tell it, I'll kill you. Probly I shall kill you anyway. But t you will answer two questions. hat power have you got over Miss yo? And what are you trying to ?"

Shaw hesitated. Again his proding eyes turned wildly to the right d left, as if in search of help. Still lding the revolver in his right hand, urie slowly reached out his left and zed the other's throat in the grip his powerful young fingers.

"Keep still," he warned, as the oth- started to raise his hands. "You ink the game isn't up, but it is. Now k, and talk quick."

He tightened his grip on the thick, ppery throat. "I'm enjoying this," rasped. "If you were anything but e snake you are, I'd give you a hting chance. But a creature that es chloroform and hires three thugs help him in his dirty jobs—"

He increased the pressure on the ick neck. Shaw's face began to rple. His eyes bulged horribly. He oked, and with the act gave up.

"Hold on," he gurgled. "Listen."

The pressure on his throat slightly laxed. With eyes closed, he colpsed against the nearest tree trunk. urie followed him, expecting some eacherous move; but all the fight emed out of the serpent. He was utching at his coat and collar as if t yet able to breathe.

"I've had enough of this," he finally sped out. "I'll tell you everything."

Even as he spoke, Laurie observed at one of the clutching, clawing ands had apparently got hold of hat it was seeking.

and where she was to wait for Laurie. To go on meant to take a chance, but she had been ordered not to stop. There was a certain exhilaration in obeying that order. Crouched over the wheel, with head bent, and guessing at the turns she could not see, she pressed on through the storm.

CHAPTER XV

Burke Makes a Promise

Burke, dozing over the fire in his so-called office, was aroused from his dreams by the appearance of a vision. For a moment he blinked at it doubtfully. Then into his eyes came a dawning intelligence, slightly tinged with reproach.

Burke was an unimaginative man, who did not like to be jarred out of his routine. Already that day several unusual incidents had occurred; and though, like popular tales, they came happily, they had been almost too great a stimulus to thought. Now here was another, in the form of a girl, young and beautiful, and apparently blown into his presence on the wings of the wild storm that was Somewhat uncertainly, Mr. Burke arose and approached the vision, which, standing at the threshold of his sanctum, thereupon addressed him in hurried but reassuring human tones.

"I've had a blowout," the lady briefly announced. "Will you put on a 'spare,' please, and take a look at the other shoes?"

This service, she estimated, would take half an hour of the proprietor's time, if he moved with the customary deliberation of his class, and would, of course, make superfluous any explanation of her wait in the garage, and of her nervousness, if he happened to be sufficiently observant to notice that.

It was really fortunate that the blowout had occurred. Surely within the half hour Laurie would have rejoined her. If he did not, she frankly conceded to herself, she would go mad with suspense. There was a limit to what she could endure, and that limit had been reached. Thirty minutes more of patience and courage and seeming calm covered the last draft she could make on a nervous system already greatly overtaxed.

Burke drew his worn office chair close to the red-hot stove, and was mildly pained by the lady's failure to avail herself of the comfort thus offered.

This, it will be remembered, was January, 1917, three months before America's entry into the World war, and women able to drive motors were comparatively rare. Any girl who could drive a car in a storm like this, and through the drifts of country roads—Mr. Burke, having reluctantly removed himself from the lady's presence, was now beside her car, and at this point in his reflections he uttered an exclamation and his jaw dropped.

"It's the lad's car!" he ejaculated slowly, and for a moment stood staring at it. Then, still slowly, he nodded.

It was the lad's car which, only a short time before, he himself had put in perfect order for a swift run to New York. Now this girl had it, but 't was easy to see why. He had been wrong in his college-prank theory. Here was something more serious and much more interesting. Here was a love affair.

As his meditations continued he was cursorily glancing at the tires, looking for the one that had sustained the blowout. He was not greatly surprised to find every tire perfect. There had been plenty of mysteries in the lad's conduct, and this was merely another trifle to add to the list. Undoubtedly the lady had her reasons for insisting on a blowout, and if she had, it was no affair of his. Also, the price for changing that tire would be a dollar, and Mr. Burke was always willing to pick up a dollar.

Whistling softly but sweetly, he removed a rear shoe, replaced it with one of the "spares" on the car's rack, and solemnly retested the others. The task, as Doris had expected, took him almost half an hour. When it was completed he lounged back to the lady and assured her that the car was again ready for service.

The lady hesitated. There was no sign of Laurie, and she dared not leave. Yet on what pretext could she linger? With the manner of one who has unlimited time at her disposal, she demanded her bill, a written one, and paid it. Then, checking herself on a casual journey toward the big coat, she showed a willingness to indulge in that exchange of friendly points of view for which Burke's heart had longed.

The exchange was not brilliant, but Burke made the most of it. No, he told her, they didn't often have storms as bad as this. One, several years ago, had blocked traffic for two days, but that was very unusual.

With a gallant effort at ease, the lady took up the theme of the storm and embroidered it in pretty colors and with much delicate fancy. When the pattern was getting somewhat confused, she suddenly asked a leading question.

"Which shoe blew out?"

Burke stared at her. He wished he knew what was expected of him. Did she want the truth, or didn't she? He realized that momentarily she was becoming more excited. He had not missed her frequent glances through the window, up the road, and he knew that for the past five minutes she had been listening for something wholly unconnected with his words. In reality Doris was in the grip of an almost unconquerable panic. What had happened? Why didn't Laurie come?

Burke decided to let her have the truth, or part of the truth.

"There wasn't no blowout," he stated, defensively.

"There wasn't! What do you mean?"

He saw that she was first surprised, then startled, then, as some sudden reflection came to her, actually appalled.

"I mean that there wasn't no blowout."

"No blowout? Then—then—what did I hear?" She asked the question of Burke, and, as she asked it, recoiled suddenly, as if he had struck her.

"P'raps you got a back-fire," he suggested, reassuringly. "You come down the steep hill up there, didn't you?"

Doris pulled herself together, shrugged her shoulders, and resolutely smiled at him. She knew the difference between the sound of a blowout and the backfiring of an irritated engine. But some abysmal instinct made her suddenly cautious, though with that same instinct her inner panic developed. What had she heard?

"I put on a 'spare,' anyway," Burke was saying. "The rear right looked a little weak, so I changed it."

He was tacitly explaining the bill he had submitted, but Doris did not hear him. What had she heard? Insistently the question repeated itself in her mind. She turned dizzily, and went back for the coat. As she did so she heard Burke's voice.

"Why—hel-lo!"

Even in that moment she observed its modulation. It had begun on a note of cheery surprise and ended on one of sharp concern. Turning, she saw Laurie.

He had nodded to Burke, and was obviously trying to speak naturally.

"All ready?" he asked.

The remark was addressed to them both, but he looked at neither. There was an instant of utter silence during which they took him in, Burke with insistent, goggling eyes, Doris with one quick glance, soul-searching and terror-filled. Burke spoke first.

"What you been doin' to yerself?" he gasped.

The question was inevitable. Laurie was hatless and disheveled. His coat was torn, and across one pallid cheek ran a deep cut, freshly bleeding.

"Fell," he said, tersely.

He was breathing hard, as if he had been running. He had not yet looked at Doris, but now he abruptly swung into the little office and emerged, bringing her coat. Without a word, he held it for her. In equal silence, she slipped into it. He retrieved the cap from the pile of discarded garments still lying on the office floor, put it on, and indicated the waiting car.

"Get in," he commanded.

She obeyed and he followed her, taking his place at the wheel.

"You're hurt," she almost whispered. "Shall I drive?"

"No—Burke!"

The word was like a pistol shot.

"Y-yessir!" Burke was stammering. In his excitement he was hardly conscious that another bill had found its way into his hand, but his hand had automatically reached for and closed on it.

"Keep your mouth shut."

"Y-yessir."

"Keep it shut till tomorrow morning. You haven't seen anything or anybody at all today. Understand?"

"Y-yessir."

"After tonight you can talk about me all you like. But you're to forget absolutely that you ever saw the lady. Is that clear?"

"Y-yessir."

"Thank you. Good-by."

He started the car and swung it out into the storm. As it went Burke saw the girl catch the boy's arm and heard something that sounded partly like a cry and partly like a sob.

"Laurie!"

"H-ush!"

The car was tearing through the storm and drifts at fifty miles an hour, and this time it was headed down the road for New York.

Burke's eyes followed it, as far as he could see it, which was not far. Then he retreated to the "office," and, dropping heavily into his desk chair, stared unseeingly at a calendar on the wall.

It was a long moment before he remembered to open his hand and look at the bill he was holding. As he did so his eyes widened. The bill was a large one. With a quick look around him, he thrust it into his pocket.

"I ain't really seen nothin'," he muttered, "an' I ain't sure of nothin', anyhow."

* * * * * * * *

"What has happened? Oh, Laurie, what has happened?"

For a time Laurie did not answer. Then she felt rather than saw his face turn toward her in the darkness.

"Doris."

"Yes."

"Will you do something for me?"

"Yes, Laurie, anything."

"Then don't speak till we reach New York. When we get to your studio I'll tell you everything. Will you do that?"

"But—Laurie—"

"Will—you—do—it?" The voice was not Laurie's. It was the harsh, grating voice of a man distraught.

"Yes, of course."

Silence settled upon them like a substance, a silence broken only by the roar of the storm and the crashing of wind-swept branches of the trees that lined the road. The car's powerful searchlights threw up in ghostly shapes the covered stumps and hedges they passed and the great masses of snow that beat against them. Subconsciously the girl knew that this boy beside her, driving with the recklessness of a lost soul, was merely guessing at a road no one could have seen, but in that half-hour she had no thought for the hazards of the journey. Her panic had grown till it filled her soul.

Once, in a frantic impulse of need of human contact, she laid her hand on the arm nearest her, over the wheel. The next instant she withdrew it with a shudder. For all the response she had found she might have touched a dead man. Something of the look of a dead man, too, was in the boy's face and eyes as he bent forward, motionless as a statue, his features like stone and his eyes as unhuman as polished agate, staring fixedly at the road before them.

It was on a stretch of road through the woods that the obsession in her mind took its final and most hideous form. Close behind them, and ringing in their ears, she fancied she heard a cry in the voice of Shaw. It was not Shaw's human voice. She would not have known it in a human world. It had passed through the great change; but it was recognizable, because she, too, had passed through some great change. Recognizable, too, was the sound of Shaw's running feet, although she had never heard them run, and though they were running so lightly on top of the snow.

He was just behind them, she thought. If she turned she knew she would see him, not as she had known him, plump, sleek, living and loathsome, but stark, rigid and ready for his grave, yet able to pursue; and the new, unearthly light of his bulging eyes seemed burning into her back.

She groaned, but the groan brought no response from the tense figure beside her. The only sounds were the howls of the wind, the frenzied protests of the tortured trees, and the fancied hail of a dead man, coming closer and closer.

Explains Scarcity of Really Clever People

An epigrammatist once wrote: "Clever women hide what they know; clever men hide what they don't know." How true it is. How wise is our epigrammatist to observe and remark on this! Now, then: it is equally true that clever women hide what they don't know; and clever men hide what they know. No one can deny this, wherefore we are forced to the logical conclusion that clever women hide what they know and what they don't know, and clever men hide what they know and what they don't know, and so we see that clever people hide everything! This being thus, and as clever people, being clever, must do their hiding thoroughly and successfully, how can we know they are clever people? May it not well be that people whom we consider dull and stupid are merely clever people busily doing their hiding?

At any rate, this revelation of the hiding process clearly explains why we never, knowingly, meet any clever people.—Exchange.

Sand Pocket in Marble

A large pocket of sand was discovered in a solid block of marble at Middlebury, Vt. This sand is unlike any found in that vicinity. It is like beach sand. Geologists who have looked at it say that the marble was formed under water and probably the sand was caught in the center of the formation.

"and wen he got to town he got his grocereis and started Back home.

"he saw a rabbet and shot the rabbet and took it home and lived happy ever after."

Winter chills bring varied ills

—the time good elimination is most important

COLDS, chills and changes in temperature impose extra strain on our kidneys. Sluggishness of function is apt to permit some retention of body-poisons in the blood and make one more susceptible to the ills of winter. Presence of this unfiltered waste makes one listless, tired and achy—causes drowsy headaches, dizziness and often a toxic backache. Disturbed function is often evidenced by scanty or burning secretions. At such times a stimulant diuretic to the kidneys is indicated. Doan's Pills have been winning friends for more than forty years. Ask your neighbor!

"Fit as a Fiddle Now" Says Popular Iowa Chef

Long hours and hard work sap strength and health. Tanlac helped D. M. Torrance back to normal. In fine fettle now, he gives due credit to this wonder tonic

D. M. Torrance, 709 Park St., Des Moines, Iowa, is a live wire, full of life and energy. Three years ago long hours and hard work took toll of his health. "Standing close to a big range all day taxes the strength," he says. "It's just like standing bareheaded under a tropic sun. A chef needs lots of quiet and rest after the day. Sound sleep is essential. The first thing I noticed wrong was that the kitchen heat and hurry made me nervous. Then I could not sleep at night. After that came other complications which ran me down. I could not stand the wear and tear of those conditions longer.

"Although my nerves were all tingling and jumpy, I felt listless and drowsy. I thought my days as a chef were numbered and that I would have to change my business. But soon after starting on Tanlac I began to pick up and feel really alive and strong. Now I am entirely free from the headaches, nervousness and other distressing symptoms which had made life a nightmare. I've put on 20 pounds and feel fit as a fiddle. All thanks to Tanlac."

If overwork or neglect have taken toll of your health, start in on Tanlac today. It is nature's own tonic and body builder, made from barks, herbs and roots. Your druggist has it. Over 52 million bottles sold.

Softest Cloth Known

A wonderful new cloth, which is described as being "softer than the softest silk or wool, with a pliability greater than any known cloth," is a new material invented by a noted Paris garment designer. It is made from the fluffiest ostrich feathers, which are plucked from the quills, treated by a special process which only the inventor knows, and then woven into a cloth. The finished product is lighter in weight than the finest down, and resembles thistledown, after which it is named. Although it is phenomenally light in weight, it is very durable.

HOW MOVIE STAR'S VALUE IS GAUGED

To those of us who marvel at the enormous salaries paid to movie stars and wonder how the popularity which justifies these salaries is gauged, an explanation is offered in an article by Frederick James Smith in Liberty. To the question: "How do producers know they have a film favorite?" the writer answers:

"There are numerous barometers. One is the mail coming addressed to the player at the studio. This may run to 500 letters a day. There are the requests for photographs, sent to the studios themselves. The photograph bill of a favorite is a huge one. There are the letters sent to the film-fan magazine. These fluctuate, according to the popularity of the player's latest picture. Actors have been known to try to create a phony popularity by having friends write enthusiastic letters about them to the fan publications.

"Another indicator of popularity is what the exhibitor reports to the film company and to the screen trade papers. Since Valentino went begging—and a dozen producers muffed a gold mine—the celluloid world has taken a lot more care in watching for box-office bets."

ABACUS STILL USED IN MANY COUNTRIES

Early Greeks made their mathematical calculations on a sanded floor or table, upon which parallel lines were marked with a stylus. On this first abacus the Greek youth was taught also to write. Later the abacus passed to the Romans and counters were run in grooves or strung on wires. In the latter form it reached the Orient, was carried by the invading Mongols into Russia in the Thirteenth century and also found its way to Persia. It reached America via the Chinese laundry. In all these countries and among their natives, wherever they may be, the abacus, in different forms, but the same in principle, is still in use. The Eleventh century saw the Arabic numerals and the decimal system introduced into Europe. This ended the use of the cumbersome Greek and Roman numerals. Mathematical operations were simplified and the way opened for the development of modern figures. John Napier, creator of logarithms, invented the now indispensable decimal point in 1617.—Edison Monthly

"Then this ought to be just the thing,' insisted George. "It's a story about a cinnamon bear."

Big Engineering Feat Performed Long Ago

Big structures such as belfry towers were moved about in Crescentino, Italy, 150 years ago. The city is now celebrating the sesquicentennial of Crescentino Serra, an illiterate workman, who moved the huge cathedral bell-tower ten feet in 1770. Serra, knowing nothing about mathematics or engineering, performed the feat in less than two hours. So sure was he as to the success of his undertaking that he placed his son on the steeple ringing the bells as it was being moved, while the crowd of excited and cheering onlookers feared that the structure would fall any moment. In principle, there was no difference in Serra's method and the method used today. A bridge of beams was built under the structure, while eight ropes and windlasses were used to drag the belfry along the bridge to its new site. Serra did all his figuring mentally and intuitively. Sixty lire in gold, or $12, was all he demanded as compensation.

Resourceful Official

When a schooner sank and blew up off San Francisco recently, the wreckage covered the beach for a mile. To clear up the mess looked like a month's job for the limited force of the Frisco park superintendent. But he hadn't read Tom Sawyer for nothing. When wood was needed for the fire, the superintendent pointed to the wreckage and told the kids to "pile it there." In an hour they had a huge bonfire, the potatoes were roasting and the beach cleared. The taxpayers should keep this man on the job.—Salem News.

REPORT OF HANCOCK COW TEST ASSOCIATION NO. 2

Robert Hoadley, Kanawha, broke several records for the association year during the month of January. With eleven cows in the herd, of which nine were in milk, he produced an average of 30.7 lbs. of butterfat per cow during the month, Mr. Hoadley's purebred Holstein cow, Moonlight Segio Johanna, led the list of high cows with a production of 1254 lbs. of milk, containing 51.5 lbs. of butterfat. Five of his cows, other than the above mentioned, produced over forty lbs. of butterfat each during the month.

S. A. Barber, Kanawha, owns the second highest herd which produced an average of 29.9 lbs. of butterfat with seven cows in milk of the eight on test.

Julius Jensen, Crystal Lake, has a grade Guernsey cow which produced 50.5 lbs. of butterfat during January.

Though January has been an exceptionally cold rough month on dairy cows, the average production of all cows in the association was 19.1 lbs., the highest figure of the association year.

The following statistics for the first six months of the association year show the trend toward fall and winter freshening: In August, the association average with only ten per cent of the cows dry was 18.6 lbs. of butterfat. In November, with 24 per cent of the cows dry, the average dropped to 14.1 lbs. January gave the association average 19.1 lbs. with 23 per cent of the cows dry.

How many reasons can you give for having fall and winter calves? The tester has the following in mind. Calves can be cared for properly if housing is not insufficient during the winter months. When the pasture season arrives the calves will be at the proper age to use grass to best advantage, thereby producing cheaper and better heifers.

Butterfat is nearly always of a satisfactory price during the fall and winter which provides a good market for cheap corn and oats which must be sold before the producer has the advantage of the late increase in price. The pasture season stimulates the milk flow which tends to slow down at about the sixth month, thereby lengthening the location period. The least enjoyable and profitable months for the dairymen are likely those of September, October and November. Then comes fly time, short pastures and corn picking. If half of the herd is dry during this period everyone is happy and satisfied.

There is another phase of the question that is not common property. In testing milk, it has been found that the percent of butterfat increases during the late fall and winter and decreases as warmer weather comes in the spring. It has been proven that the fall freshened cow will produce more fat in a year than when freshening at any other season. The reason is very simple; her period of highest milk production and highest test occur at the same time.

George Gray, Britt and Robert Hoadley, Kanawha, are the most recent additions to the membership roll.

There were 14 cows producing over forty pounds of fat and two over fifty pounds. The following men own one or more of these cows: C. J. Peterson, Julius Jensen, E. W. Kellogg, B F. Higdon, S. A. Barber, Robert Hoadley, Peter Benson and Lewis Formanenk.

Five of the members are feeding alfalfa hay, three are feeding clover, eleven are feeding soybean hay, timothy or mixed hay, eleven have silos and feeding silage. All are feeding grain and fifteen are using a high protein concentrate such as cottonseed meal, linseed oil meal or bran. Two cows were sold for beef during January. One purebred bull was bought last month which brings the total up to sixteen in the association of purebred sires.

STOCK SHIPMENTS AGAIN HIT HIGH MARK HERE

Three Hundred Forty Three Cars Stock Shipped During 1926

Live stock shipments from the Klemme yards again went soaring skyward for another high mark the last week when the total number shipped hit the fifteen car load goal mark. This is the best shipment for the past few weeks and equals the shipment of January 28th, when the same number of car loads of live stock were shipped.

During the past week C. A. Larsen shipped 5 car loads of hogs on Friday and 2 more loads on Saturday, together with one load of cattle, also Saturday, making a total of 8 car loads.

The Klemme Shipping Association shipped five car loads of stock on Saturday, consisting of 2 car loads of cattle, 2 car loads of mixed hogs and cattle and 1 car load of hogs.

R. H. Miller, of near Britt shipped out 2 car loads of cattle from the local yards Saturday night.

Klemme has the reputation of being one of the largest live stock shipping points along the Rock Island. Klemme pays good prices for stock and draws stock from a great distance.

More Than A Car A Day

It may be interesting to know that stock shipments out of Klemme last year were more than a car load each day of the week, taking out Sundays, but no other holidays, which even leaves over a surplus of 30 car loads, which very nearly makes a car load a day for every one of the 365 days in the year. Last year 343 car loads of cattle and hogs were shipped out of Klemme. Mr. Barr, depot agent gave us the following figures of car loads of stock, grain etc., shipped out in 1926:

—Out-going Shipments—
For 1926

Cattle	151 cars
Hogs	192 cars
Corn	40 cars
Oats	73 cars
Other Grain	4 cars
Miscellaneous	7 cars
TOTAL	467 cars

—Out-going Shipments—
For 1925

Cattle	113 cars
Hogs	190 cars
Sheep	1 car
Corn	55 cars
Wheat	1 car
Oats	122 cars
Miscellaneous	17 cars
TOTAL	498 cars

Likewise it is interesting to know what was shipped into Klemme over the same two years and we are also giving a summary of the in-coming shipments:

—In-coming Shipments—
1926

Cattle	29 cars
Horses	1 car
Sheep	2 cars
Flour	11 cars
Coal	57 cars
Lumber	20 cars
Mill Feeds	14 cars
Cement, Bldg. Mat. etc.	29 cars
Farm Implements	1 car
Other Machinery	1 car
Automobiles	1 car
Salt	4 cars
Gasoline, Kerosene, etc.	20 cars
Apples	1 car
Immigrants	1 car
Tile, Lime, Mis.	51 cars
TOTAL	213 cars

Acomparison of the two tables shows more live stock was shipped out in 1926 than in 1925, in fact 39 car loads more. The hogs for the two years are almost equal, as there were only 2 car loads more in 1926. But there were 38 car loads more of cattle in 1926 than the previous year, which would indicate a larger crop in that line here.

Note that the bumper oat crop shows up in the 1925 report with 122 cars shipped as against only 73 the past year. There were also 10 car loads more corn shipped out in 1925, but we presume this year's 1925, but we presume the 1926 corn was fed to the 38 car loads more of cattle shipped out.

A study of the in-coming shipments reveals some interesting facts:

Housewives in this vicinity baked more bread in 1926 than in 1925, as during the past year they used 9 car loads more flour, but saved 2 car loads of coal in 1926. Buildings fell short by 2 car loads, but Klemme farmers made up that difference by using 9 car loads more of cement, building blocks and other building material than the year before, which more than offsets the slump in lumber. Klemme farmers are using over twice as much mill feeds as in 1925 and used 8 car load more in 1926. They are driving the same number of cars but bought less farm machinery. Their stock consumed the same amount of salt, but ate 2 car loads more hay. Auto-drivers got along with 2 cars less petroleum products. The natives around here got along without a carload of apples in 1926, but the farmers again made vast improvements on their land by using up 51 car loads of tile, lime for soil, etc., in 1926 as against only 27 cars of the same material in 1925.

The entire report shows in black and white that this community is far ahead of 1925 in every way and is a good indication of a return to prosperity. Now, you calamity howlers, what have you to say?

BUSINESS IS GOOD IN KLEMME, IOWA, FOLKS!

AN EDITOR'S BEATITUDES

If an editor has beatitudes they should read something like this:

"Blessed are the merchants who advertise because they believe in it and in their business; for their prosperity shall increase many fold.

"Blessed are the county correspondents who send in their well written items every week; for fame of their friendly neighborhood shall go abroad in the land.

"Blessed is the woman who sends in a written account of a party or wedding; for she shall see the details of the function and the names of her guests correctly reported.

"Blessed are those who do not expect the editor to know everything, but who call up and tell him whenever an interesting event occurs to them; for they shall occupy a warm place in the editor's heart.

"Blessed are those who cooperate with the editor in his efforts in behalf of the community, for their town shall be known far and wide as a good place in which to live."—Ex.

BRITT, SWALEDLE WIN SECTIONALS

MASON CITY AND HANSELL LOSE IN FINAL CONTESTS

Klemme Shamrocks Lost To Hayfield In Second Round

Britt and Swaledale gained the privilege of taking their high school colors to the district tournament at Vinton this week end by winning Saturday night's thrilling final basket ball games in the sectional meet at Mason City. Britt, one of the out standing class A teams in the sectional triumphed over Mason City, 24 to 19, while Swaledale, who displayed a brilliant class B team in the tournament, in a desperate fight upset the dope by defeating Hansell, 1926 class B champions 21 to 19.

The above teams will play at Vinton this week end where Britt drew Crescoe and Swaledale drew Vinton. Both teams drew tough customers for the Vinton meet as Cresco won the class A in the Charles City meet and Vinton won the class A in the Waterloo sectional. The classes are disregarded in the district meet. Winning teams in the district meets this week end will send their teams to the finals at Iowa City for next week end where the state champions will be determined.

Klemme Lost In Second Round

The Klemme Shamrocks took an easy start in the sectional at Mason City Friday morning by defeating Nora Springs 24 to 5. Their next game was scheduled with Hayfield Friday night, an old enemy who Klemme has twice defeated this season in close games. Klemme met defeat by the score of 26 to 16. The game was close until the last few minutes of play when Hayfield took a long lead which was impossible to overcome. We have no apologies to offer as Klemme put up agood fight but the "breaks" of the game went against them and they were put out of the running. Klemme stood a good chance of taking class B had they been able to get going and win from Hayfield as the other teams in the running should have been easy to conquer. However, Hayfield went out in the next round in a close game with Swaledale 21 to 19.

The summary of the tournament for both classes follows:

CLASS A
First Round

Britt 34, Belmond 19.
Clear Lake 2, Forest City 0 (forfeit game.)

Second Round

Britt 15, Garner 11.
Hampton 23, Clear Lake 16.
Mason City 23, Kanawha 14.
Thompson 15, Northwood 14 (2 over time periods.)

Semi-Finals

Britt 32, Hampton 19.
Mason City 33, Thompson 8.

Finals

Britt 24 Mason City 19.

CLASS B
First Round

Alexander 22, Carpenter 16.
Fertile 30, Dumont 13.
Corwith 2, Chapin 0 (forfeit)
Hansell 2, Geneva 0 (forfeit)
Hayfield 59, Kensett 14.
Klemme 24, Nora Springs 5.
Plymouth 24, Sheffield 19.
Swaledale 26, Ventura 20.

Second Round

Corwith 50, Alexander 8.
Hansell 37, Fertile 12.
Hayfield 26, Klemme 16.
Swaledale 17, Plymouth 16.

SemiFinals

Hansell 28, Corwith 13.
Swaledale 21, Hayfield 19.

Finals

Swaledale 21, Hansell 19.

The tournament was witnessed by the largest crowd this year of any previous year and over $1,200 was taken in at the door. Klemme sent a large delegation over, especially on Friday night to see the Klemme-Hayfield battle. A number of other Klemme fans were in attendance, however, at all of the games.

Although the Shamrocks lost out at the tournament, they have had a very successful season having lost but four games, two of these being ing tournament games. We hope to secure a complete summary of the Klemme high school basket ball team for publication at an early date.

Coach Hockey and his team are to be congratulated on the showing they have made this year.

WHAT IS NEWS?

The old story goes: If a dog bites a man, that's not news; if a man bites a dog, that's news.

Our version is: If some reader fails to scan the advertisements, that's news, but we don't like to print it.

If a reader fails to pay his subscription, that's not news; if he pays up, that's news, that's music to our ears. If we go out after an advertisement and get it, that's good news and the world of ours knows it; but if we fail to get it, that's tough luck.

OPERETTA TO BE STAGED ON FRIDAY NIGHT

Other Items Of Interest From Our Local Schools

A very pretty operetta will be staged by our Girls Glee Club at our High School Gymnasium on Friday night at 8:15 o'clock. Price of admission 20 and 30 cents. Money will be used to defray expenses of program and balance to purchase new music. Miss Kidder, assisted by Miss Stoner, and Mr. Gary who will furnish some music by the orchestra has been responsible for the program. We hope they will be rewarded by a good house on the night of the occasion.

Spelling Contest Next

Our grades 5-8 inclusive have been spending extra time the past few weeks preparatory to a local contest in which a winner will be selected to represent the Klemme Schools at Garner in a few weeks at a County Spelling Contest. Clarice Wellemeyer who represented us last year was among the last six left spelling and made a good showing. As she is now in high school she cannot represent us but some others are making a creditable showing.

P. T. A. Well Attended

The P. T. A. last Monday night was very well attended and a good program provided. Rev. GaGuger did well with the subject, "Discipline in the Home and School," and Mrs. J. N. Sprole from Garner gave a well prepared talk on "Ideals."

The children in Miss Wheatman's and Miss Bell's rooms also entertained with folk drills and songs, and Myrtle Irving gave a reading.

Take In Mens' Meeting At Britt

The superintendent was invited to accompany Rev. Gauger, J. J. Poort, A. D. Gimer and H. L. Suckow to Britt on Tuesday night to a large Methodist Men's Meeting there. Other school superintendents present there were Supt. Williams, Belmond, Hajo Pals, Swaledale; Irwin Edie, Wesley; and C E. Cooper, Britt. There may have been others we did not know or meet. Garner schools were represented by C. H. Tompkins, formerly of Klemme, who gave a brief but interesting talk. County Supt. J. R. Baggs, of Garner, was another familiar face among those present. It was a meeting of both ministers and laymen of the Algona District, but the program was by the Laymen of the church.

It All Depended

"Is there something I can do for you?" inquired a clerk of a man who was standing beside the counter, evidently trying to think of something his mistress had asked him to purchase for her.

"Why-er-er-yes," he stammered, "I want to buy a camisole, I think, or,—or perhaps its a caserole?"

"Oh," replied the clerk, "that all depends upon whether the chicken is alive or dead."

Here's a tip—Watch for Mysterious Miller—he's coming!

FATAL ACCIDENT ON WILSON FRI. EVE.

E. W. HOOD, GOODELL, KILLED IN AUTO ACCIDENT

Buggy In Which Aged Man Rode Was Struck By Passing Car

Mr. E. W. Hood, 77 year old resident of Goodell, was almost instantly killed Friday night at about 7:30 o'clock, when the buggy in which he was riding was struck by a car driven by Ben Mullen, farmer living near Klemme. The accident occured at a point about a half mile north of Goodell on the Wilson highway where a lane from the Bielefeld farm leads onto the highway.

Frank Zieger, coroner, of Garner, arrived on the scene shortly after the accident and impanelled a jury to hear the evidence. The coroner's jury delivered a verdict of "an unavoidable accident" and thus blame attaches to no one.

Mr. Hood lived a half mile west of Goodell and has been a resident of the vicinity for a number of years. He had driven to the home of his daughter, Mrs. Adriant Biele earlier in the day with a horse a buggy for a visit. He prepared leave for home at about 7:3 evening. The acident happene he was driving onto the highway from the Bielefeld lane. Two car were passing about that time and it is supposed Mr. Hood saw only the one and drove directly in front of Mullen's Ford sedan which struck he buggy alongside, the horse being far enough in the road to escape the mpact of the car.

Funeral services were held Monday at Goodell and burial made i the cemetery at Clare, Iowa. His wife preceded him in death a few years ago, but he is survived by his three sons and four daughters and some brothers and sisters. The sons are Tony of Goodell; Alphone of Belmnd; Bert of Des Moines and the daughters are Mrs. Adriant Bielefeld of Goodell; Mrs. Strait of Clare, Mrs. Fielebaum and Miss Viola, of Des Moines

"Anything But The Neck"

At a Thanksgiving dinner, William M. Evarts was asked what part of the turkey he preferred. He answered: "It is quite inconsequential to my recognized abstemiousness and supersensitive stomach's nervation whether I be tendered an infinitesimal portion of the opaque nutment of the nether extremities, the superior fraction of a pinion, or the snowy cleavage from the cardiac region."

Fifty years ago the Statue of Liberty was presented to the United States by France in appreciation of the aid given her by us in the Franco-Prussian war.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Long Filibuster in Senate Marks End of Sixty-Ninth Congress.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

NOT without considerable good work to its credit, the Sixty-ninth congress gave up the ghost on Friday. Considerable important legislation was left unfinished because of a filibuster in the senate which provided as fine an exemplification of the need of reforming the senate's rules as Vice President Dawes could wish.

Senator Reed of Missouri was determined to get a vote on his resolution continuing the life of his "slush fund" committee, and several test votes showed that he had a majority with him. But the old guard Republicans were equally determined to frustrate him, and, led by Senator Reed of Pennsylvania, they carried on a filibuster which kept the senate in continuous session for 37 hours. Missouri Reed would not permit an adjournment, so the senators, or a quorum of them, dozed in their seats or read novels while colleagues talked interminably on various topics. For instance, Cameron of Arizona spent nearly three hours reading a huge manuscript concerning the copper-mining industry of his state, and Cole Blease read the entire constitution of South Carolina. Reed of Pennsylvania at one time demanded an investigation of elections in Southern states.

"Will you investigate?" demanded Reed of Pennsylvania, "if I bring you the affidavits of persons denied the privilege of voting?"

"No!" countered Reed of Missouri. "But if you can make out a prima facie case of any Southern senator being here illegally I will investigate. The trouble is that you don't want an investigation. That's why you are holding up the public business with this filibuster."

Time out was taken Wednesday afternoon and the bill to regulate prohibition enforcement was passed. In the early hours of Thursday there was an attempt to suspend the filibuster temporarily and dispose of the public building, alien property return and second deficiency appropriation bills. Every one consented except Blease, but he was stubborn and the filibuster was resumed. Shortly after midnight, Thursday, the deadlock was broken and the senate adjourned until 8:30 Friday morning. In the few remaining hours of the Sixty-ninth congress an attempt was made to pass the important second deficiency appropriation bill, but it failed.

Among the blocked business was the report of the Reed committee citing Samuel Insull and D. J. Schuyler of Chicago and T. W. Cunningham of Philadelphia for contempt. Reed said he would revive this at the beginning of the next session in December.

IN SEVERAL respects the navy fared well last week. On Monday the house by a vote of 243 to 111 approved of the elevation of turret guns on the battleships Oklahoma and Nevada. The bill appropriates $13,150,000 for modernization of those vessels, increases the cost limit of the new airplane carriers, Lexington and Saratoga, now building from $34,000,000 to $40,000,000 each and increases the cost limit of a fleet of submarines now in the course of construction from $5,300,000 to $6,300,000.

On Wednesday President Coolidge signed this measure, and also gave his approval to two other navy bills. One of these appropriates $318,000,000 for strengthening the navy, the principal feature being the construction of three new cruisers. The other bill authorizes an appropriation of $4,654,000 for improvements at the naval stations at Coco Solo, Canal Zone; Pearl Harbor, Hawaii; Sand Point, Wash., and San Diego, Calif.

While, of course, the cruiser bill centered about the three speedy fighting craft, the measure contains for the first time an adequate appropriation for naval aviation. Rear Admiral Moffett, chief of the bureau of aeronautics, said that the $25,000,000 carried for aviation purposes will allow the navy to carry out virtually all the provisions of the first year program under the five-year naval air expansion bill.

IOWA has started the Lowden for President boom in real earnest. Republicans from every congressional district in the state met in Des Moines and unanimously indorsed the former governor of Illinois for the 1928 nomination, sending him a telegram urging him to enter the race. The meeting, in which were legislators, farmers, business men and labor leaders, selected Frank J. Lund of Webster City as manager of the movement and formulated plans for the immediate organization of "Lowden for President" clubs throughout the state. To date Mr. Lowden has made no comment on the veto of the farm relief bill and his chances for the Presidential nomination.

Charles D. Hilles, Republican national committeeman for New York, is making a tour of the country and from California sends a prophecy that Republican victory next year is certain because of the excellent record made by the Coolidge administration. It was notable in the statement that Mr. Hilles did not predict that Mr. Coolidge would be the party's nominee. Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler, who also has been traveling, said he did not hear much about Coolidge succeeding himself, but that there was much talk about Lowden and Dawes, and even of Beveridge, Governor Hammill of Iowa and Senator Capper of Kansas.

As for the Democrats, Doctor Butler thinks Gov. Al Smith is about their only choice. He found the Middle West especially interested in the picturesque New York executive. Senator Heflin evidently fears Smith may lead his party, and in the senate Wednesday he found a chance to continue his attacks on Smith and the Roman Catholic church generally. He took a slam at the British ambassador because he is a Catholic, and predicted a war between the United States and Mexico.

EDWARD L. DOHENY and his oil companies sustained a severe blow when the Supreme court of the United States affirmed the cancellation of oil land leases and contracts awarded Doheny by Albert B. Fall when the latter was secretary of the interior, holding the entire transaction was tainted with fraud. The unanimous opinion of the court not only finally revokes leases valued at untold millions on the famous Elk Hills naval oil reserves, but also recovers for the government approximately $11,000,000 paid Doheny's companies—the Pan-American Petroleum and Transport company—for the erection of oil storage facilities at Pearl Harbor, Hawaii, under contracts which the court held illegal because unauthorized by congress.

Two million dollars of the $11,000,000 loss sustained by the two oil companies—control of which was lately acquired by the Standard Oil Company of Indiana—must be borne by Doheny personally.

PRESIDENT COOLIDGE, having signed the radio control bill, submitted to the senate the names of five men as members of the commission that is to untangle the radio situation They are: Rear Admiral W. H. G. Bullard, chairman; O. H. Caldwell of New York, Eugene O. Sykes of Mississippi, Harry A. Bellows of Minnesota and John F. Dillon of California. The President is credited with having ignored the recommendations of politicians and sought to choose radio experts.

TRAGEDY has marred the tour of the American "good will" aviators in Latin America. While the squadron was flying above Palomar field at Buenos Aires, Argentina, the planes Detroit and New York collided at an altitude of 500 feet and crashed. Capt. Clinton F. Woolsey and Lieut. John W. Benton of the Detroit were killed, the former being burned to death in the plane and the latter jumping without a parachute. Major Dargue, commander of the flight, and Lieutenant Whitehead parachuted safely to the ground. The Argentine government paid all due honor to the dead flyers and their bodies were started home on a navy ship. The planes San Francisco and St. Louis then continued the tour by way of Asuncion, Paraguay; and meanwhile the fifth machine, the San Antonio, delayed in Chile for repairs, was flying over the Andes to catch up with the squadron.

IF SHANGHAI is to be saved from capture by the Cantonese it must be done by the Shantung troops which Gen. Chang Chung-chang has been pouring into the city and on southward. Marshal Sun Chuan-fang, formerly in control, refuses to co-operate and his army has melted away, much of it joining the southern forces. The latter were moving rather slowly last week, leading to the theory that they might avoid Shanghai because of foreign complications. The foreign volunteer corps of the city, together with the British military units that have been landed held a great parade and demonstration of strength, and tried to induce American Consul Gauss to permit the American marines and naval forces to land and take part.

In Washington Acting Secretary of State Grew replied to a house resolution asking information by stating that the assembly of American military forces in China is for the purpose of protecting American lives and property and not the result of any international arrangement. That their services may be needed is indicated by the report of Dr. Max Gentry of Omaha, member of the Baptist mission in Szechwan province, who arrived in Shanghai on a refugee steamer. He said 93 American missionaries were marooned at Chungking, on the headwaters of the Yangtse, unable to obtain ship accommodations and apparently held there by the Chinese militarists as hostages.

AMERICA'S first complete aviation organization on expeditionary service was landed at Corinto, Nicaragua, and sent at once to Managua by rail. It is commanded by Maj. Ross E. Powell with nine pilots, and includes observation and bombing planes with trucks, field machine shop, photographic outfit and high-frequency radio sets, besides all necessary bombs and other ammunition. Three of the planes are rigged as ground attackers. Brig. Gen. Logan Feland with 1,600 marines aboard the transport Henderson was due to arrive Sunday. It was believed at the White House that the situation in Nicaragua was approaching stability.

GREAT BRITAIN'S reply to President Coolidge's naval limitation proposal is a polite but guarded acceptance, with insistence that ample allowance be made for England's special position requiring it to keep up a large destroyer and cruiser force in order to protect the food supplies along the far-flung communication lines.

It is understood Mr. Coolidge will now turn his efforts toward bringing a three-power agreement on further limitation with Great Britain and Japan, though the five-power plan is not entirely abadoned.

ABOUT fifty men were killed by a mine explosion near Cwm, Wales. Prime Minister Baldwin with his wife motored to the scene to express his sympathy and was bitterly assailed by the miners, who tried to rush his car. Another mine accident, in England, took 14 lives.

LORD ROSEBERY, former prime minister, insists that a commission be appointed to inquire into the alleged sale of honors during the Lloyd George regime. He charges that about ninety new peers of the realm have the taint of money on their titles, and that this accounts for at least part of Lloyd George's $12,500,000 political fund.

Replying to the charges, Mr. Lloyd George's spokesman said the Welshman welcomed a commission, declaring he did not give any honors except "for services of cash or kind. Every party is so deeply involved that we would not suffer in the least. The same charge would be made against every government, including Lord Rosebery's."

Pure-Bred Sires Winning Favor

Three New Counties Took Up Work During the Past Three Months.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

The last report of progress in livestock improvement under the systematic "Better Sires-Better Stock" plan conducted by the bureau of animal industry of the United States Department of Agriculture and various states shows 17,047 participants. Some of these persons have large herds and flocks, while others are beginners, but all have agreed to follow the department's recommendation in using pure-bred sires for all classes of live stock raised.

Three New Counties Enter.

The report, which summarizes progress to January 1, 1927, shows that three new counties took up the work during the last three months. These new centers of activity were Piscataquis, Maine; Breathitt, Kentucky, and Cascade, Montana. In the last-named county the 15 newly enrolled participants owned among them more than 1,000 cattle and 3,000 sheep.

During the last three months' period of activity Campbell county, Kentucky, of which Gordon B. Nance is county agent, qualified for the honor roll of counties containing 100 or more live-stock owners enrolled in this progressive means for improving the domestic animals in the country. The list of such counties, several of which have more than 500 persons so enrolled, now totals 44 distributed among 10 states.

Outstanding Achievement.

The outstanding achievement during the calendar year in the better-sires campaign was the success of Union county, Kentucky, in eradicating all grade and scrub bulls, thereby being the first county in the United States to achieve this much-sought distinction. Persons participating in the campaign receive a suitably engrossed certificate of recognition and also, on request, an attractive barn sign entitled "Pure-Bred Sires Exclusively Used on This Farm." It is lithographed on heavy weather-proof cardboard and resembles a metal tablet. Further details concerning the conduct and progress of the work may be obtained from county agricultural agents or from the bureau of animal industry, United States Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C.

Alsike and Soy Beans Good as Protein Feed

Many farmers are needing a hay crop that will afford a good supply of protein, other than alfalfa and red clover. These two legumes require a nonacid soil, but not every farm is in this condition. And not every owner is financially able to apply enough lime so that the soil will raise sufficient protein hay for his feeding needs.

Fortunately, there are two good legumes that will help out a farmer who finds himself in this fix. These are alsike clover and soy beans.

Both will grow in a relatively acid soil, and both are able to hold their own as a protein feed with their prouder relatives, alfalfa and red clover.

Plant alsike and soy beans for hay till you can have your farm limed all over, by applying a little each year as your funds will allow. That's good business.

On the fields that are limed sufficiently, alfalfa and red clover may be grown.

Sudan Grass Furnishes Good Midsummer Pasture

H. D. Hughes and F. S. Wilkins are the authors of a new bulletin just published by the Iowa agricultural experiment station, Ames, which reports the results and conclusions reached following 14 years of observation and experimental work with sudan grass. The new bulletin No. 233, is entitled, "Sudan Grass." Copies will be sent to any one interested upon request to the Bulletin Section, Iowa State College, Ames.

Sudan grass is one of the best emergency, nonleguminous crops to use for hay or pasture in Iowa, the bulletin declares. Among the strong points found for this crop, are: "Its heavy yield of forage, low seed cost, ability to furnish midsummer pasture, extreme drouth resistance, ease and cheapness of growing, dependability, adapability to almost any soil and the long period over which it may be sown following corn planting.

Farm Hints

Get a stump a day, it will help make the farm pay.

* * *

Good care and regular overhauling will materially extend the life, and add to the usefulness of farm equipment.

Head lettuce caunot stand hot dry weather so the plants should be started early in a hotbed or coldframe, hardened off by leaving the glass off during mild weather.

* * *

From a soil fertility standpoint, not much dependence could be placed on soy beans grown in corn. For such purpose they would probably not be worth the corn they would displace.

Lesson for March 13

MAKING THE WORLD CHRISTIAN

LESSON TEXT—Matt. 28:16-20; Acts 16:6-15.

GOLDEN TEXT—Go ye therefore and teach all nations.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Telling Everybody About Jesus.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Winning the World for Christ.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—How We Can Spread the Gospel.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Christian Missions the Hope of the World.

I. The Great Commission (Matt. 28:16-20).

1. When and where given (v. 16).

It was shortly before the ascension in a mountain in Galilee where the disciples met Jesus according to appointment.

2. The foundation upon which the commission rests (vv. 17, 18).

In order to prepare the disciples to receive this commission, Christ declared to them that all power in heaven and in earth was given unto Him. Before the disciples would enter upon the execution of this commission they must be convinced of His Lordship. To create doubt in the minds of believers as to the deity of Jesus Christ is to cut the nerve of missionary endeavor.

3. What the commission is (vv. 19, 20).

1. "Go—teach all nations" (v. 19).

This means make disciples of all the nations, not Jews merely.

(2) "Baptize them in the name of the Triune God" (v. 19).

Those who have become disciples of the Lord should receive the rite which signifies their relation to him.

(3) "Teach them to observe all Christ's commandments" (v. 20).

Those who have become Christ's disciples should be taught obedience to all His commandments.

4. The promise attached (v. 20).

Those who obey the king in evangelizing the world have the promise of His unfailing presence.

II. Forbidden by the Holy Spirit to Preach in Asia Minor (Acts 16:6-8).

The inclination of Paul and his companions was to tarry in Asia Minor preaching the Word, but contrary to their inclination they were hurried along. We have here a fine lesson on divine guidance. The Holy Spirit is just as active and faithful in closing doors as in opening them. "The stops as well as the steps of good men are ordered of the Lord." We ought as truly to recognize God's hand in the "shut-ins" as in the "open-outs."

III. The Call to Macedonia (Acts 16:9-12).

The gospel having broken the confines of the Jewish city and country, the middle wall of partition having been abolished, the time has come for it to leap across the Aegean sea and begin its conquest on another continent.

1. The vision (v. 9).

Being hemmed in on all sides, a vision was given to Paul of a man of Macedonia pleading for help. This made plain to him the closed doors about him. In finding the divine will, we should look both ways.

2. The advance (vv. 10-12).

As soon as the divine way was known they moved forward therein.

IV. The First Convert in Europe (vv. 13-15).

The devout people were accustomed to worship by the riverside. To this humble gathering Paul came and preached to the women assembled there. A certain woman from Thyatira named Lydia, a proselyte, believed his message and was baptized.

The steps in Lydia's conversion are worthy of note for they are typical:

1. Attendance at the place of worship (v. 13).

Usually those whom God is calling are found at the place of prayer.

2. Listening to the preaching of the Word of God (vv. 13, 14).

The instrument used in the conversion of sinners is the Word of God (Rom. 10:17).

3. Her heart was opened by the Lord (v. 14).

Only the Lord can convert a soul. It is our business to preach the Word of God, and it is God's business to open the heart of the inquirer.

4. She was baptized (v. 15).

Every one whose heart the Lord has opened desires to confess Him in baptism.

5. Her household believed (v. 15).

When one is converted those in the home will find it out.

6. Practiced hospitality (v. 15).

Those who have experienced God's saving grace are thus disposed to have part in His work by rendering aid to His ministers.

Pursuit of Happiness

Many people are on the wrong scent in pursuit of happiness. They think it consists in having and getting, and being served by others. It consists in giving and in serving others.—Herald of Gospel Liberty.

CHAPTER XVI

Laurie Makes a Confession

The lights of Long Island city greeted them with reassuring winks through the snow. Seeing these, Doris drew a deep breath. She had let her nerves run away with her, she subconsciously felt.

In the first moments of reaction she even experienced a sense of personal injury and almost of resentment toward her companion. He had put her through the most horrible half-hour of her life. It seemed that no service he had rendered could compensate her for such suffering. On the other hand, he had brought her safely back to New York, as he had promised to do. Surely it was not for her to cavil at the manner in which he had done it. Laurie was exhausted and was showing it; that was all.

With their arrival at her studio his manner did not change. He assisted her from the car, punctiliously escorted her to the elevator and left her there.

"I have some telephoning to do," he explained. "I shall not leave the building, and I expect to be with you again in about fifteen minutes. With your permission, I am asking my two partners to meet me in your studio, Rodney Bangs and Jacob Epstein. What I have to tell must be told to all three of you, and"—his voice caught in a queer fashion—"it is a thing I don't want to tell more than once May they come here?"

"Of course."

"Thanks. Then I'll wait for them down here, and bring them up to your studio when they come."

In the studio, with her door shut against the world, Doris again resolutely took herself and her nerves in hand. She summoned endless explanations of Laurie's manner and appearance, explanations which, however, turn and twist them as she would, always left something unexplained.

There was, she realized, a strong probability that he had forced the truth from Shaw. But even the truth would not make Laurie look and act like that. Or would it? She tried to believe it would. Anything would be better than the thing she feared.

Five minutes passed—ten—fifteen—twenty. Save during the half-hour of that return journey from Sea Cliff, she had never known such dragging, horror-filled moments. A dozen times she fancied she heard the elevator stop at her floor, and the sound of voices and footsteps approach. A dozen times she went to her windows and wildly gazed out on the storm. As she stared, she prayed. It was the same prayer, over and over.

"Dear God, please don't let it be that way!" The aspiration was the nearest she dared come to putting into words the terror that shook her heart.

The second fifteen minutes were almost up when she really heard the elevator stop. Quick footsteps approached her door, but there were no voices. The three men, if they were coming, were coming in utter silence. Before they had time to rap she had opened the door and stood back to let them enter. As they passed her she looked into their faces, and as she looked the familiar sense of panic, now immeasurably intensified, again seized her in its grip.

Laurie, usually the most punctilious of men, made on this occasion an omission extraordinary for him. He did not present his partners to their hostess. But not one of the three noticed that omission.

He took off his coat, methodically folded it, and laid it on a nearby chair. To the brain back of each of the three pairs of eyes watching him, the same thought came. He had something appalling to tell them, and, cool as he seemed, he dared not tell it. He was playing for time. The strain of even the brief delay was too much for Epstein's endurance. High-strung, his nerves on edge, almost before Laurie had turned he sputtered forth questions like bullets from a machine gun.

"Vell! vell!" he demanded, "vot's it all about? Vot's it mean? Over the telephone you say you got to see us this minute. You say you got into trouble, big trouble. Vell, vot trouble? Vot is it?

"I guess it ain't nothing ve can't fix up," he jerked out, trying to speak with his usual assurance. "I guess ve fix it up all right."

Laurie shook his head. None of the thirty minutes he had spent on the ground floor had been devoted to improving his appearance. His black, curly hair, usually as shining as satin, was rough, matted, dirty. Across his left cheek the sinister cut still ran, raw, angry-looking, freshly irritated by the ice-laden wind.

"Sit down," he said, wearily. All the life had gone out of his voice. It had an uncanny effect of monotony, as if pitched on two flat notes. To those three, who knew so well the rich beauty of his speaking tones, this change in them was almost more alarming than the change in his looks.

Walking over to the mantel, Laurie rested an elbow heavily upon it, and for the first time looked squarely from one to the other of his friends. As he looked, he tried to speak. They saw the effort and its failure, and understood both. With a gesture of hopelessness, he turned his back toward them, and stood with sagging muscles and eyes fixed on the empty grate. Epstein's nerves snapped.

"For God's sake, Devon," he begged, "cut out the vaits! Tell us vot you got on your chest, and tell it quick."

Laurie turned and once more met his eyes. Under the look Epstein's oblique eyes shifted.

"I'm going to," Laurie said quietly and still in those new, flat tones. "That's why I've brought you here. But—it's a hard job. You see"—his voice again lost its steadiness—"I've got to hurt you—all of you—most awfully. And—and that's the hardest part of this business for me."

Doris, now staring up at him, told herself that she could not endure another moment of this tension. She dared not glance at either of the others, but she heard Epstein's heavy breathing and the creak of Rodney Bangs' chair as he suddenly changed his position.

"He killed Herbert Shaw," she almost whispered.

For a long moment there was utter silence in the room, through which the words just spoken seemed to scurry like living things, anxious to be out and away. Laurie, his eyes on the girl, showed no change in his position, though a spasm crossed his face. Epstein, putting up one fat hand, feebly beat the air with it as if trying to push back something that was approaching him, something intangible but terrible. Bangs alone seemed at last to have taken in the full meaning of the curt announcement. As if it had galvanized him into movement, he sprang to his feet and, head down, charged the situation.

"What the devil is she talking about?" he cried out. "Laurie! What does she mean?"

"She told you." Laurie spoke as quietly as before, but without looking up.

"You—mean—it's—true?"

Rodney still spoke in a loud, aggressive voice, as if trying to awaken himself and the others from a nightmare.

"Take it in," muttered Laurie. "Pull yourselves up to it. I had to."

An uncontrollable shudder ran over him. As if his nerve had suddenly given way, he dropped his head on his bent arm. For another interval Bangs stood staring at him in a stupefaction through which a slow tremor ran.

"I—I can't take it in," he stammered at last.

"I know. That's the way I felt."

Laurie spoke without raising his head. Bangs, watching him, saw him shudder again, saw that his legs were giving under him, and that he was literally holding to the mantel for support. The sight steadied his own nerves. He pushed his chair forward, and with an arm across the other's shoulder, forced him down into it.

"Then in God's name, why are we wasting time here?" he suddenly demanded. "Your car's outside. I'll drive you—anywhere. We'll get out of the country. We'll travel at night and lie low in the daytime. Pull yourself together, old man." Urgently, he grasped the other's shoulder. "We've got things to do."

Laurie shook his head. He tried to smile. There was something horrible in the resulting grimace of his twisted mouth.

"There were only two things to do," he said doggedly. "One was to tell you three. I've done that. The other was to tell the district attorney. I've done that, too."

Bangs recoiled as if from a physical blow. Epstein, who had slightly roused himself at the prospect of action, sank back into a stunned, goggling silence.

"Yes," Laurie was pulling himself together. "We're friends, you know, Perkins and I," he went on, more naturally. "I've seen a good deal of him lately. He will make it as easy as he can. He has taken my parole. I've got—till morning." He let them take that in. Then, very simply, he added, "I have promised to be in my rooms at eight o'clock."

Under this, like a tree-trunk goes down with the final stroke of the ax, Rodney Bangs collapsed.

"My G—d!" he muttered. "My—G—d!" He fell into the nearest chair and sat there, his head in his shaking hands.

As if the collapse of his friend were a call to his own strength, Laurie suddenly sat up and took himself in hand.

"Now listen," he said. "Let's take this sensibly. We've got to thresh out the situation, and here's our last chance. I want to make one thing clear. Shaw was pure vermin. There's no place for his sort in a decent world, and I have no more regret over—over exterminating him than I would have over killing a snake. Later, Miss Mayo will tell you why."

Under the effect of the clear, dispassionate voice, almost natural again, Epstein began to revive.

"It vas self-defense," he croaked eagerly. He caught at the idea as if it were a life-line, and obviously began to drag himself out of a pit with its help. "It vas self-defense," he repeated. "You vas fighting, I s'pose. That lets you out."

"No," Laurie dully explained, "he wasn't armed. I thought he was. I thought he was drawing some weapon. He had used chloroform on me once before. I was mistaken. But no jury will believe that, of course."

His voice changed and flatted again. His young figure seemed to give in the chair, as if its muscles sagged under a new burden. For a moment he sat silent.

"We may as well face all the facts," he went on, at last. "The one thing I won't endure is the horror of a trial."

"But you'll get off," choked Epstein. "It's self-defense—it's—it's—"

"Or a brain storm, or temporary insanity!" Laurie interrupted. "No, old chap, that isn't good enough. No padded cell for me! And I'm not going to have my name dragged through the courts and the case figuring in the newspapers for months. I've got a reason I think you will all admit is a good one." Again his voice changed. "That would break my sister's heart," he ended brokenly.

At the words Bangs uttered an odd sound, half a gasp and half a groan. Epstein, again in his pit of wretchedness, caught it.

"Now you see the job ve've done!" he muttered. "Now you see how ve looked after him, like she told us to!"

Bangs paid no attention to him.

"What are you going to do?" he heavily asked Laurie.

"I'll tell you, on one condition—that you give me your word, all three of you, not to try in any way to interfere or to prevent it. You couldn't, anyway, so don't make the blunder of trying. You know what I'm up against. There's only one way out."

He looked at them in turn. Doris and Epstein merely stared back, with the effect of not taking in what he was saying. But Bangs recoiled.

"No, by G—d!" he cried. "No! No!"

Laurie went on as if he had not spoken.

"I promised Perkins to be in my rooms at eight o'clock tomorrow morning," he muttered, and they had to strain their ears to catch the words. "I did not promise to be—alive."

This time it was Doris who gasped out something that none of them heard. For a moment Laurie sat silent in his chair, watching her with a strange intentness. Then, in turn, his black eyes went to the faces of Bangs and Epstein. Huddled in the big chair he occupied, the manager sat looking straight before him, his eyes set in agony, his jaw dropped. He had the aspect of a man about to have a stroke. Bangs sat leaning forward, staring at the floor. The remaining color had left his face. He appeared to have wholly forgotten the presence of others in the room. He was muttering something to himself, the same thing over and over and over:

"And it's all up to us. It's—all—up—to—us."

* * * * * * *

For an interval which none of the three ever forgot Laurie watched the tableau. Then, rising briskly, he ostentatiously stretched himself, and in loud, cheerful tones answered Rodney's steady babble.

"Yes, old chap, it's all up to you," he said. "So what do you think of this as a climax for the play?"

Grinning down at his pal, he waited for a reply. It did not come. Epstein was still unable to speak or move. Doris seemed to have heard the words without taking them in. But at last Bangs rose slowly, groped his way to his chum as if through a fog, and, catching him by the shoulders, looked wildly into his eyes.

"You mean—you mean," he stuttered at last, "that—that—this—was—all—a—hoax?"

"Of course it was," Laurie admitted, in his gayest voice. "It was the climax of the hoax you have played on me. An hour ago Shaw confessed to me how you three arranged this whole plot of Miss Mayo's adventure, so that I should be kept out of mischief and should think I was having an adventure myself. I thought a little excitement was due you in return. How do you like my climax, anyhow? Pretty fair, I call it."

He stopped short. Rodney had loosened his grip on his shoulders and stumbled to a chair. Now, his arm on the back and his head on his arm, his body shook with the relentless convulsion of a complete nervous collapse. Epstein had produced a handkerchief and was feebly wiping his forehead. Doris seemed to have ceased to breathe. Laurie walked over to her, took her hands, and drew them away from her face. Even yet, she seemed not to understand.

"I'm sorry," he said, very gently. "I've given you three an awful jolt. But I think you will all admit that there was something coming to you. You've put me through a pretty bad week. I decided you could endure half an hour of reprisal."

None of the three answered. None of the three could. But, in the incandescent moments that followed, the face of Epstein brightened slowly, like a moon emerging from black clouds. Bangs alone, who had best borne the situation up till now, was unable to meet the reaction. In the silence of the little studio he wept on, openly and gulpingly and unrestrainedly, as he had not wept since he was a little boy.

Christmas Time Gay With Songs of Birds

Christmas in New Zealand has an entirely different aspect from our Christmas. There it is the time of the singing of birds. Their plumages at this season are bright, their singing notes particularly sweet. Many nests are completed in September and October, and in November they contain complements of eggs. Owls, and petrels are the waits who, on Christmas eve, announce the approach of Christmas day. The common morepork owl is a forest bird. Its whoo-whoo is boding, but few sounds, to New Zealanders' ears, are more pleasing. Some petrels laugh mockingly as they fly overhead at night. The black petrel—as black as night itself—has a note that seems to combine a soft whistle with a deep whirr coming from the bottom of a husky throat, a loud and rasping note, utterly unmusical. Bellbirds, tuis and other melodists on Christmas day, from exquisitely tuned throats, send forth a wild bewildering carol, long before a church bell has climbed.

Riding a Camel

The geographies do right to call the camel the "ship of the desert." He is, indeed, like a ship that pitches, tosses and rolls, all at the same time, in a storm.

A little skeleton "howdah" is put on his back, while his master leads him by a long rope. The unfortunate passenger sits cross-legged on top of the camel's very bony backbone and endeavors to adapt himself to the rolling, pitching movement. It makes many persons seasick.

The camel has a mean disposition, and is always trying to quarrel with the other camels in the party, biting and kicking them, grunting and making a general nuisance of himself.

TO RESTORE TOMB OF OLD VIRGINIAN

Posterity to Rebuild Sepulcher of Colonial Figure.

Nearly two hundred years ago Robert Carter of Corotoman, an outstanding personality in the pre-Revolutionary history of northern Virginia, died at his palatial home on the banks of the Rappahannock in Lancaster county, and was buried in the nearby churchyard of Christ Episcopal church.

He left 300,000 acres of land, 1,000 slaves and $50,000 in money. His vast holdings and his tremendous influence caused him to be known to his contemporaries as King Carter, and posterity still applies to him that sobriquet.

When he died in 1732, at the age of sixty-nine, and was buried beside his two wives, Judith and Elizabeth, a magnificent tombstone of white Italian marble was erected,. For more than a century and a half this Virginia aristocrat slept peacefully in the little churchyard.

About thirty years ago, however, his bones were rudely stirred. A charge of dynamite was set off at the tomb, the imposing monument which marked the king's last resting place was shattered and the sarcophagus of this monarch of the Old Dominion was rifled.

The three Carter gravestones were wrecked, and these, for the past 30 years, have been little more than broken fragments. Some of these fragments, including the bronze plate bearing the epitaph of King Carter. have been taken by souvenir hunters.

In consequence, several of the king's descendants have recently launched a movement to restore the monuments. A committee headed by Mrs. O. H. Funsten of Richmond has been organized, and plans are being formulated for assembling the scattered pieces and reconstructing the sarcophagi.

An effort is being made to locate the souvenirs carried off by tourists, and some of these have already been returned to the committee. The three Carters lie near the road, and the mass of broken stone is plainly visible to travelers passing along the highway.

Hence their posterity is banding together with a view to restoring the tombs to their pristine grandeur.

King Carter was born in 1663, the son of John Carter, who had come over from England as the first of that name. John was a well-to-do planter, and was prominent in the colony as a burgess and councillor. His wealth enabled him to send his son to England for a part of his schooling.

When his father died, Robert inherited a large estate, and, being a man of great energy, marked business acumen and dominant personality, he steadily increased his patrimony.

He began his public career as a burgess from Lancaster in 1691. Subsequently he was chosen treasurer of the colony, speaker of the house of burgesses and member of the council, in which last named body he served 27 years. He was finally elected president of the council and was acting governor for more than a year, from the death of Governor Drysdale until the arrival of Governor Gooch.

Colonel Carter's estate grew to such enormous proportions that Governor Nicholson on one occasion dubbed him king, and the name stuck. His prestige was that of a feudal lord, and he became the most powerful landholder in his section of the Old Dominion.—Baltimore Sun.

Vegetarian Dogs

Arjun Lalshet, a rich Hindu, is trying to develop a breed of nonmeat-eating dogs. He belongs to a sect of Hindus who do not believe in killing. The gaekwar of Baroda has given Lalshet permission to establish a "dog city" within his dominions. Lalshet believes that he can wean dogs from their instinct of killing and eating meat. All dogs within the district are now being fed on wheat, rice, milk and butter—a strict vegetarian diet. Special care has been taken to stop up all rat and mouse holes in order to remove all strong temptations from the dogs.—Pathfinder Magazine.

The Simple Life in India

In India they have 50 different religions and every religion has its own meat. The Mohammedan will not eat pork, the Hindu will not eat beef, the Narpalies will eat neither beef or pork, but eat fish and chicken instead. They take a piece of cloth five yards long, and that is the limit of their clothes. The cloth is wound around the lower part of the body, and some who have a few rupees wear a shirt. They live in bamboo huts. They split bamboo and lace it crosswise, and sometimes they put a coat of mud over the outside. The roof is made of banana leaves and is a foot thick.

Gold-Plated Pagoda

The native of Burma is rated much higher than that of India in the matter of intelligence and the country is much pleasanter and more picturesque. There are many beautiful castles surrounded by gorgeous flower gardens and imposing pagodas. The largest pagoda in all Burma, known as the Swaddigondge, is located at Rangoon and is gold-plated from top to bottom, with a flag of diamonds and rubies at the top. It is said to have cost $5,000,000 and is a beautiful temple, where all Burmese can go to worship. It covers between 10 and 15 acres at the bottom.

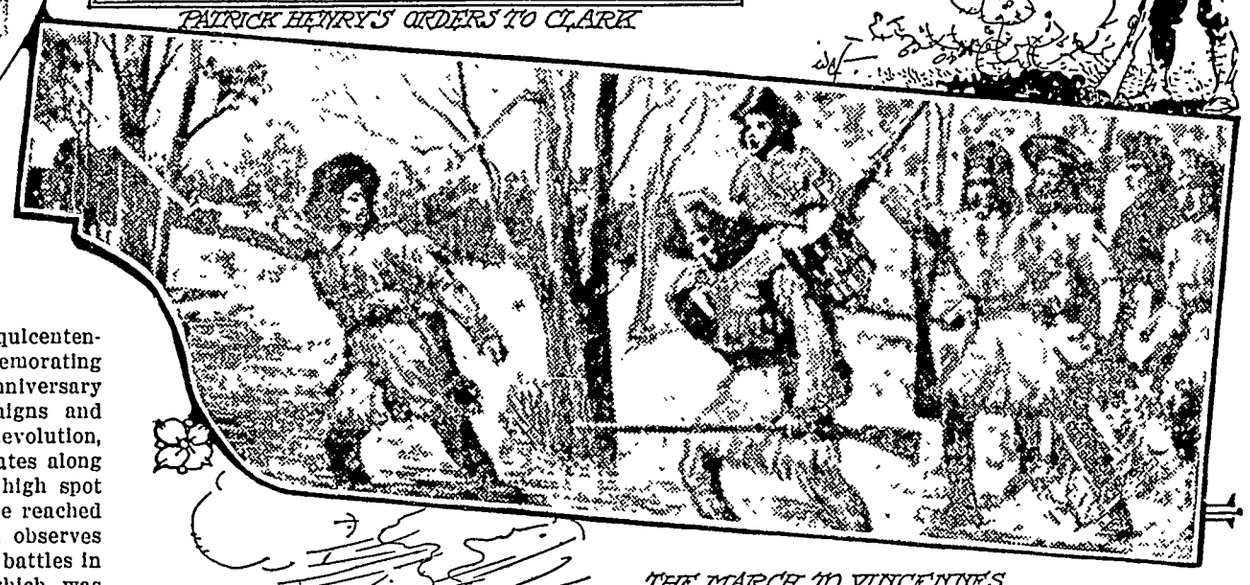
GEORGE ROGERS CLARK



THE MARCH TO VINCENNES
"The Pageant of America"; from Yale University Press

GEORGE ROGERS CLARK'S HOME AT CLARKVILLE

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

FOR the last two years sesquicentennial celebrations, commemorating the one hundred fiftieth anniversary of various battles, campaigns and other episodes of the Revolution, have been held in many states along the Atlantic seaboard. A high spot in these celebrations will be reached this year when New York observes the anniversary of several battles in the Saratoga campaign which was the turning point in the struggle for freedom.

But the East cannot claim all of the honors in recalling the stirring deeds of a century and a half ago, for the Middle West can point to its part in the fight for independence and can justly claim that it was no small part, either. Although the time for its sesquicentennial celebrations are more than a year away, plans are already being made for their observance on a big scale. Indiana and Illinois are taking the lead in these plans because the events to be commemorated took place upon their soil, but the citizens of other states in the Old Northwest—Ohio, Kentucky, Michigan and Wisconsin—are just as keenly interested because those events are a part of their heritage, too. So important to the United States as a whole were these happenings that the celebrations which are to take place at Cahokia, Ill., and Vincennes, Ind., in 1928 and 1929 are of nation-wide interest.

And the inspiration for all of this will be the memory of one man, a Virginian named George Rogers Clark. It was he who won the Old Northwest for the United States by as daring a campaign as is recorded in all history, thereby fixing the western boundary line of the new Republic at the Mississippi river instead of along the Alleghenies mountains and made it possible for the American flag to march westward until it had reached the Pacific.

The story of Clark's campaign is one of the most dramatic in American history. It is the story of how this twenty-five-year-old Virginian, who was living in Kentucky in 1776, saw that the struggling settlements in that state were doomed to be wiped out by the raids of Indians, sent out by Gov. Henry Hamilton, the British commandant in the Old Northwest, unless something was done about it. He did not wait for some one else to do it. He got busy himself. The Kentucky country belonged to Virginia, and Clark returned to Virginia to lay before Gov. Patrick Henry his plan for carrying the war to the British by an expedition against the British posts at Kaskaskia, Ill., Vincennes, Ind., and Detroit, Mich.

Governor Henry appointed him a lieutenant-colonel and gave him authority to enlist men for the expedition. So June 24, 1778, found Clark with a force of 180 Kentucky frontiersmen setting out from Louisville on his march against Kaskaskia. He captured Kaskaskia by surprise and on July 4 raised the Stars and Stripes over what is now Illinois. He made friends with the French, bluffed the Indians to a standstill and Vincennes and Cahokia were soon in his power.

However, in December Hamilton swooped down from Detroit and recaptured Vincennes and made plans for proceeding against Clark at Kaskaskia in the spring. But Clark did not wait to be attacked. In February he set out for Vincennes with 100 of his own men and 70 French volunteers. Then began one of the most wonderful marches in history. The whole country was flooded and for 17 days Clark and his men, enduring almost unheard-of hardships, waded through the icy water. Finally, tho half-starved, exhausted little army arrived at Vincennes and laid siege to Fort Sackville. On February 24 Clark forced Hamilton's unconditional surrender and the Old Northwest was won for the United States forever.

So Illinois is planning to hold in 1928 a million-dollar exposition on the common fields of ancient Cahokia, once the trade center of the upper Mississippi valley, and at a recent conference of state legislators and business men of southwestern Illinois a budget of $805,000 was agreed upon to finance the building of the exposition city and to erect memorials to Clark and to Father Pierre Gibault, the French priest who helped Clark.

In Indiana similar activity is under way. A George Rogers Clark Sesquicentennial commission has been organized whose principal purpose is the celebration in 1929 of the anniversary of Clark's capture of Fort Sackville at Vincennes where a magnificent Clark memorial will be erected. The city of Vincennes already has authorized a bond issue of $40,000 to purchase the site of Fort Sackville upon which the memorial will be erected. This memorial hall will contain a series of murals depicting the scenes of Clark's campaign and will be surrounded by a memorial park, connected by a boulevard with the home of Gen. William Henry Harrison, first governor of Indiana and the ninth President of the United States. President Coolidge has been invited to dedicate the building as a national shrine and plans are also being made by the commission for a series of historical pageants and for other celebrations at various places in Indiana, Ohio, Kentucky and Illinois where events of Clark's expedition took place.

Historians have been almost unanimous in the belief that never has the proverbial ingratitude of republics been better illustrated than in the case of George Rogers Clark. For all that his achievement placed the nation in his everlasting debt, that nation allowed him to die in poverty and neglect. It would have been no more than right that one of the states carved out of the territory which he won should bear his name. But none of them does. Streets, towns and counties in some of the states bear his name, but, considering his historical importance, the number of monuments erected to his memory is surprisingly few. But if the present plans for the sesquicentennial celebrations are carried through some measure of the tardy honor which he deserves will have been paid.

It is eminently fitting, too, that there should have appeared recently the most complete and authoritative biography of this military genius which has yet been written. That is the book, "George Rogers Clark," by Temple Bodley, published by Houghton-Mifflin company of Boston.

Clark's outstanding early military services have often been described; but later ones, hardly less important and demanding far more of patriotic sacrifice, have rarely or never been noticed. It is the record of these services which forms a large part of Mr. Bodley's book. It is shameful enough that the United States should have allowed a man to whom it owed so much to die in want. It is shameful enough that he should have been so soon forgotten by those who have best cause to remember him.

But it is even more shameful that some historians have cruelly misrepresented Clark and defamed his memory because as an embittered old man he fell into bad habits and allowed his name to become associated with certain projects which bordered closely upon treason. So another value of Mr. Bodley's book is his refutation of some of these slanders, especially his expose of the plot by that arch conspirator, Gen. James Wilkinson, against Clark.

It is no far-fetched analogy to compare Clark to the outstanding figure in the American Revolution and to call him the "Washington of the West." There are many curious similarities in their careers. Washington was born in 1732; Clark in 1752. Both were natives of Virginia and both were surveyors beyond the frontier in their young manhood. Both had their first military experience and were prepared for the great conflict later by participation in Indian wars—Washington in the French and Indian war of 1755 and Clark in Lord Dunmore's war in 1774.

But it is as the military genius and the leader of men that they are most alike. Courage, audacity, quickness to realize an opportunity and quickness to seize it—these were the qualities which they shared as military leaders. Washington's Trenton and Princeton campaign and Clark's march against Vincennes illustrate their realization of the importance of striking the enemy instead of waiting for him to strike you, and the fact that the secret of military success is, in the words of Gen. Nathan Bedford Forrest, the famous Confederate cavalry leader, to "git thar fust with the mostest men"—only in these cases the "mostest" meant using inferior forces most effectively.

For the achievements of Washington and Clark are the more remarkable when one considers the inadequate means with which they were accomplished. But again they illustrate the old saying "better an army of rabbits led by a lion than an army of lions led by a rabbit." What they lacked in numbers at their disposal was more than made up for by the force of their personalities which caused men to follow them through unheard-of privations and against what seemed to be overwhelming odds. Truly were George Washington and George Rogers Clark leaders of men in the truest sense of the word. If Valley Forge was Washington's Gethsemane, where he suffered agony of soul at the sight of his starving men leaving their blood-stained footprints on the snow, then the Drowned Lands of the Wabash was a Via Crucis for Clark along which he led a shivering, exhausted group of men in whom the spark of life was all but extinct.

In some respects the greatness of Clark as a leader exceeds that of Washington. The Continentals who enlisted under Washington had more to gain and less to lose than the frontiersmen of Kentucky who cast their lot with Clark. If the former won a great victory, the whole Atlantic seaboard would ring with their valor and their might. If they lost, a British prison camp—bad though that frequently was—was the worst that confronted them and there was always the possibility of parole or exchange. If Clark's borderers won, it would be weeks before news of the victory could reach the colonies and even then, so little did the trans-Allegheny region mean to the average man of Massachusetts or Pennsylvania or Virginia, the victory would be almost unnoticed. If they lost—for them the torture stake of the Indian allies of Governor Hamilton, "the Hair-Buyer General" and a horde of red demons sweeping down upon the stockaded forts of Kentucky behind whose walls were the women and children whom they had left behind them when they marched away. That Clark could hold his men to their task and make them follow him in an attempt which semed foolhardy is the best testimonial of the greatness of the man.

If only the comparison of these two men could end with Clark, the victor, raising the Stars and Stripes over Fort Sackville in Vincennes, and Washington, the victor, setting the colonies in a frenzy of joy with the news of Trenton and Princeton! But unfortunately it does not end there. Clark's great objective was Detroit, but he could never assemble a sufficient force to enable him to take that post. Although Virginia promoted him to brigadier general and presented him with a sword (a second-hand one, by the way), he never enjoyed a commission in the Continental service and his qualities of leadership were unnoticed. Finally he was dismissed from the Virginia service on the plea of poverty of that state. Virginia did give him a 10,000-acre grant of land in the territory he had won for it, but he was "land-poor." He had spent all of his own private funds and much besides which he had obtained from Father Gibault and Francis Vigo, the Spanish trader, in paying his men and for years he sought to obtain a settlement of these claims against the state. Virginia, instead of settling the claims, sent him another sword! Clark thrust it into the ground, broke it off at the hilt and threw the pieces away with the bitter remark, "When Virginia wanted a sword I gave her mine. Now she sends me a toy. I want bread!"

Four years before he died he was stricken with paralysis. He spent his last days in the home of his sister, Mrs. Croghan, near Louisville, Ky. There on February 13, 1818, he died at the age of sixty-six, a lonely, broken, embittered old man.

Contrast with that the career of Washington. Princeton and Trenton led to Yor[illegible] and victory. When the new Republic w[illegible]nded the hero of the Revolution became its [illegible]President. He died in 1799 at the age of sixty-seven; first in war, first in peace and first in the hearts of his countrymen" and honored throughout the world.

George Washington won in his great objective. The years have added to his fame. George Rogers Clark failed in his objective. He has almost been forgotten.

Stock Regions Little Bothered by Wolves

The large gray, or lobo, wolves have been so reduced in the stock-raising regions of the West by the unremitting activities of the biological survey of the United States Department of Agriculture against them that their depredations are almost ended. Whenever the presence of scattered individual wolves is reported by stockmen the best available hunters of the district are sent to trap or poison the animals.

In New Mexico only eight wolves were taken during the past year, as against 31 the preceding year, although increased efforts were made to get the last wolf in the state. Arizona reports that 18 wolves were taken during the year and that no wolves are now known to be within its borders. It is necessary to maintain a constant patrol along the New Mexico and Arizona boundary to prevent invasions of timber wolves and mountain lions from Mexico.

Invisible Light

Those mysterious rays of invisible light which constantly play about us, yet which we never see, hold seemingly endless possibilities for usefulness. For example, says Popular Science Monthly, the latest use for ultra-violet rays is in the testing of silkworms. Healthy worms have the strange property of giving off visible light when exposed to invisible ultra-violet rays, whereas unhealthy worms give off weak light or no light at all. Similarly, some dentists now use ultra-violet rays to determine whether teeth are alive or dead.

"Feel Like a Schoolboy" Says Dubuque Door Cutter

Almost forced to quit work Ray Roggensack, of Carr, Ryder and Adams, Dubuque, Ia., is now strong and happy. He lives at 2024 White Street, and credits Tanlac with present fine condition

Operating a door cutting machine calls for a clear head and nerve control. It's a man's job. So when Ray Roggensack's health began to break he had a problem to face. "Nervousness and dizzy spells handicapped me at my work. To straighten up after bending was torture, owing to the violent pain in my back. My appetite was so poor that I often went to work weak, unable to eat my breakfast. And at night I tossed and turned from side to side, too nervous to sleep." These are his own words.

"Night, noon and morning, I had heartburn and gas pains, which kept me in misery, and after a year of those conditions I was quite thin and rundown. Since trying Tanlac, I've put on ten pounds, eat, sleep and feel normally. In fact, I now have the appetite and digestion of a schoolboy and the heaviest day's work doesn't bother me. Running a door cutting machine is now a pleasure instead of the drudgery it used to be. I'll praise and recommend Tanlac as long as I live."

Tanlac is nature's own tonic and body builder, made from roots, herbs and barks. If you're rundown and weak, get a trial bottle today. Your druggist has it. Over 52 million bottles sold.

THE WORLD'S GREAT EVENTS

ALBERT PAYSON TERHUNE

(© by Dodd, Mead & Company.)

The Fall of the Bastile

"YOUR majesty, the people are starving for lack of bread!"

"Then," replied Queen Marie Antoinette of France, in utter surprise, "why don't they eat cake?"

The frivolous queen did not ask this question as a joke. She had so little knowledge of poverty and of the needs of a nation that she could not understand how unappeased hunger could exist. This one speech of hers sizes up better than could a whole volume the grievances that led to that red horror, the French Revolution. Those high in authority neither knew nor cared how the great mass of the people existed.

Louis XIV, after impoverishing France by his extravagances, had been succeeded by his great-grandson, Louis XV. The latter had all the "Grand Monarch's" vices and extravagance with none of his genius. He left France almost bankrupt. The clergy and the nobles were exempt by law from taxation. Thus the fearful burden of taxes fell on the tradespeople and peasants. To make matters worse, the taxes were "farmed out," and the collectors wrung the helpless poor still further to obtain "graft" for themselves out of the transaction. So while the court reveled in unheard-of luxury and magnificence the plain people who paid for it all were left to starve.

Moreover, the aristocracy, taking their cue from the king, oppressed and ill-treated their luckless tenants, grinding them to the dust; unspeakable outrages were perpetrated by the nobles against their defenseless peasants and tradesfolk. Undeserved life imprisonment, torture and death were common occurrences.

And for centuries the people of France had submitted; so long, in fact, that their masters had ceased to regard it as possible that the down-trodden slaves could ever revolt. But, during all these centuries the seeds of revolution were germinating—seeds which were one day to burst into a bloody harvest of retribution that should set the whole world aghast. Among the vilest abuses of the era was the Bastile. This huge fortress was at once the state prison and the citadel of Paris. When a monarch, a nobleman or a man of power had an enemy he could not legally dispose of, he procured (if he had sufficient influence) a secret warrant known as a "lettre de cachet," and had his foe or victim seized and conveyed to the Bastile. There, without trial, without hope of rescue, with his friends ignorant of his whereabouts, the prisoner would linger often for a lifetime. The Bastile was the visible symbol and sign of despotic power, and as such the people of France hated it even as they feared it.

Louis XV had been wise, in his way. He had calculated to a nicety the number of years the people would continue to endure such treatment.

"It will last out my time," said he, "but I pity my grandson!" And the painted, bedizened Duchesse de Pompadour at his side croaked the gruesomely epigrammatic prophecy:

"After us, the deluge!"

And now Louis XV was dead and his grandson, Louis XVI, reigned in his stead. The sixteenth Louis was an amiable, stupid, weak-willed fellow. He was married to an Austrian archduchess, Marie Antoinette, whose mother had planned the match and had coached the girl queen how to promote Austria's influence at the French court.

Louis XVI had begun his reign with some vague theories as to the rights of the people. But Marie Antoinette and her party at court had soon driven such notions from his stupid head. The people grew to loathe Marie Antoinette and to blame her for their suffering.

The American revolution had met with warm support from France, but plunged that country into disastrous war with England, and, moreover, fired the people with republican ideas. If America had cut free from the bondage of royal despotism why should not France? The people began to awake—and to think. Famine was rife throughout the rural districts. Throngs of country folk flocked into Paris. Riots and other disturbances sprang up. A national guard was formed by the municipality and Lafayette was placed at its head.

The people were at last aroused. They did not yet dare to turn against royalty itself, but they assailed its most hated symbol—the Bastile. On July 14, 1789, a mob marched on this fortress, calling on the governor, Delaunay, to surrender. Delaunay refused. Then the crowd attacked. Delaunay, a stanch, loyal old soldier, fought them off for hours, till some of the guard came up, with several pieces of artillery, and forced him to yield. The mob (soldiers, peasants and townsfolk alike) rushed into the Bastile, released the prisoners (some of whom were insane or dazed from long confinement), killed Delaunay and proceeded to tear down the fortress. On the wall of one cell they found this prophecy, scrawled a half-century earlier by Cagliostro, the charlatan magician:

"The Bastile shall be destroyed and the people shall dance on its site."

The latter part of the prophecy was fulfilled by screaming, blood-streaked revolutionists, who accompanied their wild dance with songs of vengeance. The French Revolution had dawned.

FRINGE EPIDEMIC NOW RAGING; SOME COLOR SCHEME REQUIRED

A FRINGE epidemic rages in the world of fashion. What is more, all symptoms point to a spreading of the vogue during the coming months. The mode seems determined to be-fringe everything as it goes.

At formal functions the woman of smart style literally entwines herself in fringe as she enwraps her slenderized form in her lavishly fringe-trimmed shawl, such as is the joy, the pride, the envy of the normal feminine heart. The picture shows one way of wearing the beloved fringed shawl. No doubt, this pronounced vogue for fringe found its inspiration in shawls such as this, which by the way show no signs of waning popularity.

By no means, however is this passion for fringe confined to evening wear, for a review of styles in afternoon frocks reveals fringe as an idol of the daytime hour as well.

A strong argument in favor of fringe is the graceful silhouette which it never fails to achieve. Perhaps this accounts more than anything else for the sweeping indorsement which the mode is giving to fringe this spring.

The latest idea is to dangle fringe from the long tight-fitting sleeve, somewhat after the manner shown in the afternoon frock of black faille silk herewith illustrated. In some instances the fringe is much longer than that here pictured, falling at times from the elbow to exaggerated depth.

The black-and-white vogue finds charming expression in long fringe, which alternates strands of each. Very striking is a black flat crepe frock styled with one deep row or tiers of black-and-white fringe. At the simple neckline, pose a white flower for the completion of the black-and-white compose.

Favorite fringed dresses stress a straight narrow model, whose lines are broken by two deep tiers of thick silk fringe, which in color is an accurate match to the fabric it trims. Often this fringe treatment is developed from a scalloped low waistline.

Fringe placed diagonally in sections also produces an interesting effect. Most popular and most suited to practical wear is the silk fringe which is now being featured in every new color, also black and white. For elaborate effect ostrich fringe, also fringes of beads are approved by the mode.

It is written in the bylaws of the mode that the costume must present, from head to foot, a perfect color scheme. Which means that footwear requires a no less fastidious styling than does headwear, and that the details of handbag and other accessories dare not be slighted in the ensemble.

A correct color ensemble is achieved in the spring outfit worn by the young woman here pictured. Her smart sports frock is of heavy beige crepe in the popular two-piece model. The felt cloche is in matching shade, while the dainty oxfords of beige kid lend real distinction to the costume.

Frock and Wrap Trimmed With Fringe.

Having discovered that shoes, hat and handbag, when fashioned of the same medium, add a compelling style touch to the costume, specialists in leather artistry are accomplishing nothing short of marvelous effects in this respect. Looking for new fields to conquer, these wizards of fine leatherwork are using such strange mediums as sharkskin, lizard and snakeskin, from that of the boa constrictor and python to that of the less formidable water snake. Shoes and accessories of these various snakeskins are worked in combination with solid colored kid into a medley of ornate designs. Notwithstanding their extreme novelty they are making the "hit" of the season. A smart boa constrictor compose of hat and bag is here shown. Of course to complete the ensemble milady will choose shoes which have an inlay or applique of this same snakeskin.

For stormy weather kid legettes are the solution. As the picture shows, they are a sure protection to light hose from unsightly mud spots, which, as every woman knows from experience, are next to impossible to avoid. These legettes are obtainable in all colors as well as black Leather Footwear and Accessories.

For southern wear, which, by the way, is but a forecast of coming summer fashions, white kid is an accepted mode. The handsome shoes in the picture carry heels of black patent kid with narrow bands of black for trimming.

Have Kidneys Examined By Your Doctor

Take Salts to Wash Kidneys if Back Pains You or Bladder Bothers

Flush your kidneys by drinking a quart of water each day, also take salts occasionally, says a noted authority, who tells us that too much rich food forms acids which almost paralyze the kidneys in their efforts to expel it from the blood. They become sluggish and weaken; then you may suffer with a dull misery in the kidney region, sharp pains in the back or side, headache, dizziness, your stomach sours, tongue is coated, and when the weather is bad you have rheumatic twinges. The urine gets cloudy, full of sediment, the channels often get sore and irritated, obliging you to seek relief two or three times during the night.

To help neutralize these irritating acids, to help cleanse the kidneys and flush off the body's urinous waste, get four ounces of Jad Salts from any pharmacy here; take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days, and your kidneys may then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for years to help flush and stimulate sluggish kidneys; also to neutralize the acids in the system so they no longer irritate, thus often relieving bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive, cannot injure and makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink.

Another Newspaper Suspends

The Terril Tribune last week suspended publication, the subscription list being sold to the county seat paper at Spirit Lake and the Tribune plant being moved to Ocheyedan where Mr. Lighter will establish another newspaper. The Tribune was 27 years old. It was established a year or two before the Dispatch. But it has gone the way of several hundred other Iowa newspapers in recent years. A year ago Mr. Lighter threatened to move his plant unless Terril business men gave him more support. The support was not forthcoming so the town loses its newspaper, the community will be served by a county seat newspaper and the business in the community will gradually drift to the county seat where the newspaper ads will draw the business.—Ringsted Dispatch.

COUNTY SPELLERS TO STAGE CONTEST

COUNTY SPELLING BEE WILL BE HELD AT COURT HOUSE

Champion Speller Will Enter State Contest At Des Moines

A county spelling bee will be held in the court house at Garner, Saturday, March 26, at 2:00 o'clock p. m. The purpose of this contest is to select the county winner who will represent Hancock County in the state contest to be held in Des Moines early in April.

Each school in the county, both rural and graded, is entitled to one representative at this meet. A lively interest is being shown in preparation for this event. Neighboring schools are pitting their best spellers against each other. Some townships have held, and others will be holding contests where all the schools of the township will be represented. The farm bureau is to be commended for encouraging better spelling by offering cash prizes to the winners. These local contests offer the boys and girls a splendid opportunity to become accustmed to spelling before audiences.

Britt township held a very successful contest last week and Erin township will hold one in their Center school Friday afternoon. Twin Lake township will hold theirs the first of this week. The town schools have been working enthusiastically and some have already held their eliminating contest and picked their winners Remember that the county winner goes to Des Moines in April to enter the state contest put on by the Des Moines Register. The prizes are as follows: The prize for the state champion will be a trip to Washington, chaperoned by a representative of the Des Moines Register with all expenses paid, and an opportunity there to compete for the national championship and a share in the national $2,000 prize fund. The second prize will be $50; third, $25; fourth, $15; fifth, $10; sixth to fifteenth, each $5. Prizes for school winners will be neatly printed certificates. The prize for each county champion will be an appropriate medal given at the time of the state bee in Des Moines.

The purpose of the contest is to make better spellers and thus benefit the school as a whole. With this in mind we have placed the county contest at as late a date as possible. Last year Hancock County was represented by Elizabeth Carr, who took seventh place in the state contest and won a five dollar gold piece. Let us take first this year!

REACHES ALL—COSTS LESS

There are other sorts of advertising besides Newspaper Advertising. Hiring a band to play every day in every neighborhood of your trade territory interspersed by announcements of what you have to sell i getting publicity, but it costs something more than space. Having a girl call every household up by telephone every day and announce your bargains to the member of the family who replies is advertising, but it will leave a sting. Newspaper advertising hits everybody all at once; it does not inflict itself on their attention when they are not ready to read it; and it costs less, all things considered.—Ex.

FARM BUREAU OFFERS REWARD FOR CAPTURE OF THIEVES

Chicken Thieves Are Going To Find "Tough Sledding" In Hancock

Fifty dollars reward is being offered by the Hancock County Farm Bureau for the apprehension and conviction of anyone stealing from their members. This reward is offered in order to give some help in preventing the petty thievery, especially poultry, which has been going on for the last few years. The reward is to be paid to anyone who is responsible for the apprehension and conviction of the thief. The board of directors of the Farm Bureau will be the ones to decide who is entitled to this reward. It should be remembered that the reward will only be paid where the property is stolen from a Farm Bureau member who has his dues paid and the Farm Bureau Protective Service sign posted in a conspicuous place. These signs are being furnished free to all Farm Bureau members. It is believed that this reward will help to check petty thievery, especially among Farm Bureau members. In Story County, where this reward has been in effect, a number of poultry thieves have been captured but none of them were stealing from farms where the signs were posted.

ORCHESTRA WILL ENTER STATE MEET

GARY'S ORCHESTRA PRACTICES FOUR TIMES A WEEK

Other Items Of Interst From Our Klemme Schools

With the basket ball season over, interest is directed toward our high school orchestra led by Mr. Gary. His orchestra has been entered in a state contest to be staged at Hampton some time next month. Four nights each week have been assigned to practice by the group nd as much as can be found time for by each individual member. We believe we have one of the best little orchestras to be found anywhere near for the size of our school. Serious work has been begun on the contest selections. Previous to going to Hampton we hope to have a local program by the orchestra which will be announced later.

Seniors Preparing For Play

Miss Stoner is busy these days looking for a suitable Senior Class play for the class of 1927. Juniors contemplate a program or carnival as a means to meeting the expense of a Junior-Senior Banquet, toward the close of the school year.

Both Kirk's and Roberts' of Mason City have interviewed our Senior Class as photos. A decision will soon be made as to which photographer will make the photos.

Baseball Under Way Now

Mr. Hockey has begun light practice on our school diamond for base ball. Unless more appear for practice a team will not be possible. This is a rare opportunity for our boys to learn our national game and when the attractive salaries now being offered in the big leagues are considered it would seem more boys should be trying themselves out.

Operetta Was Fine Success

Miss Kidder's work with our Girls Chorus last Friday night showed to advantage Though the night was unfavorable, we were pleased to have so many to hear the girls in the first performance of its kind, perhaps ever attempted in Klemme. Gladys Wilson, who assumed the leading role of the operetta, Gertrude Johnson, Ruth Bailey, Lela Bachman and Irene Johnson, all prominent characters in the program did their parts well. Over $24.00 was taken in at the door. We desire to thank those who generously loaned stage properties for the occasion, as chairs, lamps, rugs, etc., also those in attendance.

Shamrock Squad Enjoys Dinner

Dr. Anderson, one of our loyal basket ball supporters, proved his interest in our team and officials on Tuesday night of this week by inviting the team, coach and superintendent to a splendid six o'clock dinner at the home of Mr. Ernest Schuldt. And how those guests did eat! One might have concluded the boys had been on a diet for two or three days or had just come thru a tough game with Britt or Vinton High School. But there seemed to be plenty left. We all agreed it was a good place to meet and dine.

LIBERTY TWP. VOTES FOR NEW SCHOOL HOUSE

Vote For New Building Carried 7 To 1 At Monday's Election

Liberty Township voted for a new school house to be built in Dist. No. 7 at the annual meeting on Monday, March 14th, and which carried favorably by a large majority.

There were forty-two votes cast, of which thirty-seven were in favor of erecting a new building nd five were opposed to the proposition.

The school house in questin is the school immediately west of Klemme.

The new building will be erected this summer.

ASSOCIATION SHIPPED NNE CAR LOADS SATURDAY NIGHT

Stock Shipment Continue Strong At The Klemme Yards

Stock shipments the past week from the Klemme Yards threatened to hit the high mark again when a total of twelve car loads of stock were loaded and shipped out of here.

Seven car loads of hogs, four car loads of cattle and one car load of mixed (cattle and hogs) constituted the shipments for the past week.

The Klemme Shipping Association handled nine car loads of stock here Saturday, composed of five car loads of hogs, three car loads of cattle and one mixed car load of cattle and hogs.

C. A. Larsen shipped two car loads of hogs and one car load f cattle.

Stock shipments have been heavy here for the past two or three months and have averaged around twelve car loads a week. Klemme buyers pay high prices for what they buy Farmers having hogs or cattle to sell will do well to sell in Klemme and get the advantage of the prices paid. Klemme has the reputation now of being one of the largest live stock shipping points in North Iowa where highest prices are paid that cannot be met by buyers in other nearby points.

FARMER'S NAME SENT IN FOR SENATE'S O. K.

Geo. Godfrey, of Algona, Wanted On State Board of Education

The name of George Godfrey of Algona, has been sent to the Senate by Governor Hammill for confirmation as a member of the State Board of Education, acording to County Agent L. T. Nutty in a communication to The Klemme Times. This action is highly pleasing to the agricultural interests of the state, as expressed by the Iowa Farm Bureau Federation.

Mr. Godfrey is an alumnus of Iowa State College, where he completed his work in 1910. He became well known over the state in extension work, but he soon returned to the farm. Later he served as a member of the Iowa State College faculty for some time.

During the last twelve years he has been on the home farm in Kossuth County where he is considered one of the best farmers in that section of the state. He was recently chosen by Wallace's Farmer as one of the fourteen master farmers of Iowa.

He is well known as an authority on farming; he is experienced as a teacher and writer, a successful farmer, and he has been prominent in farm organization work. Last year he was selected as a voting delegate to the American Farm Bureau Federation.

SHIFTY SHAMROCKS BEAT '25 RECORD

KLEMME HIGH SCHOOL BASKET BALL TEAM WON 11 GAMES

Gibbs And Stokesbary Led Team With 64 Scores Each

The Pre-Tournament games that were scheduled for our basket ball team this year were 14 in number. Eleven games were won, one was tied and two were lost. This a trifle better than last year as three of the fourteen games played were lost. The showing seems better also from another standpoint Three of our games this year were with Class "A" schools (two with Garner and one with Britt.) Our boys also get some satisfaction from the fact that they were able to defeat the winner of Class "B" in the tournament at Mason City on their own floor (Swaledale) at an earlier date.

Led Shamrocks In Scoring

Donald Gibbs and Orville Stokesbary led in the scoring with 64 points each, followed in order by Vernon Turgasen, Kermit Koerner, Oral Gibson, Luther Tanner and Clarence Lemke.

Much of the success of our team was due to the very close guarding of Tanner who broke up many a carefully studied play of our opponents. Turgasen was also an outstanding defensive player. The four seniors who formed the bulwark of the team this year will be missed next year. They are Gibbs, Tanner, Turgasen and Koerner.

Almost a new team must be built next year. Those who subbed this year, as Lemke, Nelson, Gauger and Gibson, together with Orville Stokesbary, one of this year's regulars, and some others with less experience will be depended upon to form the team.

We are very appreciative of the splendid support given our team this year by townsmen. We do not beleive another team has enjoyed a more enthusiastic following. Even at the game at Swaledale there were many to shout for our team altho it meant a drive of about 70 miles return trip. To those who encouraged the members of our team by promises of oyster stews and malted milks and their fulfillment we owe a debt of appreciation. All these things put fire and fight in our team and help many times to give their best and enough to win.

The scores made at each of the games follow.

KLEMME FARMER HAULS MOST VALUABLE SINGLE LOAD

Ben Greimann Brought In Load Of Seed Valued At $1,000 Tues.

Perhaps the most valuable single load of any farm product hauled to Klemme for some time was the load of sweet clover seed brought to town Tuesday by Ben F Greiman, farmer living northwest of Klemme.

Ben specialized in raising Grundy County sweet clover last year and had twenty acres of it. Off of this twenty acres Ben sold around $2,000 worth of seed and says his net profits were about $1,500. He wishes now that he had his entire farm in clover the past year.

Gets Fine Report From Ames

Before Ben put his seed on the market he sent some to Ames to get their report on testing. The letter he got back from the college was most encouraging. They informed him his seed was the best that they had tested this year They reported the germination test was 96 per cent and that for purity his seed tested 99.26 per cent, very near perfect.

The seed brought to town has all been distributed among farmers in this vicinity The demand was so great that Ben says he could easily have sold twice as much seed.

Ben is also specializing along other lines. He says that farmers now days must specialize more to make their land pay. Mr Greimann is also growing a special kind of winter wheat and if conditions are normal will have quality seed to offer next year. Mr Greiman is also greatly interested in fruit and has started one of the finest orchards in this part of the state. He does not cling to the ordinary run of fruit trees but by careful study and selection has planted trees that will bear large, juicy fruit equal to any fruit grown in California.

Smock Trapped Eight Mink

C. D. Smock's hobby is being out-of-doors both winter and summer. In following his hobby during the winter he also made it a paying proposition for during that time he captured eight large mink. The pelts averaged about $10 apiece one extra large, fine skin brought him $21.80 It takes patience to induce a mink into a trap and much time must be spent in order to fool this cunning animal.

Card Of Thanks

I wish to take this means of thanking the voters for the support they gave me at the school election Monday. Ralph Ludeke. 1tp

The light, but soaking rain, that fell during the week end raised havoc with the roads. It rained just enough to cause the frost to come out and made many bad holes in the road. A couple of bad holes were even made on the graveled highway and cars and trucks were getting stuck near the Dick Swalve farm Sunday night and Monday. Another bad hole was reported south of Garner. The county should put planks across these places just as soon as there was a sign of the road giving away.

Mrs. Ed. Schaefer and Mr Ed. Dow, of Forest City, were in Klemme on business Friday. Mrs. Schaefer owns the building occupied by Ash Keever. She has rented the west half of the building to Mr. Burgess who is remodeling it for a restaurant. The work of remodeling is progressing rapidly and the Times may be able to announce by next week when the new restaurant will be open for business.

THE WORLD'S GREAT EVENTS

ALBERT PAYSON TERHUNE

(© by Dodd, Mead & Company.)

The French Revolution

"THE people are in revolt?" asked the amazed King Louis XVI. And Count Mirabeau, wiser than his royal master, replied:

"Sire, this is no revolt. It is a revolution."

After the fall of the Bastile the nation had awaited further developments. Politicians wrangled, finances became more and more entangled, Queen Marie Antoinette continued to meddle with affairs of state which she did not understand, famine and misery stalked abroad, and the news of the Bastile's destruction spread through France, everywhere stirring up the masses to courage and fury. At this juncture the king, advised by his wife, made one of his costly blunders. Although his people were starving, and although more than ever before he needed the loyalty of his native soldiers, he gave a great and expensive banquet at Versailles to his foreign troops.

This was the last straw. The National Guard, led by Lafayette and preceded by a mighty mob of angry women, marched from Paris to Versailles on October 5, 1780, attacked the Versailles palace and dragged the king and his wife and son back to Paris with them. Again a wrangle of politicians. Louis had a chance to save his throne if he would consent to become a constitutional monarch, but Marie Antoinette and the advisers with which she surrounded him would not hear of such a thing. So the foolish king, by once more yielding to his wife's demands, hastened on to the doom that awaited him and his.

National Guard regiments were formed all over the country in the name of the people. In the rural districts bands of peasants settled old scores against the masters who had oppressed them by butchering whole families of aristocrats and burning and looting their castles. Noblemen, from royalty down, began fleeing from France by the hundreds, in fear for their lives.

Meantime, in Paris a body known as the assembly drew up a "Declaration of the Rights of Man," based partly on our own Declaration of Independence. Its keynote was "equality." It proclaimed the freedom of all men, the sovereignty of the nation, religious tolerance, fair laws and the abolition of aristocracy and privilege. To this declaration Louis would not subscribe. Marie Antoinette regarded its claims as insane. Louis secretly appealed to his fellow-sovereigns of Europe, and a foreign alliance was formed to invade France and reinstate the king. The royal family sought to escape over the frontier on June 29, 1701, but were caught and brought back. After this Louis consented to swear to the Constitution, and was reinstated But he continued to plot with foreign powers.

The allies marched against France, and famine again swept the land. This double grievance maddened the people, and they took matters in their own hands. A mob sacked the Tuileries (the king's residence in Paris), massacred the Swiss guard, who sought to defend their master, and imprisoned the royal family. Louis was suspended from office, and in November, 1792, was brought to trial. By a vote of 387 to 334 he was condemned to death. All titles had been abolished, so under the name of "Citizen Louis Capet" the unfortunate monarch was beheaded January 21, 1703. In the same year the Reign of Terror set in. Aristocrats were guillotined by scores and hundreds. Marie Antoinette was beheaded, and her son secretly put to death in prison.

While the allies were preparing to invade France, civil war, accompanied by massacres and other atrocities, broke out and weakened the already demoralized country. Another drawback to military success was that heretofore all officers of the French army had been noblemen. These had fled or been beheaded, leaving the army officerless. The republic's officers were men promoted from the ranks solely by merit. When they proved incompetent their soldiers refused to obey them, and often even shot them. Realizing that France's welfare and very existence in this crisis depended on her soldiers, the republic granted the army all sorts of privileges and made it an object of adoration.

The newly reorganized French army, in the Revolution, turned on its allied foes and in battle after battle whipped the best disciplined troops of Europe, finally splitting the alliance against France.

Marat, Danton and Robespierre were the three prime movers in the Reign of Terror. Each of the trio used the other two for his own ends, and each sought to be dictator of the stricken country. Marat, merciless and bestial, was murdered by Charlotte Corday, whose lover he had executed. Danton, kindest and most human of the three, was routed by Robespierre and beheaded. Robespierre—dandy, bloodless, incorruptible, deadly and yet visionary—became practically dictator of France. But in 1794 he in turn was deposed and guillotined.

And now, amid the chaos, confusion of wild schemes and conflicting experiments in self-government, arose a man. Perhaps the greatest the world has ever seen.

Napoleon Bonaparte.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Another Earthquake Disaster Takes Heavy Toll of Life in Japan.

THE earthquake that took a toll of more than 2,000 lives in Japan on March 8 will go down in history as one of the catastrophes of the times. The total number of killed and injured was close to 6,000 people. Dispatches from Ango described the pitiful condition of the refugees, homeless, hungry, and cold. In some places, at the time the disaster occurred, the snow was from one to five feet deep, and hundreds of men, women and children, possessing but a few blankets, found meager shelter behind great snowdrifts. The suffering of women and children was considerable, although the efforts of troops, police, and young men's associations alleviated the misery. Efforts to bring aid to the devastated region were retarded because of lack of railway traffic, only motors and wagons being available, in addition to a few airplanes, which carried some relief supplies. The roads and paths were badly cracked. The number of houses in the district which collapsed was set at 3,529 and the number burned at 3,646. The principal damage took place in the towns of Mineyama, Amino, Kayetsu, and Mabito. The damage and casualties at Miyazu and Kumihama were light. Following the damage by quake and fire, floods added to the misery of the 70,000 homeless people, and seriously interfered with the relief efforts of the government. Warm weather and heavy rains turned the deep snow into raging floods. The waters caused the weakened railway embankments to crumble and prevented the movement of relief trains. The government met the situation by inaugurating trains of pack animals for carrying provisions into the devastated district.

THE Mexican argument continues from week to week, with evidence of a firmer stand on the part of the administration at Washington since the close of congress. The sudden departure of Mexican Ambassador Tellez for Mexico City caused rumors of a diplomatic break, but these were seemingly without foundation. From Mexico City the ambassador said his return to his home was caused purely by personal matters, and that he would again be in Washington within a couple of weeks. On March 0 the State department made public testimony that was given to the senate foreign relations committee in February in which it was stated that 22,000,000 acres of land, much of it owned by Americans, had been seized by the Mexican government. During the absence of Secretary of State Kellogg the Mexican situation was being handled directly by the President.

IN NEW YORK on March 8 Thomas W. Miller, former alien property custodian, was sentenced to serve 18 months in Atlanta penitentiary and pay a $5,000 fine by Judge Knox in Federal court. Sentence was passed after Judge Knox denied motions of counsel to set aside the verdict and direct a new trial. Miller was found guilty of conspiracy to defraud the government of his unbiased services by a jury which failed to reach an agreement on Harry M. Daugherty, former attorney general, on trial with Miller. The maximum penalty was two years in prison and a $10,000 fine.

IT HAS been practically decided that the President will spend his summer vacation in the West, though the exact location has not yet been selected. South Dakota and Wyoming are bidding for the honor of entertaining the nation's Chief Executive, and it is probable that the summer White House will be either the State Game lodge in the Black Hills, 21 miles from Douglas, or the Coe ranch near Cody, Wyoming, bordering on Yellowstone National park. Political wiseacres see in this move of the President an intention on his part to be an avowed candidate for re-nomination, with the expectation that his visit to the West will go far to offset the dissatisfaction among the farmers caused by his veto of the farm relief bill.

PROFITLESS wars is to be the program for France in the future. The French chamber of deputies has passed Paul Boncour's project for the mobilization of every man, woman and child and the conscription of capital in the event of war. Only the communists dissented. Paul Boucour's plan, founded on socialistic ideas, calls for mobilization of everybody in France, "without distinction as to age or sex." M. Shaumie, Radical Socialist deputy, warned against the danger of this plan.

"In mobilizing the entire nation," he said, "we will automatically deprive ourselves of the protection of the international conventions of The Hague and London and give the enemy justification to deport women and children, since they are combatants, or to sink unarmed passenger ships."

The deputies, however, modified the article to read: "Every Frenchman, without distinction as to age or sex, 'whether combatant or non-combatant,' must participate in the country's defense."

DESPITE the failure of the senate to pass the deficiency appropriation bill before adjournment, thus leaving many departments of the government crippled for lack of finances, the President has declined to consider an extra session. The largest items in the deficiency were $37,200,000 to the pension bureau for pensions to veterans of the Civil and other wars prior to the World war and their dependents; $35,000,000 for veterans of the World war and $25,000,000 to the veterans' bureau for loans to veterans on soldiers' bonus certificates.

Announcement was made by the pension bureau that present appropriations will be depleted about May 1, so that it will not be possible to pay during the months of May and June the 500,000 beneficiaries. On July 1, however, when appropriations for the fiscal year 1928 become available, the accrued pensions for a three months' period will be paid. Some arrangement will be made by which veterans receiving compensation under the veterans' bureau will not suffer much inconvenience. As to loans to veterans on bonus certificates, the veterans will have to depend upon the banks until next winter.

FRANCE will make a $10,000,000 payment on its debt to the United States this year. This does not mean that the French government has accepted the terms of settlement of the debt as proposed by this country. It is merely a temporary agreement pending ratification of the debt accords. The action of Premier Poincare in providing for this temporary arrangement was the subject of a bitter debate in the French chamber of deputies, but was finally approved by a vote of 350 to 180. The socialists and communists voted against it. These annual payments are expected to continue until such time as France ratifies the debt accords.

During February the United States received $1,430,000 in reparations from Germany according to the agent general for reparations. This brings the American receipts, in the third annuity year, up to $9,640,000, which is approximately the same as France received in a single month. Germany now has paid, under the Dawes plan, a total of $662,000,000.

THAT there will be a three power naval parley held on the invitation of President Coolidge is practically assured, Japan and Great Britain having assured the United States that they would accept such an invitation. France and Italy will be asked to assign observers to the conference to be held at Geneva, and it is expected they will do so.

That the President is making concessions to the attitude of Japan was disclosed by the character of the revised proposal of a three-power conference Mr. Coolidge has made to Tokio and London. In this latest overture the President said nothing about extending the 5-5-3 ratio to auxiliaries. He merely proposed that the three powers get together at Geneva to see whether any further naval limitation could be agreed to. In his original invitation to the five naval powers, the President suggested extension of the 5-5-3 ratio to auxiliaries. Japan replied, accepting the invitation, but rejecting the suggestion as to the ratio clearly indicating that parity with the United States was desired.

AN IMPORTANT decision of the United States Supreme court involving primary elections was handed down on March 7. The decision invalidates a Texas statute forbidding negroes to vote in Democratic party primaries. A negro sought $5,000 damages from election officials for refusing him the right to vote in the primary of the Democratic party, of which he is a member.

"If the defendant's conduct was a wrong to the plaintiff," said the court, "the same reasons that allow a recovery for denying the plaintiff a vote at a final election allow it for denying a vote at the primary that may determine the final result."

It is believed this decision will have a direct bearing on the defense offered by Smith and Vare in their fights for senate seats. Supporters of Smith and Vare contend that the senate cannot properly exclude them for excessive expenditures in the primaries in which they won their nominations because the federal government has no jurisdiction of primary elections. In support of their argument they cite the Supreme court decision in the Newberry case invalidating the federal corrupt practices act of 1911 in so far as it pertained to primaries.

Senator Borah interpreted the decision as indicating the conviction of the court that the primary is an inseparable and important part of the general election and therefore within the jurisdiction of congress in the case of election of senators and representatives.

This interpretation would destroy the basis of the arguments in behalf of Smith and Vare that what they did in the primaries is outside federal jurisdiction and control.

THE revolution in Nicaragua goes merrily on. President Diaz has decided the peace efforts were fruitless, and that it will be necessary to fight it out with the rebels outside of the area controlled by United States marines. In the meantime the United States is sending more troops into the country, 1,000 landing on March 7.

On March 4 1,200 United States marines were landed at Shanghai and paraded through the streets. This was the first landing of American forces in China. There has been no formal protest made to the American government by the Chinese because of this action. On March 6 500 Japanese sailors were landed and quartered in the Japanese owned cotton mills.

Efforts to patch up some sort of a peace between the contending Chinese faction have been made during the past few days, but up to the time of the writing of this review they have been fruitless. Chang, acting for the Peking government, offers to consider terms of peace if Cantonese will first oust the bolsheviki representatives in an advisory capacity to the Cantonese government.

SENATOR REED, of Missouri, contended in the closing hours of the senate that the life of his slush fund investigating committee did not depend upon the passage of the resolution over which the senate deadlock occurred. After the adjournment of congress he applied to the sergeant at arms of the senate for $1,000 with which to continue recess sessions of his committee. Senator Henry W. Keyes, New Hampshire, chairman of the committee on audit and control of the contingent expenses of the senate, has refused to allow the expenditure of any money for the purposes of the committee, and thus blocks any further investigation. It was the purpose of the committee to continue the investigations in Illinois and Pennsylvania, and to extend it to other states, especially Colorado.

ONE of the most remarkable fights to save a human life was waged at St. Francis hospital, Evanston, Ill. For 108 hours 60 comrades of Albert Frick, aged twenty-two, stricken with paralysis of the diaphragm and respiratory muscles, labored in pairs in shifts of 15 minutes inducing artificial respiration. Four physicians, leading specialists in that type of disease, were in constant attendance. Because of the desperate fight put up to save the young man's life the case attracted international attention.

UNKNOWN SPECIES OF ANIMAL FOUND

Different From Any Described in Natural History.

Estelline, Texas.—In the white gypsum hills near here there was recently found a colony of little animals, the identity of which has not been established. They are apparently of a species different from any described in natural history. One of the animals was captured by C. E. Miller and is kept by him as a pet. It has a soft black-and-white fur, the white extending over its back and underneath its stomach like a wide girdle. White cuffs adorn each paw.

Its front paws resemble human hands, and the black four fingers, hairy, are remindful of the legs of a giant tarantula. Its hind paws are black and have long claws which enable it to climb and scratch. It is particular about them, and keeps them polished.

A face, sharp pointed, peers out from a background of fuzzy mustache, much like that on a monkey's face. Its nose is smooth and sleek like hard rubber. Its neck is small and can be spanned with the thumb and forefinger of an ordinary-size hand.

The animal stands 30 inches high and weighs 20 pounds. It has strong white teeth made for tearing, apparently, but it refuses to eat meats of any kind or fish. It is strictly vegetarian.

Jewelry of 10,000 B. C. Found in London Garden

London.—Fifteen feet of solid history dating from 10,000 B. C. have been discovered in what is certainly the only virgin soil in London and believed to be the only virgin ground to be found in any city in the world. This small tract of land, which has never been built on, is right in the heart of the city behind a court off Fleet street.

Discovery of the unique archeological value of the vacant lot was made when Hugh S. Gordon, who is a mining engineer, rented it from the Goldsmiths' and Silversmiths' company as a vegetable allotment to keep himself fit. Finds in the earth already made date from the Paleolithic, Neolithic and Iron ages, continuously upward to Saxon times about 800 A. D. Then there is a gap until the Thirteenth century, from which time there has been exhumed an extraordinary wealth of historic relics.

The gem of the treasures dug out to date is an exquisite Cretan jewel recognized as part of a collar brought by the Phoenicians when they came to trade with the early Britons. The complete excavation of the site is expected to take three years.

Indians of U. S. to Race Against 2 Tarahumaras

Austin, Texas.—Crack American Indian runners from the Haskell institute will be pitted against the two famous Tarahumara Indians of Mexico in an endurance run between San Antonio and Austin, 82 miles, as one of the notable features of the third annual Texas relays to be held under the auspices of the athletic department of the University of Texas, March 25, according to L. Theo. Bellmont, director.

This marathon will be over the post highway that runs between San Antonio and Austin. The Tarahumara Indian entries have aroused the greatest interest in athletic circles. The fact that they broke the world's long-distance running record several weeks ago in a jaunt which they made between Pueblo and Mexico City, 82 miles, brought to them international attention.

The Tarahumaras are now in their village home in a remote part of the Sierra Madres, in western Chihuahua.

Germans Find Oxygen Is Seasickness Cure

Berlin.—As a remedy for seasickness, German physicians describe the inhalation of oxygen as most efficient.

After the inhalation of the gas for three to four minutes, the patient is said to find immediate relief, even the feeling of nausea ceasing.

German medical experts attribute the beneficial effects of oxygen in this connection to its powerful influence in alleviating an anaemic state of the brain, which they say is one of the pronounced phenomena of seasickness.

Marshal Foch Receives Salary of $10 Per Day

Paris.—A marshal of France, the highest military honor and command—that given Foch, Joffre and four others—gets a salary of 90,000 francs a year, or $10 a day, under the new scale.

Officers grade down from this pay to that of a second lieutenant, who draws $32 a month during the early part of his career.

There are small allowances, but so small that an officer must have some independent fortune or be so poor as to risk having to make humiliating economies.

If Back Hurts Begin on Salts

Flush Your Kidneys Occasionally by Drinking Quarts of Good Water

No man or woman can make a mistake by flushing the kidneys occasionally, says a well-known authority. Too much rich food creates acids which clog the kidney pores so that they sluggishly filter or strain only part of the waste and poisons from the blood. Then you get sick Rheumatism, headaches, liver trouble, nervousness, constipation, dizziness, sleeplessness, bladder disorders often come from sluggish kidneys.

The moment you feel a dull ache in the kidneys or your back hurts or if the urine is cloudy, offensive, full of sediment, irregular of passage or attended by a sensation of scalding, begin to drink soft water in quantities; also get about four ounces of Jad Salts from any reliable pharmacy and take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast for a few days and your kidneys may then act fine.

This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for years to help flush clogged kidneys and stimulate them to activity, also to help neutralize the acids in the system so they no longer cause irritation, thus often relieving bladder disorders.

Jad Salts is inexpensive and cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink, which everyone can take now and then to help keep the kidneys clean and the blood pure, thereby often preventing serious kidney complications.

Tragic Mistake

Osbert Sitwell, the English satirist, said at a dinner in New York: "A law should be passed forbidding aged millionaires to marry beautiful young movie stars. I mentioned the need of such a law the other night, and an aged millionaire took me up.

"'Why shouldn't men of ripe years,' he barked, 'wed young brides if their inclination lies that way?'

"'Well, for one thing,' I said, 'it's so much like buying books for your friends to read.'"—Detroit Free Press.

"Tanlac Never Failed Me Yet!"

Respected Cedar Rapids widow helped once by Tanlac, relied on it for relief in repeated attacks. It helped every time; never failed her.

Mrs. Elizabeth Rowe is a highly esteemed resident, widely known in Cedar Rapids, Ia. She lives at 410 First Ave., West. At 68 years of age she is happy and well as she was when many years younger. But she has had her troubles at times. As she recently said: "I used to be so rundown and played out that the neighbors sympathized with my condition. Severe backaches and headaches kept me in constant worry and pain. I grew nervous from loss of sleep and the very sight of food nauseated me. The daintiest meals had no appeal for me.

"The first real relief I got was from Tanlac. It gave me a hearty appetite and smoothed out my tangled nerves, so that I could sleep normally again. In fact, it seemed to pour new strength and vitality into my system. That was some years ago. Twice since I have had a recurrence of the conditions, but took Tanlac again before they became too bad. It has never yet failed to put me back in splendid health."

CHAPTER XVII

A Little Look Forward

"So Shaw told you!" muttered Epstein a few moments later.

"You bet he did!" Laurie blithely corroborated. "He had to to save his skin. But he was pretty game, I'll give him credit for that. I had to fire one shot past his head to convince him that I meant business. Besides, I had said, I thought he was reaching for something. I suppose I was a little nervous. Anyway, we clenched again, and—well—I'd have killed him, I guess, if he hadn't spoken."

He smiled reminiscently. All three were tactfully ignoring Bangs, who had walked over to the window and by the exercise of all his will-power was now getting his nerves under control.

"Shaw didn't do the tale justice, he hadn't time to," Laurie continued, "and I was in such a hurry to get back to Miss Mayo that I didn't ask for many details. But on the way to the garage it occurred to me that I had a chance for a come-back that would keep you three from feeling too smug and happy over the way I had gulped down your little plot. So I planned it, and I rather think," he added complacently, "that I put it over."

"Put it over!" groaned Epstein. "Mein Gott, I should think you did put it over! You took twenty years off my life, young man; that's von sure thing."

"You'll revive." Laurie turned to Rodney, who was now facing them. "All right, old man?"

"I guess so," gulped Rodney. There was no self-consciousness in his manner. He had passed through blazing hell in the last twenty minutes, and he did not care who knew it.

"Then," urged Laurie, seeking to divert him, "you may give me the details Shaw had to skip. How the dickens did you happen to start this frameup, anyhow?"

"How much did Shaw tell you?" Rodney tried to speak naturally.

"That the whole adventure was a plant you and Epstein had fixed up to keep me out of mischief," Laurie repeated, patiently. "He explained that you had engaged a company to put it over, headed by Miss Mayo, who is a friend of Mrs. Ordway, and who has a burning ambition to go on the stage. He said you promised her that if she made a success of it, she was to have the leading role in our next play. That's about all he told me."

"That's all I know," ended Laurie. "But I want to know some more. Whose bright little idea was this, in the first place?"

"Mrs. Ordway's."

"Louise's!" Unconsciously Laurie's face softened.

"Yes. I went to see her one day," Bangs explained, "and I mentioned that we couldn't get any work out of you till you'd had the adventure you were insisting on. Mrs. Ordway said, 'Well, why don't you give him an adventure?' That," confessed Rodney, "started me off."

"Obviously," corroborated his friend. "So it was Louise's idea. Poor Louise! I hope she got some fun out of it."

"You bet she did!" corroborated Bangs, eagerly. "I kept her posted every day. She said it was more fun than a play, and that it was keeping here alive."

"Humph! Well, go on. Tell me how it started." Laurie was smiling. If the little episode just ended had been, as it were, a bobolink singing to Louise Ordway during her final days on earth, it was not he who would find fault with the bird or with those who had set it singing.

"The day we saw the caretaker in the window across the park," continued Rodney, "and I realized how interested you were, it occurred to me that we'd engage that studio and put Miss Mayo into it. Miss Mayo lives in Richmond, Va., and she had been making a big hit in amateur theatricals. She wanted to get on the legitimate stage, as Shaw told you; so Mrs. Ordway suggested that Epstein and I try her out—"

"Never mind all that!" interrupted Laurie. "Perhaps later Miss Mayo will tell me about it herself!"

"Now, what I meant to do was this—" Rodney spoke briskly. He was recovering poise with extraordinary rapidity. His color was returning, his brown eyes were again full of life. And, as always when his thoughts were on his work, he was utterly obvious to any other interest. "The second act was to be—"

He stopped and stared. Epstein had risen, had ponderously approached him, and had resolutely grasped him by one ear.

"Rodney," said the manager, with ostentatious subtlety, "you don't know it, but you got a date up-town in five minutes."

His voice and manner enlightened the obtuse Mr. Bangs.

"Oh, er—yes," stammered that youth, confusedly, and reluctantly got to his feet.

"Wait a minute," said Laurie. "Before you fellows go, there's one more little matter we've got to straighten out." They turned to him, and at the expression of utter devotion on the two faces the sternness left young Devon's eyes. "I was pretty mad about this business for a few minutes after Shaw explained it," he went on. "You folks didn't have much mercy, you know. You fooled me to the top of my bent. But now I feel that we've at least broken even."

"Even! Mein Gott!" repeated Epstein with a groan. "You've taken ten years—"

"You've got back ten already," the young man blithely reminded him. "That's fine! As I say, we're even. But from this time on, one thing must be definitely understood: Henceforth I'm not in leading-strings of any kind, however kindly they are put on me. If this association is to continue, there must be no more practical jokes, no more supervision, no more interference with me or my affairs. Is that agreed?"

"You bet it is!" corroborated Epstein. Again he wiped his brow. "I can't stand the pace you fellas set," he admitted.

Bangs nodded. "That's agreed. You're too good a boomerang for little Rodney."

"For my part," continued Laurie, "I promise to get to work on the new play, beginning next Monday."

"You will!" the two men almost shouted.

"I will. I've got to stand by Louise for the next two or three months, and we'll write the play while I'm doing

"You'll Make a Man of Me, Doris," He Said Brokenly, When He Could Speak.

it. Then, whether America enters the war this spring or not, I'm going to France. But we'll talk over all that later. Are you off?"

He ushered them to the door.

"And it's all right, boy?" Epstein asked wistfully. "You know how vell ve meant. You ain't got no hard feelings about this?"

"Not one." Laurie wrung his hand. Then, with an arm across Rodney's shoulders, he gave him a bearish hug. "I'll see you a little later," he promised.

Rodney suddenly looked self-conscious.

"Perhaps then you'll give me a chance to tell you some news," he suggested, with a mixture of triumph and embarrassment. Epstein's knowing grin enlightened Laurie.

"Sonya?" he asked eagerly.

"Yep. Great, isn't it?"

Laurie stared at him.

"By Jove, you have been busy!" he conceded. "Between manufacturing a frame-up for me, and winning a wife, you must have put in a fairly full week even for you." His arm tightened around his chum's shoulders. "I'm delighted, old man," he ended, seriously. "Sonya is the salt of the earth. Tell her she has my blessing."

When he re-entered the room he found Doris standing in its center, waiting for him. Something in her pose reminded him of their first moments together in that familiar setting. She had carried off the original scene very well. Indeed, she had carried off very well most of the scenes she had been given.

"Laurie—" Her voice trembled. "You have forgiven the others. Can't you forgive me?"

"There's nothing to forgive," he quietly told her. "You saw a chance and you took it. In the same conditions, I suppose any other girl would have done the same thing. It's quite all right, and I wish you the best luck in the world. We'll try to make the new play worthy of you."

"You're not going to forgive me!" she cried. "And—I don't blame you!"

She walked away from him, and, sinking into the chair Epstein had so recently vacated, sat bending forward, her elbow resting on its broad arm, her chin in her hand. It was the pose he knew so well and had loved so much.

"Can't you understand?" she went on. "I've hated it from the start. I've hated deceiving you. You see—I didn't know you when I began. I thought it was just a good joke and awfully interesting. Then, when I met you, and you were so stunning, always, I felt like a beast. I told them I simply couldn't go on, but they coaxed and begged, and told me what it would mean to you as well as to me— They made a big point of that."

He took his favorite position by the mantel and watched her as she talked.

"I don't want the play," she cried passionately. "I wouldn't appear in it now under any conditions. I don't want to go on the stage. It was just a notion, an impulse. I've lost it, all of it, forever. I'm going back home, to my own people and my—own Virginia, to—to try to forget all this. I'm going tomorrow."

"You're excited," said Laurie, soothingly. He took her hands and held them. "I've put you through a bad half-hour. You understand, of course, that I wouldn't have done it if I hadn't been made to realize that your whole thought, throughout this experiment, has been of the play, and only of the play."

She drew back and looked at him.

"What do you mean?"

"Why—" It was hard to explain, but he blundered on. "I mean that, for a little time, I was fool enough to hope that—that—some day you might care for me. For of course you know, you've known all along—that I—love you. But when I got the truth—"

"You haven't got the truth." She was interrupting him, but her face had flashed into flame. "You haven't had it for one second; but you're going to get it now. I'm not going to let our lives be wrecked by any silly misunderstanding."

She stopped, then rushed on.

"Oh, Laurie, can't you see? The only truth that counts between us is that I—I—adore you! I have from the very first—almost from the day you came here— Oh, it's dreadful of you to make me say all this!"

She was sobbing now, in his arms. For a long moment he held her very close and in utter silence. Like Bangs, but in a different way, he was feeling the effects of a tremendous reaction.

"You'll make a man of me, Doris," he said brokenly, when he could speak. "I'm not afraid to let you risk the effort. And when I come back from France—"

"When you come back from France you'll come back to your wife," she told him steadily. "If you're going, I'll marry you before you go. Then I'll wait and pray, and pray and wait, till you come again. And you will come back to me," she whispered. "Something makes me sure of it."

"I'll come back," he promised. "Now, for the first time, I am sure of that, too."

Four hours later Mr. Laurence Devon, lingeringly bidding good night to the lady of his heart, was surprised by a final confidence.

"Laurie," said Doris, holding him fast by one button as they stood together on the threshold of the little studio," do you know my real reason for giving up my ambition to go on the stage?"

"Yes. Me," said young Mr. Devon promptly and brilliantly. "But you needn't do it. I'm not going to be the ball-and-chain type of husband."

"I know. But there are reasons within the reason." She twisted the button thoughtfully. "It's because you're the real actor in the family. When I remember what you did to the three of us in that murder scene, and so quietly and naturally, without any heroics—"

She broke off. "There are seven million things about you that I love," she ended, "but the one I think I love the best of all is this: even in your biggest moments, Laurie darling, you never, never 'emote!'"

CHAPTER XVIII

"What About Laurie?"

From the New York Sun, January 7, 1919: "Among the patients on the hospital ship Comfort, which arrived yesterday with nine hundred wounded soldiers on board, was Captain Laurence Devon, of the American flying forces in France.

"Captain Devon is an American 'ace,' with eleven air victories officially to his credit. He was awarded the French Croix de Guerre and the American Distinguished Service medal for extraordinary heroism on August 9, 1918, when he went to the assistance of a French aviator who was fighting four Fokker planes. In the combat the four German machines were downed and their pilots killed. The Frenchman was badly hurt but eventually recovered.

"Captain Devon is well known in American social and professional life. He is the only son of the late Horace Devon, of Devondale, Ohio, and the brother-in-law of Robert J. Warren, of New York. Before the war he was a successful playwright. Just before sailing for France last year, he married Miss Doris Mayo, daughter of the late General Frederick Mayo, of Richmond, Virginia. On reaching his New York home today he will see for the first time his infant son, Rodney Jacob Devon."

[THE END.]

Passion Music

Passion music is music that endeavors to picture the suffering and death of Christ. The subject has been a great favorite with composers. Probably the greatest masterpiece of this kind is the passion music by Bach. The passion may be said to consist of the seven last words of the Savior on the cross.

Early Grazing Is Very Injurious

Should Not Begin Until Grasses Are About Six Inches Tall.

Grazing of grasslands should not begin until most of the grasses are about six inches tall, or in the case of shorter grasses, until the stage when the flower heads are in the boot. If this practice is followed there will be less loss from poisonous plants, there will be greater production of forage, a better stand of the most palatable plants and greater carrying capacity.

Plants Are Stunted.

When grazing is started too early the desired plants are stunted and the root system remains small. When large amounts of water are needed by the leaves later in the season the roots are not deep enough to supply the demand. Sufficient food is not stored in the roots. Fewer stems and leaves are produced with a result that flowers and seeds cannot form. So the plants become weakened and reproduction is prevented.

Early in the season the soil is usually wet. Tramping at this time easily kills many plants, especially seedlings. Furthermore, many plants are readily pulled out by the roots.

Poisonous Plants Tempting.

Poisonous plants such as larkspur, locoweed and death camas begin growth early in the spring. When the grasses are still short the poisonous plants are much taller and succulent, forming a tempting bunch of green forage. The grasses at this time are low in feed value and often fail to satisfy the hunger of the stock, so a large bunch of green larkspur or other poisonous plant is greedily eaten. Later in the season the poisonous plants are not so tempting.

When the grasses are given a chance to start vigorous growth in the spring they will help prevent the spread of unpalatable and poisonous plants.—Herbert C. Hanson, Botanical Section, Colorado Experiment Station.

Sunshine and Fresh Air Important to the Calf

On many farms the calf pen is located on the north side of the building, where sunshine is an unknown quantity. In many cases the calves do not have access to outside lots where they get the benefits of sunshine. Sunshine is not only one of the best disinfecting agencies, but it is also necessary for the proper growth and development.

Fresh air is not possible where the calf pens are filled with manure. Too many people keep adding straw to the manure which is in the calf pens without cleaning. They claim that this practice makes a warm bed. However, such a bed not only gives off heat but it also is a bed for the formation of disense germs of various kinds, as well as ammonia and carbon dioxide gases. There is little benefit from such a bed, and the chances for trouble are increased.

Only Safe Seed Bargain Is From Reliable Firm

The only safe seed bargain is the purchase from thoroughly reliable firms. You usually pay the regular price instead of the bargain price. But good seeds are always a bargain at the regular price.

In planting seed of unknown value, one stands the chance of losing two or three weeks of valuable planting time.

Planting seed in liberal quantities is economical. If your garden seeds come up too thick, it is much easier to thin than to replant for good results.

Choose for the most part those varieties that have proven valuable in the past, but it is well to experiment with new varieties when you are not depending on the result.

Rich, Deep, Mellow Soil Is Proper for Parsnips

Parsnips delight in a rich, deep, mellow soil in order that the roots may grow long and straight. Undesirable side roots result when hard soil is reached. For this reason the soil must be plowed or spaded to a depth of 12 to 15 inches and a liberal dressing of fine, well-rotted manure worked into it. Fresh manure tends to cause sprawling, ill-shaped roots and should not be used. Ground that was heavily fertilized the past season is best for growing good parsnips but if only well-rotted fertilizer is used, good results may be expected.

The hollow crown is one of the best standard varieties and has proved good after tests covering several seasons.

HANCOCK FARM BUREAU TO MAKE DRIVE SOON

Membership Campaign Will Be Put On In Each Township

The Board of Directors of the Hancock County Farm Bureau have planned an extensive membership campaign. This campaign will reach every township in the county. The work will all be done by local people and committees are being appointed in each township.

The Hancock County Farm Bureau has a very large membership and is one of the leading counties in the state in this respect. It ranked first last year in counties of its size and ranked third in all counties The two counties having a larger membership were considerably larger. It is the aim of the board to have every non member visited and give them an opportunity to join the organization.

Bedtime Story

Once there was a statesman who decided that a new era had come.

"Illiteracy has vanished from the land," he said. "The people are now enlightened. Bunkum is as obsolete as the 30-cent dinner. Henceforth I shall tell them only the truth."

So, when he came up for re-election, he made no extravagant promises. He told them that business was bad and he didn't know how to make it any better.

He told them that he had voted for laws that he now believed were rotten. He told them that taxes would have to be raised and that no millenium was in sight.

But he added that he would do all that a normally intelligent person could do to improve conditions.

His opponent got the biggest plurality in history.—Kansas City Star.

Another U. S. A.

Speaking of United South Africa, I addressed a letter once to Richmond, Va., U. S. A. The letter, with a Richmond, Natal, postmark, was returned indorsed: "Address unknown." On complaining to the post office I was indignantly informed that U. S. A. stood for United South Africa, and that the United States of North America should be U. S. O. N. A. American friends, please accept this, the only imitation. Of course, it may be perfectly all right when mail sorters get to know it, but I am afraid if I mailed a letter to Savannah, Georgia, U. S. O. N. A., it would be put in the bag for Asia Minor, or wherever the original Georgia may be.—From Spedding's "Reminiscences."

Overalls for Evening Wear

Wearing overalls to an evening party is regarded as good form in the gold-mining districts of Alaska, according to Edward McKelvey, former Wisconsin resident, who knew Jack London and Rex Beach in the early days of the Klondike fields, says the Milwaukee Journal.

McKelvey, who recently spent three days with relatives at Prairie du Chien, Wis., was a partner with Rex Beach in a wood-cutting contract. The noted author, McKelvey says, spent eleven years in the Far North laying the foundation for most of his stories and nearly all of his characters were persons Mr. Beach had known, with only a change of name.

Graduated as Dog Nurses

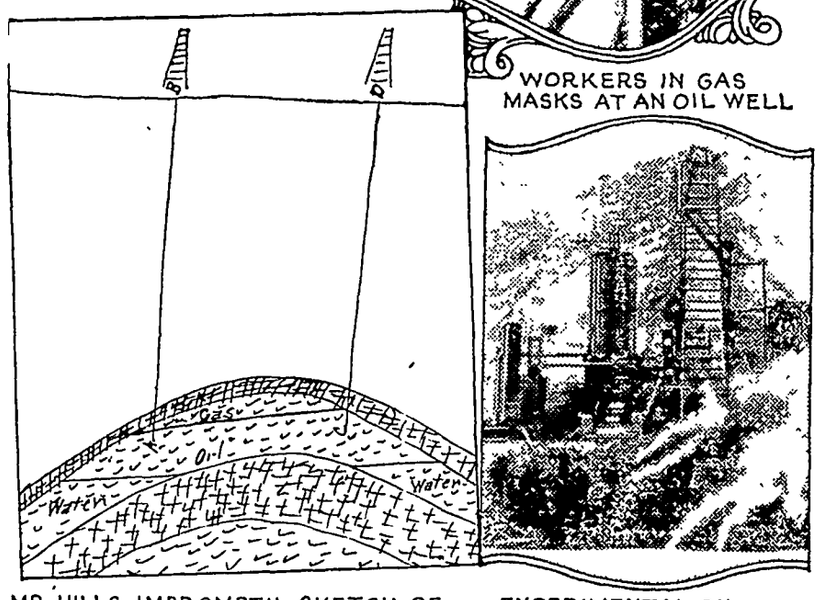
It is the established custom about the country homes in Great Britain to keep a number of dogs, some as house pets, some for hunting, others for no special purpose save to gratify the Englishman's love for dogs. Hence there is a continual demand for veterinary service for the dogs. Recently the animal hospital at Totterridge graduated a class of young women who had completed the training for dog nurses, their plan being to locate in the wealthy country sections and sell their services to dog owners whose pets might be in need of medical attention, and they expect to make a fortune in their profession.—Ohio State Journal.

English Name Hurt Singer

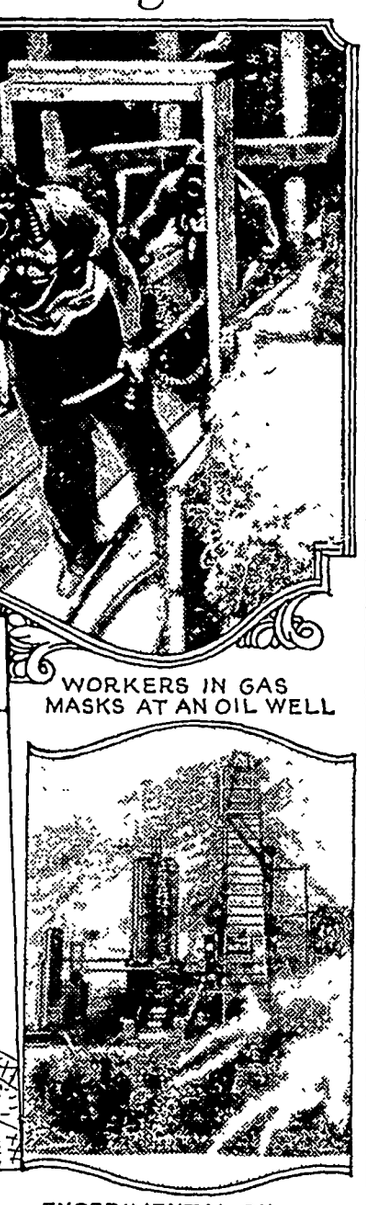
Beatrice Sherrard, a soprano who made her debut last year at the Municipal opera house of Rio de Janeiro in "Aida," said that her English name was such a hindrance in Italy when she went there to study that she was forced to adopt a Latin substitute. "I succeeded in obtaining a hearing before the Italian impresarios only by assuming the name of Beatrice Gherardi," she said. "They scoffed when I was introduced, exclaiming 'What, you are English! They have no talent!'" Miss Sherrard's mother was Brazilian, her father English. She was born in Brazil.

U. S. Authority Sees Ample Motor Fuel for Long Future

HARRY H. HILL
©HARRIS & EWING



MR HILLS IMPROMPTU SKETCH OF AN OIL DOME



WORKERS IN GAS MASKS AT AN OIL WELL

EXPERIMENTAL OIL SHALE REDUCTION PLANT

The U. S. Bureau of Mines is confident that motor fuel supplies will be ample for many years to meet all needs of the country's millions of automobiles. Harry H. Hill, chief petroleum engineer of the Bureau, here tells the reasons for this conviction, and sketches the advances in industrial methods which justify his opinions.

By HARRY H. HILL
Chief Petroleum Engineer, United States Bureau of Mines.

ONE reason why there is no reason to worry greatly about motor fuel for a long time ahead is that people are worrying about it. Interest in such a question at the right time, is the best insurance against disaster. The President and the Federal Oil Corporation Board have done what was needed, at the right time,

We know that most petroleum has come from rather limited areas and that even from these only a small proportion has been taken out. Oil produced by gas pressure capable of lifting it to the surface when we drill holes is but a small proportion of all the oil contained in the sands Even from the best pools recovery by the old methods is small, perhaps one-half in the most favorable conditions, oftener one-sixth, or one-seventh, or one-tenth But a considerable part of what still remains in the ground can be recovered by methods now established as technically and economically practicable..

Producing oil from coal and shales and by mining the oil bearing sands is entirely possible. Experiments are going on in these directions, and if we ever have to fall back on these resources we will be ready For a long time, however, the present methods of exploration and drilling, with improving processes to assure larger recoveries, are likely to suffice

An Oil Dome Illustrated

I am no draughtsman, but maybe I can draw something that will help explain Here's a rough drawing of an oil dome. The shaded part at the bottom is a deposit of oil bearing sands—with an impervious rock stratum above. A wild-catter drilled the hole A-B and gas pressure caused oil and gas to flow After a while the gas pressure wasn't sufficient to keep up the flow and they pumped until ultimately even this ceased producing

Nevertheless, most of the oil was still left sticking to the sand grains Then the operator drilled the well C-D, which flowed for a time, but most of the oil was still down there in the sand. If the gas pressure could be restored more would flow. So the operator injects gas into one well, restoring the pressure and causing the oil to resume flowing from the other After a time the flow will stop again, but still much of the oil will be left In some fields it has been possible to obtain additional amounts of oil by introducing water in some of the wells and forcing the oil to others. The addition of a chemical such as soda ash to the water may assist in removing the oil from the sand grains, but neither plain water nor water containing chemicals should be introduced into an oil sand except as a last resort, for it is likely that the water, which travels faster through the sand, will get to the open wells ahead of the oil and when the flow is resumed under pressure water will come out.

Everything Saved Nowadays

The gas escaping from an oil well carries with it a proportion of gasoline, which in the old days was lost Nowadays it is extracted from the gas and saved, while the dry gas can be forced back into the ground to maintain pressure.

One of the menaces to most oil pools is the inflow of subterranean water. Water flows through the oil sands faster than oil, and by surrounding the bottom of the well keeps the oil out. How to shut off the water and permit the oil to run out is a problem with which the engineers have long worked. They have made great progress and so increased recoveries

In earlier times most oil producers carefully guarded all information about their wells and experiences, but latterly there is co-operation in these matters. Geologists and petroleum engineers, once derided by the "practical" oil men, are more and more accepted as guides and mentors. New knowledge is constantly increasing recoveries

As to Mining for Oil

In Lorraine they have dug shafts down to the oil sands and actually brought the sands out, like coal from a mine. But it's costly.

Another mining process is to sink a shaft to the oil sands and from its bottom drive tunnels in all directions through the sands. From these tunnels small perforated pipes are driven into the sands, which drain the oil out of the sands. It flows to larger pipes back at the foot of the shaft and thence is pumped out. This requires installing an expensive plant, but in some fields the high recovery that is assured might justify the cost. I understand the process is about to be intsalled in a few fields in this country, some companies being convinced it is practicable and profitable.

Oil can be distilled from coal, and much work is now being done along this line. But more appeal has been made by the plan of extracting oil from shale The shales of Scotland have been worked for three-quarters of a century, and they are almost unlimited in this country, richer in oil than those of Scotland Kentucky, Ohio, Colorado, Utah, Nevada, Wyoming and California are particularly rich in shales. It is just a question of the cost of extracting the oil Congress has given $180,000, with which the Bureau has installed a plant near Rulison, Colorado, to distill oil from the Colorado River Shales It is calculated that the shales mined at Rulison will produce about a barrel of oil to the ton.

The Use of Oil Shales

In Scotland they are working shales that produce about twenty-five gallons of oil per ton The seams are from three-and-a-half to eight or ten feet thick. In Colorado are seams many times as thick and containing much more oil per ton Reduction of shales involves an enormous mining operation, and after the oil is extracted the vast tonnage of refuse must be disposed of. So it is expensive compared with producing oil from wells.

Ben E. Lindsey of the Bureau of Mines Experiment Station at Bartlesville, Okla., is confident that exploration, better recoveries, better utilization and deeper drilling would furnish enough oil to meet all requirements for at least twenty-five to fifty years, if it could be extracted in that time. But as a practical matter this will not be possible. Within that period there will be times of shortage, when oil from shales will be needed to supplement the oil from wells, etc.

Meantime federal and state governments and the industry are co-operating in an astonishing range of investigations and studies. These activities cover such a wide field that even an enumeration of them would run into tiresome detail.

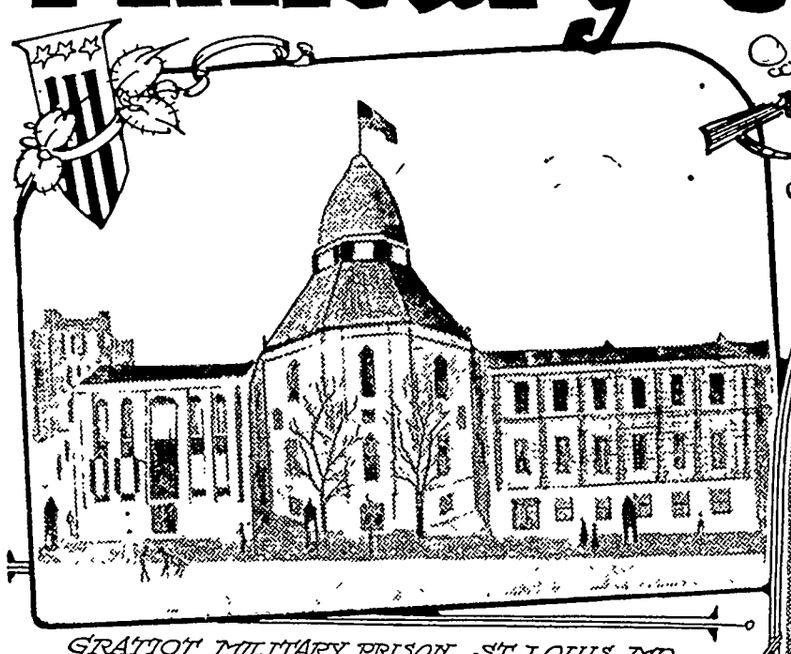
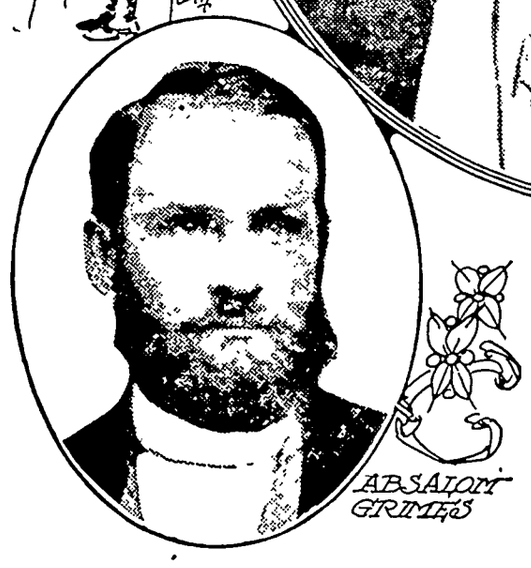
Mark Twain's Brief Military Career



GRATIOT MILITARY PRISON. ST. LOUIS, MO.



By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

EVERY American knows the name Mark Twain even though they are not so familiar with his real name, Samuel Langhorne Clemens. All who have read his books know something of his career as a printer, a steamboat captain, a newspaper man, but most of all ho is known as the great American humorist. Doubtless it will be a surprise to many to know that he was once a volunteer in the ranks of the Confederate army during the Civil war, and even though his experience as a soldier was a brief one, it was eventful and interesting enough. The story of this hitherto little-known period in Mark's life has come to light recently in a book published by the Yale University Press under the title of "Absalom Grimes, Confederate Mail Runner," edited from Captain Grimes' own story by M. M. Quaife.

For ten years before the Civil war Absalom Grimes was a Mississippi river pilot running between St. Louis and St. Paul. At the outbreak of the war he enlisted in one of the little companies of irregulars which were raised in Missouri to recruit the Confederate army. Sam Clemens was a member of this same company in which he had what he once referred to as his "short and inglorious military career." After the detachment had been disbanded, Grimes volunteered for service as a mail carrier between the Missouri and Kentucky Confederate troops in the South and their relatives at home. It was an extremely hazardous duty for every time he went through the Union lines he was in peril of capture and execution as a spy.

During the siege of Vicksburg Grimes ran the blockade successfully by wiring his mail in tin boxes to the bottom of an overturned skiff and floating beside it through the Union gunboats. He was repeatedly captured and twice sentenced to death. He spent several months in the old Gratiot prison in St. Louis and at the end of the war was under sentence of death. However, the personal intervention of President Lincoln, who gave him an unconditional pardon, saved his life. All in all, the story of Absalom Grimes is one of the most thrilling Civil war narratives that has yet been published and it is one well worth preserving.

This article, however, has to do principally with Mark Twain and the chapter on "Campaigning With Mark Twain" in the book is in some respects funnier than anything which Mark himself ever wrote. Here is how Absalom Grimes tells it:

A short time afterward the war excitement reached old Ralls (in Ralls county west of Hannibal) and one fine morning I learned that a whole brigade of recruits had formed a camp at Nuck Matson's home, two miles west of New London. . . . I found that the "brigade" consisted of ten young men, most of whom were my friends. Among them was Sam Clemens (Mark Twain). The recruits were undetermined what destructive move they would make first. On the suggestion of some one, nearly all of them had their hair cut off as short as possible so as to allow the enemy no advantage in close quarters. Tom Lyon acted as the barber, using a pair of sheep shears. Any hair that escaped cutting was pulled out by the shears. I joined the brigade and mounting an empty vinegar keg which was placed under a shade tree, had my hair sheared.

Neighboring farmers who were in sympathy with the South provided horses for those who had none. After much deliberation and discussion of plans we decided to move our camp westward, as we heard that some of the Union army would be in Hannibal shortly and we were liable to be captured at any moment by them. We wanted time to organize and drill before their arrival. No two soldiers wore the same equipment. . . . It would be useless for me to try to describe the appearance of that brigade when mounted. Nothing was uniform except that we all rode astride. I will mention especially but one "war horse," the one that had been presented to Mark Twain. He was a little yellow mule, as frisky as a jack rabbit. He had long, erect ears, was about four feet high, and carried his tail sticking straight out on a dead level with his back. He looked as if he had been mounted on the vinegar keg and Lyon, the company barber, had used the sheep shears on the wrong end, for his tail was shaved as with a razor to within six inches of the end—which resembled a painter's only tool. He was promptly christened "Paint Brush" by his master. On this little mule were located Mark Twain, one valise, one carpet sack, one pair of gray blankets, one home-made quilt, one frying pan, one old-fashioned Kentuoky squirrel rifle, twenty yards of sea grass rope, and one umbrella. . . .

We proceeded west until we reached the home of Col. Bill Splawn, and then next day went on to Col. John Ralls' home. He gave us a lecture on the importance of our mission and after his statement that he was duly authorized by Governor Jackson to enroll recruits for the southern army, we were all sworn in. . On a branch of the Salt river we found another squad of men who had organized a company and called themselves the Salt River Tigers. Their appearance would have filled the enemy with terror and caused a stampede equal to that of Bull Run. A blacksmith had completed their equipment by providing each man with a huge saber made from scythes, sickle-bars, long files and goodness knows what else. . . .

We decided to elect officers and the nominations for captain were William Ely and Asa Glascock, the former being elected. Then Glascock was unanimously elected first lieutenant. Mark Twain was nominated for second lieutenant and he was promptly elected. . . . We called on him for a speech. After some hesitation, because of such a large audience (the Tigers were present), he mounted a log, blushing, and said, "You would scarce expect one of my age to speak in public on the—this log. Well, boys, I thank you for electing me your lieutenant. I will try to do my duty and the square thing by you, but I cannot make a speech. . . ."

When I left New London Col. Hanceford Brown gave mo an old sword that he had worn in the Mexican war and his father had used in the War of 1812. While at Colonel Ralls' I concluded our second lieutenant should have a sword. . . . I requested Colonel Ralls to make the presentation speech, which he did, and Mark Twain responded. We then rode to the prairie, drew up in line and waited for Captain Ely to report—which he never did from that day to this. Lieutenant Glascock finally assumed command of the Ralls County Rangers, as we had named our company. . . .

We had no tents, so we cut sticks and stuck them into the ground and spread some of our blankets and quilts over them. As for food, the most important part of the expedition, we had very little of any kind. The boys went foraging and brought in corn meal, fat side meat and some sorghum. This constituted our bill of fare during the entire two weeks we remained there. It rained all the time we were there. Near our camp was located a log barn belonging to a farm house, and this we used for headquarters. . . . In it was a large trough in which we fed our horses. At night Clemens and I slept in it.

Some one brought us the news that the Yankee army was coming out of Hannibal in full force—that it would leave the railroad at Monroe City and march straight to our camp. This report created much excitement and we decided to put out a picket guard. . . . Mark Twain was placed in charge and after dark we started for our post two miles north of camp at the mouth of a lane leading to Monroe City. . . .

At one o'clock I heard the enemy coming and I aroused the other two soldiers. Lieutenant Clemens mounted "Paint Brush" and held our horses' bridles while we went to the mouth of the lane to observe the movements of the enemy. I stood in front and thus commanded the best view. Presently I saw them rise over the top of the hill and I raised my double-barreled shotgun and fired both barrels. Without remaining to see how many were killed, we turned and ran for our horses. To our horror we saw our lieutenant more than a hundred yards off and still going. We called him to halt and finally Bowen leveled his shotgun and yelled, "D—n you, Sam, if you don't stop, I'll let her go!" Clemens halted, and when we caught up with him (Bowen still swearing) he said, "'Paint Brush' got so excited I couldn't hold him." We mounted and rode away at full speed, leaving Sam and "Paint Brush" far in the rear. The last we heard him say was, "D—n you, you want the Yanks to capture me." . . .

After a meager breakfast, I requested Sergeant Bowen to go to the mouth of the lane to see if the enemy had removed their dead. After viewing the field of battle I said, "Sam, I want to tell you something, but you must swear that you will never reveal a word of it to any living soul as long as you and I both live." He said he would swear and cross his heart. "Do you see those tall mullein stalks on the side of that hill? Well, last night the wind caused them to wave and I would have sworn that they were Federals on horseback." "Well, you d—n fool You played h—l, didn't you?" was his only remark. But en route we were jovial and joked about the lieutenant and "Paint Brush." The very first thing Bowen did when we reached camp was to tell the whole story. . . .

Mark Twain became afflicted with a boil and it was a source of much comfort to him that there were no stools or chairs in camp. Mark had a lot of straw put in the feed trough and spent all of his time lying on the straw and wondering at the great amount of patience that Job possessed. . . . Finally we decided to advance upon Monroe City. Mark Twain was lying in his trough, wracked by his boil and remonstrated with us for thus breaking camp and showing no military discipline after all of our training. We told him that we were after blood and railroad iron and were going on the warpath. As we were about to depart, he raised up on one elbow and said, "If you are determined to go, it's no use for me to try and hold this position by myself. Ab, if you will saddle and pack up 'Paint Brush,' I will join the army and go with you." I saddled the mule and placed all of Mark's baggage on him and the lieutenant rolled out of the trough and mounted him.

It was but a few steps to Salt river which we had to cross, but we could not persuade the mules to take water After a great effort Mark said, "Ab, I guess you will have to lead him in He will not go for me." I tied one end of an inch rope around the mule's neck and took a turn with the other around the pommel of my saddle. After some maneuvering we got the mule close to the river bank and while he smelled the water I gave my horse a dig with the spurs and he jumped far out into the stream, dragging the mule. The top of the bank where we started was only a foot above water and the water was eight or ten feet deep the first jump. My horse swam vigorously for the other bank I looked back over my shoulder to see how Mark and "Paint Brush" were faring. To my horror neither was in sight and I thought both had drowned. I hurried across, knowing the rope would bring the mule I landed safely and after a few steps in the edge of the water, the top of Mark's old slouch hat, then Mark and the mule, in turn, showed up. The mule was very weak and weaving from side to side. When he was entirely out of the water, Mark rolled off, removed his hat, took his handkerchief from his pocket, wrung the water out of it and wiped his face. Then he said in his slow, drawling tones, "Ab, that infernal mule waded every step of the way across that river." . . .

About three o'clock in the afternoon, tired and hungry we stopped at a nice brick house by the side of the road. We tied our horses and went in. Presently in came a tall, thin woman with cold gray eyes and light hair that was combed back tight. In a sharp voice she said, "What do you men want?" Mark Twain acted as spokesman and said, "Madam, we are tired and hungry and would like to have something to eat."

"Get something to eat, would you? Well, you will not get it here!"

"We are willing to pay for it."

"Pay nothing! Get yourselves out of here, and that pretty quick or I will make you." Reaching behind her, she seized a large hickory stick and started for Clemens. "Hold on, madam! Don't be so fast. Let us reason the case. We are gentlemen and intend to pay for food."

"Do you think I am going to feed any rebels and my husband a colonel in the Union army? Get out!"

By this time all the boys were out and mounting the horses, while I remained just in the rear of Mark as he slowly backed toward the door, fearing to turn around and expose his boll to the woman with the club. She was striking at his shins, keeping him bent nearly double and all the while he remonstrated with her, she was abusing the rebels and Secesh. After we had left her I asked Sam why he did not take his sword to her. "Do you think I would disgrace it by spilling the blood of a woman?" he answered. "But I believe she would just as soon hit me as not if I had not kept out of her way." We caught up with the other boys who were roaring with laughter about our lieutenant's battle with the Yankee woman. We met a man on the road who informed us that the house was owned by Colonel Tinker, who had been in the Yankee army about three months. "Well, who is that woman"?

"That is Mrs. Tinker. She is the general at home!"

"I should remark she is!" commented Sam, as we rode on.

It was about one o'clock at night when we arrived at Colonel Bill Splawn's again, put our horses in the barn and then climbed into the loft to sleep on the hay. Mark selected a spot near the door in the gable end of the barn. Soon after we went to sleep and some one yelled "Fire!" Sure enough, a nice little fire had started in the hay. Mark made two or three rolls over and accidentally went out the door, falling on the rocks below a drop of ten or twelve feet. The fall sprained his ankle and he sat there groaning and rubbing his ankle with one hand while he felt for his boil with the other. Meanwhile the boys in the loft were busily rolling up the burning hay and out of the same door Mark had fallen from and down on top of him Away he went down the slope on all fours with the hay on his back. Several of us stood in the door and screamed with laughter He turned to us with language unfit for publication. We helped him to the barn, almost choked by our efforts to restrain our laughter. One of our boys had gone to sleep with a lighted pipe in his mouth and set the hay afire. . . .

In the afternoon we reached Nuck Matson's with our hair an inch longer than it was when we left there. Nuck had his own good time making fun of our campaign and safe return without the loss of a man, although our lieutenant had suffered several casualties. He was put to bed and tenderly cared for by Nuck and his kind wife. We disbanded and went in different directions. The last I saw of Clemens he lay groaning, his foot propped up, and the proportions of his wrappings made him look like a baby elephant. Mrs. Matson told me years afterwards that he was laid up there a long time. They gave him a crutch and kept a little negro boy on picket all the time at the end of the lane, where it connected with the main road a quarter of a mile from the house. Frequently the little negro would be seen running for dear life toward the house—a signal for Sam to grab his crutch and hasten to the bushes in the woods pasture adjoining the house. By the time the negro would yell "Miss Mary! the Yanks is comin'!" Sam would be in his hiding place, there to remain until notified, "Marse Sam, de Yanks is done gone!" I never learned what became of "Paint Brush." When Sam left Mrs. Matson's home he went to Keokuk, and then to Nevada with his brother As a result of that trip he wrote his first book "Roughing It."

Around Orchard

SAY ORCHARDISTS PRUNE TOO MUCH

Horticulturists at the experiment station at Geneva, N. Y., assert that many orchardists prune too much, without regard to the real need of the tree and that there is more danger of injuring the tree with too much pruning than with too little.

Trees which are carefully selected when the orchard is set out require only the removal of an occasional branch which may start out in the wrong place and the cutting out of dead, injured, and crossed limbs, say the station specialists.

If the trees are producing undersized fruits, if the tops contain many dead branches, or if the seasonal growth is short and scant, judicious pruning is recommended as a means of rejuvenation. "This usually consists in cutting back many branches and in entirely removing others," say the station authorities, who lay down the following general rules applicable under such conditions. "Prune weak-growing varieties heavily; strong-growing kinds lightly. Varieties which branch freely need little pruning; those with many unbranched limbs, much pruning. Prune trees in rich, deep soils lightly; in poor, shallow soils, heavily."

The cutting back of all the branches of a tree is practiced regularly only with peaches and some plums, it is said. "This is attributed to the fact that, with these fruits, the wood of the past season, and therefore the crop, is borne progressively further away from the trunk, so that it is necessary to head-in these fruits by cutting back the branches in order to keep the bearing wood near the trunk. On the other hand, apples, pears, cherries and most plums are borne on spurs from wood two or more years old and with these heading-in is not so desirable. Experimental evidence obtained in tests on the station grounds indicates that winter pruning has no special advantage over summer pruning, except that the pressure of other work is less during the winter months."

Geraniol, New Attractor for Japanese Beetle

The new attractive agent, geraniol, developed by the bureau of entomology of the United States Department of Agriculture as an aid in its control work against the Japanese beetle, has been found very successful. Methods have been worked out whereby this material may be used to concentrate the beetles in a relatively small area. It was found that by spraying less than an acre of orchard with geraniol, beetles could be drawn on the leeward side of the orchard for a distance of nearly one-half mile within the first 15 minutes after the spray had been applied. This makes it possible to destroy large numbers of beetles with a comparatively small quantity of a contact spray. Further work has been done on traps baited with geraniol, but although these capture large numbers of beetles, it is not felt that a trap has been developed which can be recommended for general use.

Increased efforts were made last summer to develop a repellent which could be used on fruit trees without leaving a deposit on the foliage or fruit. It was found that certain odors, particularly the odor of tar, are distinctly repellent to the Japanese beetle, and these will be studied further.

New Fruit Varieties Are Described in a Bulletin

Thirty-two new improved fruits produced by horticulturists of the University of Minnesota at the state fruit breeding farm are described and most of them pictured in Bulletin 230 prepared by W. H. Alderman, chief of the division of horticulture, and issued by the Minnesota experiment station. These varieties, which have been given names and introduced among fruit growers, include 14 kinds of plums, three plum-cherry hybrids, four apples, seven strawberries, one red raspberry, one gooseberry, and two ornamentals.

"Many of these varieties are rapidly becoming accepted as standards in this and adjoining states, and the plums are being planted on a commercial scale," says the bulletin. "The wealth accruing to the state each year from the products of these 32 varieties far exceeds the total cost of all the state-supported fruit breeding experiments since the establishment of the first fruit breeding farm in 1878."

This bulletin is for free distribution and copies can be obtained by writing the Office of Publications at University Farm, St. Paul.

Keep an Account

Every progressive farmer should keep an account of his farm business if he is to know at the end of the year whether he has made a profit or loss, after paying all farm expenses; also to help him study his business and make such changes in his organization and operation as are important from the standpoint of increasing his profits. Farmers interested in keeping such a record this coming year, can get both information and help from his agricultural college.

TAFFETA HATS IN HIGH COLORS; SMART SPRING TRAVEL COATS

NEVER a fabric more beloved by those who worship the beautiful, than taffeta. When it falls under the magic of the milliner's touch, then indeed does it convey a message of enchantment.

The "just-arrived-from-Paris" taffeta hats not only radiate springtime colorings, but they are works of art in point of needlecraft and design. There's witchery in their color blends and contrasts, as they so eloquently interpret that favorite theme of the mode—"compose."

Every hat in this group is superbly colorful, showing an interworking of taffeta together with lavish embellishment which marks a new era in point of a more elaborate styling than we have known for seasons past.

Group of Taffeta Hats.

A bit of fine straw for the brim of the first hat helps emphasize the thought that spring is here. A galaxy of flower colorings is represented in the handmade motifs which bank the front of the lilac-hued taffeta crown.

Like children dancing around a May-pole, circlets of fine straw in most every tint of the rainbow frolic about the soft silken crown of the novel toque in the upper right corner. The taffeta for this hat gives the effect of mother-of-pearl in its shimmering nacre coloring.

The hat in the center is of sistine blue taffeta, plaited exceedingly fine. The flat flower ornament at the side is made of straw, as is the band; also the wee ripple brim.

Worked over the taffeta like a gorgeous carpet of flowers or a rich brocade is diminutive straw in exotic colors, for the hat to the lower left.

An intricate manipulation of taffeta silk cording achieves huge flower appliques as trimming for the arresting model shown last in the group.

For many of the lovely chapeaux of this season taffeta in multicolors is seamed together in designs as complicated as if mosaic. Some hats are made entirely of milliners' folds, which reveal a pretty confusion of pastel shades.

Quilting and machine stitching are also very popular for the taffeta hat. Black stitching in white is very smart. Applique of taffeta or velvet on taffeta is also favored.

As the season progresses novelty sports and spring travel coats take on more novelty. This applies to design, color and texture. It is basket weaves which are getting the applause at the present moment. These handsome course loose-woven worsteds are "taking the town by storm." Both solid colors and plaids are of swagger style. Especially are plaids outstanding when they interpret the black-and-white vogue, after the manner of the ultra-chic model in the picture.

In tweeds, soft textures are again important. The liking is for small-patterned effects, particularly tapestry motifs in allover design. Colors have much to do with their fascination. There are cocoa tones slightly tinged with a pinkish cast which cast a color glamor, emphasized with fur collar which carry the same spirit of harmonious blending. Grayish greens and blues appear in these tweeds with gray fur details.

Style interest for sports coats centers around pockets and belts. Artful adjustments often combine the workings of the belt with the pocket in that the narrow belt slips under tabs of the pocket, or otherwise is buttoned somewhere in connection with it.

Pockets appear in many versions, some huge patch pockets, round or square, others the new conical shaped ones with insets of contrasting material.

All-around narrow belts are fashionable as are also those which come from the sides.

The straight-line silhouette remains a favorite for the sports coat, depending on unusual pockets and belts for individuality. Raglan sleeves are very successful this season for the novelty utility coat. Quite a few of the bright plaid coats are reversible. Some extremely attractive blanket coats which are made out of fringed squares or shawls have found their way among motor coats and the like.

There is a class of coats of undoubted appeal, and having the sports feeling, which are made of kasha and other lightweight woolens such as repps and twills. These depend upon unique and intricate seamings, tucks arranged usually in tiers and of graduated sizes, yokes and other fetching details, together with flat fur decorative trimmings, such as calf, pony and leopard.

BRITON IN REGION TROD BY ALEXANDER

Seeks to Trace Route of Great Conqueror.

In an endeavor to trace the route followed by Alexander the Great when he invaded India, the English explorer, Sir Aurel Stein, has succeeded in penetrating a region untrodden by Europeans since Alexander's army swept into it more than 2,200 years ago.

Sir Aurel Stein's achievement, which was beset with perils, crowned efforts extending over more than 20 years. He has just divulged the first part of the record of his hazardous trip, which was undertaken on behalf of the Indian archeological survey and with the sanction of the government of India, says the New York Times.

It took him to a hitherto unvisited tract of territory beyond the present northwestern frontier of India through which, according to him, Alexander must have marched in 327 and 326 B. C. when on his way from Kabul river to invade the Punjab.

The first part of Sir Aurel's description is taken up largely with his earlier efforts to penetrate this forbidden land. Though he had tried for a long time previously it was not until 1904 that he succeeded in penetrating part of it and in being the first European to ascend Mount Mahaban Peak, which he hoped—in vain—to identfy with a mountain mentioned in the ancient chronicle of Alexander's Indian campaign.

He continued his investigations in 1906, visiting territory which he felt assured was traversed by the Macedonian army. Further research, however, was prevented at that time by the fact that the bulk of the region was still inaccessible to Europeans. Sir Aurel kept up his efforts, nevertheless, until in 1921 he again visited the dangerous unknown frontier territories, but he failed to reach the area, along the Indus which he believed Alexander had traversed, because the Pathan tribes there were engaged in deadly feuds, making the journey altogether too perilous for a European.

Finally the frontier region which he wished to visit came under the sway of a strong ruler, a grandson, by the way, of that Akhoond of Swat made famous years ago in a poem by the American poet Lanigan. Aided by this potentate and the British Indian authorities, Sir Aurel Stein was enabled to explore what he terms the "fascinating region" which before had been closed to research.

Musical Forms

Fugue—A composition where the melody is heard in one part and repeated in another according to certain rules. Prelude—A short introductory composition. Choral Music—Music that is sung by voices, or distinguished from orchestra music, which is played by instruments.

Had Answer Ready

Little Paul Smith of Beech Grove is three years old. A few days ago his mother, busily engaged in the kitchen, heard him pounding on something in the living room.

"Paul, what on earth are you doing?" she asked, sharply.

"I'm fixin' nails on the library table."

"Well, stop it at once or I'll fix nails on you."

"Why mamma, I got nails on me—finger nails."—Indianapolis News.

Relics of Bronze Age

While widening a road near London, England, workmen disclosed a circular area, obviously artificial, covered by a setting of rough stones. After measurements had been taken it became clear that the remains were the foundation of a round cairn of the Bronze age, probably some 4,000 years old, and long ante-dating the Roman fort situated a few hundred yards to the southeast.

Believed Site of Mizpah

Broken statuettes of the Babylonian goddess Astarte against whose worship the prophet Jeremiah warned the Israelites, have been found by excavators at Tell-en-Nasbeth, a mound situated on a hill seven miles north of Jerusalem. The excavators are convinced they have discovered the site of the Mizpah of Benjamin, one of the greatest and most heavily fortified citadels of pre-Exile days.

Crow Lost Its Prey

Startled by a peculiar noise, Mrs. James Hennessey of Hillsboro, N. H., looked out of the window just in time to see a crow flying low with a partridge clutched tightly in its talons. Mr. Hennessey gave chase, and the bird, hampered with the weight of the partridge, dropped it and escaped. The partridge soon died, however.

Uncle Sam Runs Still

In a certain building in Washington, belonging to the Treasury department, the government is running a corn whisky still. Nothing, however, comes out of it now except pure, harmless water. Confiscated in a raid and turned over to the Treasury department garage, the apparatus is used to distill water for government storage batteries.—Popular Science Monthly.

Did You Know This About Your Favorite Syrup

IN their own journals, American doctors are now praising the great health value of Karo Syrup as a food for children.

Your doctor can tell you how the principal element in Karo—Dextrose—is essential for supplying the fuel and energy of your body—how it is assimilated almost directly into the blood and tissue cells.

Children not only enjoy the delicious flavor of Karo spread on bread—they thrive on it. Give them all they want—Karo is a sensible, wholesome "sweet"—full of genuine nourishment.

DR. W. B. CALDWELL AT THE AGE OF 83

Mother! It's Cruel to "Physic" Your Child

To Dr. W. B. Caldwell, of Monticello, Ill., a practicing physician for 47 years, it seemed cruel that so many constipated infants and children had to be kept constantly "stirred up" and half sick by taking cathartic pills, tablets, salts, calomel and nasty oils.

While he knew that constipation was the cause of nearly all children's little ills, he did not believe that a sickening "purge" or "physic" was necessary.

In Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin he discovered a laxative which helps to establish natural bowel "regularity" even if the child is chronically constipated. Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin not only causes gentle, easy bowel movement but, best of all, it never gripes, sickens or upsets the most delicate system. Besides, it is absolutely harmless, and so pleasant that even a cross, feverish, bilious, sick child gladly takes it.

TALES OF DISASTER FOUND IN BOTTLES

Messages Reveal Grim Tragedies of the Ocean.

Scrawled on canvas, on shavings, on sea-stained leaves torn from logbooks; written in charcoal and sometimes in blood—such are the messages which drift ashore in bottles from the sea, from those in danger on the oceans of the world.

For hundreds of years, before wireless made contact with the land easy, seamen have thrown their bottle messages trustfully into the sea. Columbus wrote to his queen in that way. And today a sealed bottle still contains sometimes the last message of a despairing crew. Many a tragic message has been cast into the sea from many a stricken vessel. Messages such as these:

"Captain, all crew but me, John Williams, died yellow fever.

"Whoever picks this up will know barque Caller Ou run down by steamer."

The list of these bottles containing genuine news of disaster is pitifully long There was that sad last message from the crew of the American tank steamer City of Everett, which sank with all hands in the Gulf of Mexico during October, 1923. It was washed up in a bottle at Miami, Fla., 99 days later, and read: "S. S. Everett. This is the last of us. To dear friends who find this, good-by forever and ever."

Father Neptune sometimes takes much longer to deliver his mails. Years ago a black cook on board the British ship Buckingham murdered the master The vessel was off the coast of Bermuda at the time. She carried no wireless, and the mate, fearing further violence, entrusted his report of the crime to a bottle. It was found 5,000 miles away, on one of the Shetland islands. Nearly three years had passed.

A bottle message told the world of the loss with all hands of the Atlantic liner President. She should have reached Liverpool in March, 1841, but became long overdue. At last a ship at sea picked up a bottle containing a message from the famous comedian, Tyrone Power It said that the vessel was sinking in a gale as he wrote.

In 1909 the Allan liner Huronian left Glasgow and disappeared Five years later a bottle was washed up by the tide on the north coast of Ireland. Its message read: "Huronian sinking fast Topheavy One side under water Good-by mother and sister Charles McFall."

Cattle possessions were produced as evidence during an inquiry into the loss of the Grimsby trawler Argus. One which reached Norway read: "Steamship Argus. All hands mutiny Collision with foreign barque."

After the mysterious loss of the Australian liner Waratah between Durban and Cape Town many bottle messages were found, but these were all believed to be cruel fakes.

Sealed bottles are often set adrift for scientific purposes. Many shipmasters are co-operating with British and American government departments at the present time by throwing bottles overboard. In this way the direction of ocean currents may be traced, for finders of these bottles are rewarded if they fill in the card inclosed in each one, giving particulars of the date and place where it was found

Such a bottle, cast into the sea near Cape Town, was picked up on a Shetland island beach, nearly four and a half years later. Captain Simpson, F R S, who threw thousands of bottles into the sea during a period of years, reported that 10 per cent were found Many of the bottles had drifted 10,000 miles before reaching land, the average rate of travel working out at half a mile an hour.

Italian "Fascisti"

"Fascisti" is the name given to the members of a voluntarily organized movement formed in Italy in 1920 to offset the work of the Reds. They have no definite program, and are of widely different political views, merely being bound together by a strong national spirit The name "Fascisti" was taken from the Latin "Faces." The Roman emblem of an ax in a bundle of rods was adopted as their official sign Their object was to counteract the designs of the extreme Communists and Socialists.

Precedence in Parade

Organizations in a parade proceed by order of the dates of their establishment and organization, the oldest being to the front, as: First, the Grand army; second, Loyal legion; third, Spanish War Veterans; Fourth, Veterans of Foreign Wars; fifth, Military Order of Foreign Wars; sixth, American Legion; seventh, Military Order of the World War, and eighth, Disabled American Veterans. The men in the regular services of the United States army, navy and marine corps parade first.

Chinese Students Organized

By "the student movement" in China it is meant that the students are organized into unions which are federated into a national organization. Branches are to be found in most of the middle schools and colleges and committees of correspondence keep in touch one with the other. When a disturbance develops in one place the committee informs the others. One result has been to focus public attention on political conditions in China.

NINTY PER CENT COMES BACK

Ninety per cent of the gross income of the modern public utility in this county goes back into the communiiies served in the form of wages, taxes, supplies and maintenance.

It is obvious that these companies put money into the pockets of the people. A good share of the remaining 10 per cent goes back to the public utility customers and other investors in the form of interest and dividends and what remains goes into more property used in the public service.

More than seven billions of dollars have been invested in the establishment and development in the United States of the Electric Light and Power industry alone and this year a sum of money equal to nearly $25.00 for each family will be spent for improvements and extensions.

This remarkable development has happened because the public insists on this essential utility servce. Every customer and other resdent in the communities served has a direct interest in this necessary public servce because its well-being effect advantageously the property of all.

SUNDAY SCHOOLS WILL HOLD CONVENTION AT BRITT

Hancock County Schools Will Meet Thursday, March 30th

(Special To The Times)

The Sunday Schools of the county are to meet in an annual convention at Britt, March 30th at the M. E. Church. A big program has been arranged for and Mr. Herbrech and Mr Hutton will both be here. Local speakers will give addresses and in the evening Rev. Clyde Baker, of Clear Lake will give an address. Two Glee Clubs will render special music. A 25 cent supper will be served in the church basement from 5 00 to 7:00 o'clock p. m. to accomodate those coming from a distance.

Let us put this convention over big and let each School bring a good delegation.

—Mrs. R. S. Baker, Sec.

Wayne Lemke had a couple of days vacation from his studies at the Iowa University so came home Friday afternoon with some young men from Britt and Clear Lake, for a couple of days visit at home with his parents. The boys all drove back to Iowa City Sunday. They reported the roads were in fair condition coming home.

IT PAYS TO BUY YOUR OWN KLEMME TIMES

A man who was too economical to take his home paper sent his little boy to borrow the copy taken by his neighbor. In haste the boy ran over a $4 stand of bees, and in ten minutes looked like a warty summer squash. His cries reached his father, who ran to his asistance, and, failing to notice a barbed-wire fence, ran into it, breaking it down, cutting a handful of flesh from his anatomy, and ruining a $5 pair of pants The cow took advantage of the gap in the fence and got into the cornfield, and killed herself eating green corn. Hearing the racket, the wife ran, upset a four gallon can of rich cream into a bucket of kittens drowning them, in the hurry she lost a $17 set of teeth The baby, left alone, crawled thru the cream into the parlor, ruining a brand new $75 rug. During the excitement the oldest daughter ran away with the hired man in the family Ford; the dog broke up eleven setting hens, and the calves got out and chewed the tails off of four fine shirts.

ATTENDED FUNERAL OF MAN KILLED AT FENTON

Is Cousin Of A. G. Koerner Of This Place

Mr. and Mrs. A. G. Koerner and daughters Valeria and Nova drove to Fenton Sunday to attend the funeral of Mr. Will Kohlstadt, cousin of Mr. Koerner and related to other Klemme people, and who is well known in Klemme.

Mr. Kohlstadt mot death accidently last Tuesday in a manner which had not been determined with any certainty Mr Kohlstadt came to the house at about noon Tuesday and being informed that dinner was not quite ready to serve said he would go back to the yard and unload some corn. He had a team hitched to the wagon Later when he failed to respond to the call for dinner an investigation found him lying on the ground dead. It is thought that he lipped and fell under the wagon while unloading and that the team started ahead and the heavy load ran over him as the team was found a short distance from the dead body of Mr. Kohlstadt.

Accidental deaths seem to run in the Kohlstadt family as two of the deceased brothers met with accidental death. Mr. Kohlstadt was a man 58 years of age and was a successful farmer residing with his family on one of the finest farms near Fenton.

Gimer President New Board

At the organization meeting of the school board Monday evening Mr. A D. Gimer was named to head the organization as its president for the coming year. Paul Grange was retained to act as secretary for the board.

Mr. Gimer has been serving as president of the board for the past year or more and makes a good executive. He is greatly interested in school matters and gives much of his time, as do the other members as well, to school welfare. We feel the members of the board made a good choice in naming Mr. Gimer as president.

The other members of the board are J. N. Day, Conrad Quandt H. R. Gibbs and Ralph Ludeke. The latter is the new member of the board.

Four Of Thirteen Last Year Seniors Enrolled In Colleges

From our State University comes an interesting bit of information. Of 17,782 members of senior classes of 1926 in the State of Iowa, 6,003 are reported as enrolled this year in college; this is practically one out of three. At this rate Iowa should maintain her high standing intellectually and go forward. This only illustrates the importance that is being attached to education. Our community is only slightly behind the average for our state. Of last year seniors, 4 out of the 13 are enrolled in college. In addition Milo Patet is doing some work along similar lines, as he is enrolled for part time in an art school of Chicago.

To encourage the young people who have not been able to complete the regular high school course and enroll in college or university, our State College at Ames has provided the following short courses:

Two year Electrical Course.
Two year Mechanical Course.
Two year Structural Course.
Two year Roadmaking Course.
One-year Auto Mechanic Course
3-months Auto Mechanic Course.
3-month Drafting Course.

These courses are open to young men in Iowa seventeen years of age or more who have completed the 8th grade but have not been able to complete high school. There may be some in our community who thru no fault of their own, have not been able to go through our local high school but who could make good in such courses. If there are such we invite them to consult the local superintendent or write to Ames for further information. We should appreciate our opportunities today and make the most of them. Competition for the more lucrative positions and jobs will be more keen in the future even than it is today and young people owe it to themselves to prepare well to meet this competition.

METHODIST CHURCH NOTES

A. W. Gauger, Pastor

Sunday, March 20, will go into history as a red letter day for Methodism and especially for the W. F. M. Societies here and in Liberty. While the day was far from pleasant, it being a case where March coming in like a lamb was going out like a lion, yet a fine audience greeted the speaker in both places. Mrs. Oner S. Dow having passed her three score and ten margin by several years spoke with youthful vigor and thrilled her audiences with the burning message of her soul. The Thank Offering of the W. F. M. S. this year when all the fragments have been gathered in, will surpass those of former years, since our pastorate here by a strong degree.

A special message awaits you on the coming Sunday. Our messages from now until Easter will be carried by the Pre-Easter thought.

Because of the Britt meeting there will be no prayer meeting this week.

4-H CLUB ORGANIZED IN LIBERTY

LIBERTY TOWNSHIP GIRLS ORGANIZED 4-H CLUB SATURDAY

Mrs. R. V. Upmeyer Chosen Leader By Eleven Girls

The girls of Liberty township met Saturday afternoon at the home of Mrs. R. V. Upmeyer and organized a 4-H Club, with Mrs. Upmeyer as their leader. Eleven girls were present at this meeting and more are expected to join the new club.

The afternoon was spent by electing officers and choosing a name for the club, "Liberty's Lively Lassies." Various reports were given and the girls also enjoyed some singing.

All reported an enjoyable time. The next meeting will be held April 2nd, at the home of Misses Ruby, Marie and Lola Goll.

BIG FEATURE AT IDLE HOUR SATURDAY NIGHT

The Cohens and Kellys Here Next Week Wednesday

Manager M. O. Barr has an especially big week ahead at the Idle Hour theatre.

He has booked a big special program for this Saturday night. He has secured "Mysterious Miller" in a mind reading, sleight of hand and generally mystifying performance that shoud keep the audience in suspense. On the Saturday night program will also be a big feature program of pictures including "Straight From Paris," along with a comedy picture.

For Wednesday night, March 30. "The Cohens and Kellys" will be the big attraction. This is perhaps the funniest picture ever filmed and each reel is good for 1,000 laughs If you miss either of these programs you will miss the best programs of the season.

A Popular Work Schedule

"The year has 365 days. If you sleep 8 hours a day, you sleep 122 days. That leaves you 243 days

"If you rest 8 hours a day, that equals another 122 days, and leaves you out of your year 121 days.

"If you deduct 52 Sundays you have 69 das left.

"Thon come 52 Saturday half holidays, equalling 26 days, leaving only 43 days. An hour and a half for lunch every day totals 23 days, leaving you with 20 days.

"Two weeks of vacation will leave you 6 days. You will need these for New Year's Day, Decoration day, Fourth of July, Labor Day, Thanksgiving and Christmas"—Ex.

STOCK SHIPMENTS FALL SHORT OF AVERAGE PAST WEEK

Only Six Cars Shipped Out During The Past Week

Stock shipments here took a bit of a tumble the past week when only six car loads were shipped out, approximately half the number of the average weekly shipments during the entire winter.

Last Thursday night C. A. Larsen shipped out two car loads of hogs.

Saturday night the Klemme Shipping Association had all shipments with four car loads, two of which were cattle and two were hog

However, C. A. Larson has cars ordered for hogs to be shipped out tonight, which will bring the weekly shipments up to eight car loads in number.

Large Shipment For Saturday

Agent M. O. Barr predicts a big shipment for Saturday night of this week as ten cars have already been ordered for local shippers.

Stock shipments have been heavy all winter and the slight slump of the past week is no indication that the end to large shipments is yet in sight. Shipments are expected to continue large for some time.

School Going Fine This Year

As the time rolls around for our school board to again hire teachers for another year it prmpts us to remind the board that we have heard but very little complaint this year as to the way the school has been conducted. The teachers seem all to have given good satisfaction

Our school have certainly run very smooth this year, largely due to the excellent teachers we have been able to secure.

Often times the question of salary comes up. The Times beleives it is a paying proposition to give teachers a raise in salary to those who have shown good ability as teachers, in order to retain them for another year. By thus holding the teachers it does away with the uncertainty of getting teachers who do not come up to the standard set by our local school. In the long run, retaining our good teachers at a slight increase in salary is a saving to the tax payers who then know they are getting their money's worth.

Our school board is elected to run the business of the school for the tax payers of Klemme and we believe we have a good level-headed board who will carry this business out to the best of their ability and to the interest of the taxpayers.

THE WORLD'S GREAT EVENTS

Napoleon Bonaparte

(Part I)

A LEAN, shy, undersized youth of twenty-five hung about Paris in 1794, looking for employment. He was a fairly good writer and had at one time planned a literary career; but in this field he had failed and had, therefore, returned to military life. He had served with distinction in the army of the new French republic, but the convention could find no further use for his services. He was miserably poor, chafing at inaction and without prospects. Within ten years he was destined to be emperor of France and the most powerful and famous man on earth.

The lonely, unemployed youth was Napoleon Bonaparte, one of the thirteen children of an Italian lawyer living in Corsica. At the age of ten young Bonaparte had been sent to a military school, where his poverty, shyness and ignorance of French (a language he never learned to speak without accent) made him unpopular and laughed at by his schoolmates. Many of these same schoolmates were one day to be the fawning, cringing servants of the lad they now despised. When he was sixteen Bonaparte was commissioned a lieutenant of artillery and at twenty-one was a captain. The army was divided between allegiance to King Louis XVI and the new revolutionary party. Bonaparte sided with the latter. When he noted the cowardice with which Louis yielded to the mob, he muttered:

"It is all up with him! A few charges of grape would scatter that pack of curs." He stored the lesson in his memory and later put it to use.

In September, 1793, as lieutenant-colonel of artillery, it was his strategic skill that won Toulon from England. For this he was promoted to the rank of brigadier-general—and allowed to wander idly and hungrily about Paris looking for work! He is even said, at this time, to have planned to offer his services to the sultan of Turkey. But at the ebb of his fortune a sudden turn came. In October, 1795, the people of Paris rose against the convention. Thirty thousand strong they marched on the Tuileries. Barras, president of the convention, appointed Bonaparte to command the 5,000 troops at that body's disposal. Bonaparte turned his artillery into the advancing mob of guardsmen, townsfolk and riffraff and sent them flying. In reward he was placed in command of the Army of the Interior. His career had begun.

He married, March 9, 1796, Josephine Beauharnais, a rather elderly Creole widow from Martinique. She did not love Bonaparte, but married him because Barras told her the youth had a future. She was notoriously unfaithful to this new husband of hers, and repaid his ardent devotion with mere tolerance. Almost directly after the marriage the young bridegroom was sent to take charge of France's Italian army, which had been dragging on an indecisive warfare against Austria and Sardinia. He had a ragged, unpaid host of 40,000. The allied Austrians and Sardinians were far stronger; yet inside of five days Bonaparte had whipped them together and separately, and within a month had won all northern Italy for France. He ended the campaign by forcing Austria to cede territory and indemnity.

Breaking every old tradition and established rule of warfare exercising wondrous ingenuity, swiftness and audacity, the Corsican had completely dazed and outwitted his slower-brained foes. And these same unexpected and genius-bred tactics were to serve him against many another foe. He returned in triumph to Paris, when he was sent, early in 1798, with 36,000 men to invade Egypt. This expedition, so far as concerned the Mamelukes and Turkish armies he encountered, was a brilliant success for French arms. But Bonaparte's fleet was destoyed by the English, and the garrison of Acre, made up partly of Englishmen, successfully resisted his attack.

From first to last, England was Bonaparte's stumbling block. In his time he thrashed and bullied and browbeat every other nation, as the school bully might the littlest boy. But whenever he clashed with England he soon or late met discomfiture. While Bonaparte was in Cairo on his return from Syria news came of French defeats in Italy and of a political crisis in Paris. Also—and to him, at that time, perhaps, most important of all—came private advices of Josephine's open flirtation with other men. The triple tidings sufficed to send Bonaparte hurrying back home, leaving his army to shift for itself.

He reached Paris at the crucial moment of the governmental crisis, and, by taking advantage of every turn of fortune as foreseen by his rare diplomacy, he succeeded in winning the position of first consul.

Then it was that the man's true character showed forth. His was a double ambition—first to make France strong at home and terrible abroad, and, second—and above all—to win for himself the highest obtainable power and glory. He set to work restoring order and prosperity to his unsettled country, conciliating rival factions and framing a new and inspired code of laws. Then he put into action his plan to conquer the world.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

$700,000,000 Surplus for Fiscal Year in Sight, According to Mellon.

SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY Mellon has officially admitted that the largest reduction in the public debt on record may be accomplished in the present fiscal year ending June 30 next.

A surplus considerably in excess of $500,000,000, representing the difference between ordinary receipts and ordinary expenditures, is assured. Heretofore, while members of congress and others have insisted that the half-billion mark would be reached, Mr. Mellon has been unwilling to boost his estimate beyond the $383,000,000 total announced by the budget bureau last December.

That the surplus will actually exceed $600,000,000, and may go as high as $700,000,000, is now asserted by some of the experts whose estimates have usually been considerably above those of the treasury and whose predictions have been made good in previous years.

A surplus of $500,000,000 will mean an actual debt reduction for the fiscal year 1927 in excess of $1,000,000,000. Debt retirement through the statutory sinking fund will amount to nearly $340,000,000 and retirements from payments from foreign nations will represent more than $230,000,000. Debt retirements otherwise than by means of the surplus will amount to about $570,000,000. Adding a $500,000,000 surplus to this amount will mean a total reduction in the public debt of $1,070,000,000.

The debt reduction has exceeded $1,000,000,000 in only three of the last seven years, the highest total being in 1920, when the debt was cut down by $1,185,000,000. In 1922 the debt reduction amounted to $1,014,000,000, and in 1924 to $1,098,000,000. The debt was reduced in the fiscal year 1925 by $735,000,000 and in 1926 by $873,000,000. The total debt on December 31, 1926, was $18,975,349,765.

If the surplus runs as high as $615,000,000, and many financial experts believe it may, the record debt reduction of the year 1920 will be equaled. A surplus above this amount will mean the breaking of all records in annual debt retirement.

While the treasury still lacks accurate totals on income-tax receipts, it was indicated that at least $580,000,000 has been collected. This amount would represent an increase of $85,000,000 over March income tax payments in 1926. Complete reports from the internal revenue collectors may bring the total up above $600,000,000.

ON MARCH 16 Harry F. Sinclair, millionaire oil magnate, was found guilty of contempt of the United States senate by a jury in the District of Columbia Supreme court. The case grew out of the senate investigation of the Tea Pot dome oil scandal three years ago, when Sinclair refused to answer interrogations of the senate committee. Found guilty on all four counts of the indictments against him, Sinclair faces a jail sentence of from one month to a year in the District jail and a fine of from $100 to $1,000. The sentence has not been imposed, pending the disposition of the motion for a new trial made by Sinclair's counsel, and its execution will be further delayed by the appeal which will be taken to the District Court of Appeals, and ultimately to the United States Supreme court, according to defense attorneys, if the new trial is denied.

Sinclair, whose contempt trial is the first of the criminal proceedings growing out of the oil investigation to be decided, was indicted under Section 102 of the Revised Statutes, the same section which will be invoked against Samuel Insull, the Chicago utility magnate; his attorney, Daniel Schuyler of Chicago, and other witnesses who refused to testify before the Reed slush-fund committee, if they are ever brought to book.

Sinclair, refusing to answer the committee's questions on the advice of his counsel, denied the pertinency of the queries, asserted that answer might jeopardize the outcome of litigation in which his company—the Mammoth Oil company—was engaged with the government and denied the authority of the committee to question him on matters which had become the subject of litigation.

Justice Hitz in his charge warned the jury that the pertinency of the questions had already been decided by the court as a matter of law and that neither the fact that Sinclair, in refusing to testify, acted on the advice of counsel or may have believed he had a legal right to refuse if he wished, could be considered as a defense for the oil man.

THE first meeting of the new federal radio commission was held at Washington on March 15. One of the first acts of the new commission was to announce dates, March 29 to April 1, for public hearings, the purpose of which will be to obtain methods of reducing radio interference. A tentative schedule of topics for discussion includes proposals for widening the broadcasting bands of wave lengths, a limitation of power, and reduction in frequency separation, simultaneous broadcasting with the same frequency, a division of time broadcasting stations, a consolidation of broadcasting service and a limitation of the number of stations. The hearings will not be open for individual claims or complaints.

BECAUSE he published an article in the Christian Enquirer declaring that the God of the Bible "preferred the savory smell of roast cutlets to the odors of boiled cabbage," Ernest V. Sterry at Toronto, Canada, was found guilty by a Canadian jury of blasphemous libel under an ancient British statute making it a crime to criticize the Christian God. Sterry's defense was that he was merely trying to liberalize public opinion and that he thought his article would clear the controversy over the personality of the Deity.

A UNITED STATES Supreme court decision of considerable importance to many communities, especially in the southern states, was handed down on March 14. The court held as unconstitutional the Louisiana state and New Orleans municipal segregation codes under which negroes are barred from residence in predominantly white communities where a majority of the white residents have not given their consent in writing.

PREMIER MUSSOLINI has undertaken to organize a vast insurance organization to guarantee long-time credits extended by Italian manufacturers to foreign purchasers of Italian-made merchandise.

It is estimated that before the plans can be fully carried out the new credit insurance institute must have a fully paid up capital of $10,000,000,000 lire —nearly $450,000,000. The field of operation is so large it is thought this money will be easily found. Fascist circles insist that all the money invested in this organization should be Italian, thus freeing it from any foreign influence whatever.

In conjunction with the credit insurance the government plans to station able business men abroad to keep in closest touch with market conditions throughout the world and to assist in placing large accounts for Italian firms. These "observation posts" would maintain constant touch with the homeland through the consular service and other agencies.

Italian industry is in a serious condition. Many factories are closed or running on short time or with limited crews. It is estimated that 250,000 people are out of work, or five times as many as could not find employment a few months ago. It is to remedy this condition and to insure an increase in Italian markets that the Mussolini government is making strenuous efforts to find foreign markets.

THE completion of the Moffat road tunnel through the Rocky mountains near Denver may bring about a new grouping of railroads and produce one of the most gigantic railroad combinations in this country. The tunnel is now nearing completion. When it is ready for use it will mean the shortening of the distance between Denver and Salt Lake City by approximately 300 miles, and will also eliminate much of the heavy grades. The tunnel, while built by the state of Colorado, is under lease by the Moffat line, a road that of itself is of no importance except that it controls this new way to the West. A fairly well-founded story current in Denver is to the effect that lines are being laid for the linking up by control of traffic arrangements of the Burlington, the Denver & Rio Grande Western and the Western Pacific with the Moffat road. If such a combination of interests should be effected, it would constitute a part of the Burlington, Great Northern and Northern Pacific combination. If in addition to this federation of northern and central transcontinental routes, there is anything in the reports of Burlington inspiration behind the gradual linking up of short lines from the Ohio river to New Orleans and the Gulf, there would be in prospect a rail system of a magnitude never imagined before in America.

UNITED STATES SENATOR William H. King of Utah, on a visit to Porto Rico and other Carribean islands, proposed to visit the republic of Haiti, but the Haitian government refused him permission to land. The Haitian government held it was free to bar Mr. King, as he was making the visit as a private citizen, not as a senator. Senator King has been outspoken in his criticism of the present regime in Haiti headed by President Luis Borno. The Haitian administration is under the guidance of the American government, represented by a force of marines. The State department made an effort, through Brig. Gen. John H. Russell, American high commissioner in Haiti, to exert its influence in an effort to have the order changed, but without success, the President of the republic claiming that the presence of Senator King would be a menace to the peace and prosperity of the people because of the feeling of the public in relation to his efforts to recall the American troops from Haiti. Senator King visited Santo Domingo, but did not make any effort to land at Puerto Prince. The senator said he abandoned his plans to visit Haiti, as he feared his visit there might cause a clash between the American military forces and the people.

THE libel suit of Aaron Sapiro against Henry Ford for $1,000,000 because of the charges it is claimed were made in the Dearborn Independent, owned by Mr. Ford, that Sapiro was the head of a Jewish combination organized for the purpose of defrauding the American farmers, opened at Detroit on March 14, and it is expected to continue for approximately 60 days. Attorneys for Sapiro stated in their opening arguments that testimony covering 141 points would be introduced.

PRESIDENT COOLIDGE has indicated that the United States government will not consider the establishment of a protectorate over the government of Nicaragua as requested by President Diaz. The President is desirous of encouraging peaceful conditions in Central America, but feels that to take on a permanent obligation to maintain order in Nicaragua would be too much.

The proposed alliance is described as somewhat similar to that entered into between the United States and Haiti in 1915. It would allow this government to intervene in case of revolution to maintain order, and give the United States limited supervision over Nicaraguan conditions. Another condition of the Diaz proposal is that a big loan should be made to Nicaragua.

THE Mexican government is trying to induce the American government to await the decision of the Mexican Supreme court on the question of the constitutionality of the Mexican land laws before lifting the arms embargo. American oil men have asked for injunctions against the enforcement of the law that would deprive them of the petroleum interests, and a decision in this case is expected within a short tme. It is intimated that President Calles may find this decision an easy way out of the difficulty, as the courts may decide that the laws creating the difficulties are unconstitutional.

REVIEW—STUDIES IN THE CHRISTIAN LIFE

GOLDEN TEXT—If ye love Me keep My commandments.—John 14:15.

PRIMARY TOPIC — What Jesus Wants Us to Do.

JUNIOR TOPIC—The Christian Way of Living

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—What It Means to Be a Christian.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Marks of a True Christian.

The following methods of review are suggested:

I. A Descriptive Essay Method.

Each member of the class should be assigned to the task a week ahead of the preparation of an essay on the topics involved in the quarterly lessons, as for example: What constitutes a true Christian. Following Christ. The prayer life of a Christian. The Christian and his Bible. The home life of a Christian. Christian stewardship. The Christian and the missionary obligation.

II. The Question Review Method.

The teacher will prepare a list of questions dealing with the various phases of the quarter's lessons. These will be written on slips of paper and the members of the class will draw them. As examples of questions note the following: What does following Christ involve? What is the Christian's responsibility as to his Bible? What is the Christian's obligation as to stewardship? What are the duties of the members of the home? What is the Christian's obligation as to the evangelization of the world? What is the Christian's hope? Is Christ coming again? Will there be a resurrection of the body?

III. The Summary Method.

This method can always be used to good advantage with the advanced classes. The outstanding fact or facts should be grasped and the principal teaching of the quarter's lessons stated. Suggestions:

Lesson for January 2.

Jesus first calls men to be His disciples. He then calls them to have fellowship in His service. Those who receive this two-fold call will walk as He walked.

Lesson for January 9.

The one who really follows Christ shall be hated and opposed. Having fellowship with Christ, he will love his enemies, do good to those who hate him, bless them that curse him, pray for those which despitefully use him.

Lesson for January 16.

The Bible furnishes the Christian with full knowledge of God and man's obligation to Him. The only way to be able to stand firm and true in the coming perilous times is to be thoroughly grounded in the knowledge of the Scriptures.

Lesson for January 23.

Jesus, though divine, resorted much to prayer. If he needed this fellowship, how much more do His followers need it.

Lesson for January 30.

Followers of Jesus may expect temptations, but divine help is available for every need.

Lesson for February 6.

To every believer has been given certain talents such as gifts for service, knowledge, time, money, to be used for the honor of His Lord. A time of reckoning is coming at which reward will be given for fidelity, and judgment meted out for infidelity.

Lesson for February 13.

The home is the oldest and most important institution in the world. The most effective way of making strong and pure the church, society and the nation is to make the home Christian.

Lesson for February 20.

The subject of the kingdom is under solemn obligation to permeate society and let his light shine so that the heavenly father may be glorified.

Lesson for February 27.

Every believer has two natures—the flesh and the spirit. The only way to overcome the flesh is to be filled with the Spirit.

Lesson for March 6.

The Lord permitted persecution to fall upon the church to cause the disciples to be scattered in order for the widening of the testimony.

Lesson for March 13.

Christ has imposed upon every disciple the obligation of witnessing for Him to all the nations of the world.

Lesson for March 20.

The Christian's hope is the personal return of Jesus Christ to take him to His heavenly home. When Christ comes, the body of the believer who has fallen asleep will be resurrected and living believers will be caught up into glory with Christ.

Harder to Do Right

CHAPTER I

—1—

The Affable Stranger.

On the coast of New Jersey, some twenty miles south of Barnegat, lies the little village of Straitsmouth. To the east'ard a promontory guards the town from winter gales; but except for this barrier you will see, to north and south, nothing save barren sand-dunes, stretching away for mile on mile, bleak and untenanted, a very picture of desolation. At intervals rotting timbers, bordering the shore, tell where some stout vessel has laid her bones; but for the most part the dunes lie bare, a monotony of white and glistening sand; the waves, in the summertime, breaking gently on the shelving beach, but in winter tearing and rending it with murderous rage, the huge green rollers towering toward the shore, to crash and thunder into an avalanche of foam and flying spray.

Thus you may see that Straitsmouth was, of necessity, an isolated spot. Eight miles to the north of us, Cedar Inlet had grown, as we were forced to admit, into "quite a town," with wharves and shipping, and a brisk trade with many points in the interior. And, to the south of us, Norton's Cove had flourished also, though we remained what we had been for nearly a hundred years, a peaceful fishing hamlet with a daily routine as colorless and monotonous as the dunes themselves.

Amid these quiet surroundings I was born in the year seventeen hundred and forty-nine. My father, like nine-tenths of the citizens of Straitsmouth, was a fisherman; an upright, God-fearing man, not over large but sturdy and strong. He was not blessed, I think, with much imagination, but was content to do his daily tasks as they came to him, with his thoughts centered first of all upon the weather, and after that upon the affairs and fortunes of the town. My mother, on the other hand, must have been an unusual woman, but my memories of her are faint and dreamlike, for she died when I was ten years old.

Alas! how many a lad must say, as I do: "If my mother had only lived!" Not that I am trying to excuse myself in any way, but I think nothing could have made more difference to me than her death, for it was the next nine years which formed my habits and my character. Fortunately, I met no great temptations; but my father, a heartbroken man, took little interest in me, with the natural result that I did chiefly those things which I liked to do, and omitted many others which I should have done. Thus, at the time my story begins, I was in many respects below the average for boys of my age. For one thing, I was not a good scholar, nor was I fleet of foot, though I was large and strong, and at wrestling could throw anybody in the town. Yet since I had followed shooting and fishing all my days, I had acquired one accomplishment to a really remarkable degree, namely, a deadly accuracy in the use of firearms. I had a splendid rifle, which had been my grandfather's; it was of English make, clasped and ornamented with silver, and would speed a bullet true and straight, with scarcely the deflection of a hair's breadth from the mark.

I do not claim, of course, that I was a marksman by instinct; my progress was one long course of experimenting, and of profiting by my mistakes. First, I mastered the art of shooting at a stationary mark, trying charges of different strength, and calculating, at various distances, how much I should allow for the drop of the bullet. Soon no squirrel, no matter how tall the tree in which he sought refuge, was safe from my aim; then wild ducks swimming on the water out of reach of my shotgun paid tribute to my skill; and at last, after innumerable failures, I began to acquire the really difficult art of bringing down, with a single bullet, wildfowl actually upon the wing. Not, of course, that I could do this at every attempt, but I succeeded often enough, at least, to prove that it was no accident, while no one else in the village could do it at all.

Here then, as nearly as I can draw it, is my picture at nineteen. A very ordinary boy, but absolutely healthy and normal, and not, I am glad to think, mean or vicious in any way, although I was fast reaching the age when instead of staying at home, I liked to spend the spare hours in the daytime at the wharf, which was the loafing place for the town, and my evenings at the tavern, where much good ale was drunk, and a great deal more went on which was, I fear, less wholesome than the ale. And with this introduction my story really begins.

It was about four o'clock on an evening in late October, in the year seventeen hundred and sixty-eight, when I left the cottage, and as usual, with rifle on shouder, bent my steps toward the wharf. For the last two days I had been visiting my cousin at Cedar Inlet, and I was thinking now of how fine a place it really was, with its stately houses, and its shops, and the stir and bustle of the wharves, with the bark Eastern Star, loading for a trip to the West Indies, and due to sail on the following morning. That, I reflected (without the faintest vision of what the morrow held in store for me) would be a glorious adventure and in a vague way I began to picture to myself what the West Indies were like. Geography was a weak point with me, and I think it must have been India that was really uppermost in my mind, for I remember that I peopled the woods with elephants and tigers, and the ocean with tall vessels laden with treasure, keeping a wary outlook for gentlemen of fortune flying the black flag. But if my tigers and elephants were some distance from their native haunts, yet my pirates were located with propriety, for here was an industry which had existed for many years in the Caribbean, and in spite of the march of progress still flourished as handsomely as of old.

I found the wharf almost deserted. Aaron Parker, old and silver-haired, was, as usual, fishing at the end of the pier, his long legs dangling over the edge, his tin can, filled with bait, by his side. Propped against a stanchion, close at hand, was his old, disreputable-looking shotgun, and I soon perceived that his thoughts were equally divided between fishing and gunning; for he turned at my approach and pointed out to sea to where, perhaps a hundred and twenty-five yards distant, a flock of half a dozen sea-ducks were swimming slowly along, every now and again diving in search of food. Toward this little flock, peaceful and unsuspecting, Aaron was casting longing eyes.

"There, Dick, my boy," he said tactfully, "is what I'd like for tomorrow's dinner. They've just set my mouth watering. A dozen times I've started to get into my boat, and scull down on them, but I've tried that trick so often that I know it's no use; they would take wing before I got within range. And I was saying to myself, 'Wouldn't it be fine if Dick Lindsay should come along and shoot me one with his rifle.' And then I look up, and sure enough, here you are, just in time. Rest your rifle on the rail, Dick; wait till they draw together a little, and I'll bet you'll get me one."

I was about to comply when the sound of voices made me turn around, and I saw two of the hunters of the village, Isaac Holmes and William Ogden, coming down toward the wharf, rifles on shoulders, Isaac with a bunch of gray squirrels in his hand. As they joined us, Aaron seemed to forget his beloved sea-ducks for a moment, for he inquired eagerly, "Has your man come back, William?"

Ogden shook his head. "No," he answered in a tone betraying some anxiety, "and here it is almost five o'clock, A little after noon, was what he said. And yet he appeared to be an honest man."

"What is it all about, William?" I asked. "What man are you talking of?"

"Why," he explained, "day before yesterday a stranger came to town and said he wanted to hire a horse and buggy for two or three days. He said he would take good care of the rig and would return today, probably a little after noon. And I let him have the white mare and the best buggy."

"I think you were foolish," I said bluntly, "to trust a stranger like that."

"Well," Ogden defended, "he gave me a fancy price, and paid half of it down. After that I didn't exactly want to say no, especially as he had the money right in his hand, and had a pleasant way with him besides. I think he'll be back. What do you say, Isaac? You saw him."

"I say he'll keep his word," returned Isaac comfortingly. "I'll venture he's an honest man. Give him until sundown. If he doesn't come then, why—" He broke off suddenly to listen, for Isaac had the sharpest ears of any hunter in the town. "I'll be mightily mistaken—" he went on slowly; then, shading his eyes with his hand, peered down the road, and cried in sudden triumph, "Thought so! There he is now!"

Around a turn concealed by trees there appeared, sure enough, the familiar figure of the white mare with the best buggy in tow, both evidently in excellent condition. William hastened forward, with relief written upon his face, and held the mare while the stranger alighted.

"I fear I am late," he acknowledged as he came forward, speaking to William, but as it seemed to me taking us all in at a glance. He had a pleasant voice and prepossessing manner; his face was bronzed, as from exposure to wind and sun, he had a pair of bright and penetrating eyes, and although he was not tall, he possessed an excellent breadth of shoulder and looked in all respects like a man who could take care of himself without help in the world.

He walked down the wharf as if glad of a chance to stretch his limbs; then all at once his eyes became riveted on the sea. "There is a pretty sight," he said.

It was clear to me that if he were not a sportsman he at least possessed a sportsman's instincts, for what had attracted his attention was a flock of perhaps twenty white-wings, flying close to the shore.

"They will decoy to the others," I cried instantly. "See if they don't."

And the next moment, as the birds in the air perceived their companions feeding peacefully below them, they yielded, as I had predicted, to the social habits of their kind; and swinging gracefully toward the water, they set their wings, wheeled in a wide half-circle, and splashing into the ocean, began what appeared to be an amicable conversation with their hosts.

Aaron's interest in his next day's dinner was revived. "There's your chance, Dick," he begged. "You couldn't miss one now."

The ducks, indeed, as the two flocks massed close together, offered a tempting mark. But instead of shooting I turned, with what for me was unusual deference, to the stranger. I do not think it was politeness on my part, for I was not overburdened with that quality; but rather that I had sense enough to see that this man, in spite of his quiet dress and quiet manner, was, in some way difficult to explain, distinctly above the rest of us; and accordingly I did not feel at my ease in attempting to display my skill before him. And so I said, "Perhaps this gentleman will try the shot."

He looked at me rather approvingly, I thought, and with a glance that seemed to be taking stock of me. But he declined my offer with a smile. "I thank you," he answered, "but I am only a humble merchant. Of such matters"—and with a gesture he indicated the guns stacked against the rail—"I am ignorant. If you wish to insure the safety of the game, I will shoot. But as our friend here seems anxious to have one for dinner, I think I had better not make the attempt."

He spoke as if he were telling the truth, and yet, in some way that I could not quite have explained, I felt that he was not so ignorant as he appeared—that he knew enough, if he chose to admit it, about guns and rifles and how to use them. But this I could not very well say, and Aaron was quick to assent.

"That's well spoken, sir," he agreed. "Now, Dick, something may frighten them. Go ahead and shoot."

"All right," I agreed. "And Isaac and William will fire, too. With three bullets we ought to get at least one duck."

But Aaron did not wish to run the slightest chance of losing his dinner. "No, Dick," he objected, "no disrespect to the others, but you're the boy to do the shooting. They will lend you their rifles; put them side of you, and when you've fired your own piece lay it down and give 'em two more shots as they go off. You'll do that for an old man, won't you, boys?"

To my embarrassment, both Isaac and William responded by doing as Aaron suggested. The stranger eyed me curiously. "You seem to enjoy quite a reputation," he observed; and added, I thought a trifle mockingly, "but a reputation has its drawbacks. It's not always easy to live up to it."

Somehow his words nettled me. They were courteous enough, but in his whole manner I seemed to read disbelief—a feeling that I was not nearly such a marksman as my friends made me out to be. And I determined that if I ever drew a bead straight in my life, I would do so now.

"There's only one way to tell," I answered somewhat shortly; and without in the least realizing how much, in the future, was to depend upon the accuracy of my aim, I walked out to the end of the pier, and banishing all thought of my audience from my mind, forthwith concentrated my energies on the shot before me.

To begin with, I leaned the rifles of Isaac and William against the rail, where I could easily grasp them, and then did not scruple to take advantage of the added steadiness to be obtained from shooting with a rest. I leveled my piece, waited until I had three big black fellows in line, and carefully noting the position of the rest of the flock, pressed the trigger. Then, without waiting to see the result of my shot, I put down my piece and seized Isaac's rifle. It took a moment for the thin cloud of smoke to dissolve, and when it did I found, as I had expected, that the frightened ducks were already taking wing. They are, however, in comparison with a widgeon or a black duck, slow flyers, and I had ample time to focus on four birds close together, and to direct my aim, by allowing the proper headway, at them. Once more, without an instant's delay, I laid down the second rifle, grasped hastily for the third, and though, by this time, the ducks had not only gained considerable speed, but considerable distance as well, my good angel stood by me and I dropped a gray bird from the center of the flock. Then, and then only, still holding the smoking rifle in my hand, I looked, not without apprehension, to see whether or not my earlier shots had reached their mark. I shall never forget the sight that met my gaze. There, an equal distance apart, three birds, two blacks and a gray, floated stone-dead on the quiet water.

I was the center of quite a demonstration. Aaron, with a glorious dinner before his eyes, was naturally the most delighted, but the stranger was a close second, and as if desirous of making amends for his disbelief, complimented me most handsomely on the accuracy of my aim, and crowned the occasion by insisting that we should all adjourn to the tavern, where he could complete his payment to William and at the same time, as he was kind enough to phrase it, "drink a health to the straightest-shooting young man he had met in many a day."

Naturally, we all accepted with alacrity, all of us, that is, except Aaron, who was too intent on retrieving his coveted game to go with us at once, but who earnestly assured the stranger that he would be with us directly and would make an honest effort to dispose of his fair share of the ale.

Once seated at the round table in the tavern, with two or three of its regular patrons added to our group, and with an unlimited supply of ale for all, it was not long before tongues were wagging freely. The stranger was a merchant, he told us, and admitted that these were times when a trader could make excellent profits, provided he was willing to run some risk. But—and he lowered his voice and glanced apprehensively about him—he had heard—we must remember that he was but a simple merchant and knew nothing of the sea—he had heard lately much talk of villainous pirates who were leaving their usual haunts in the Caribbean, and working farther and farther north, so that shipping along the Atlantic seaboard was no longer safe. And with this introduction of the subject everyone began talking in concert. Aaron, who had deposited his sea-ducks in a corner and was doing his utmost by inroads on the liquor to make up for lost time, began to tell the stranger of "Bloody" Carleton and his brig; Isaac was recounting horrid tales of the notorious Starkey; and finally some one, I know not who, for by this time the strong ale was humming in my ears, mentioned the name of the Black Panther.

"Aye," cried the stranger, "what of this Black Panther? I have heard the name more than once in the last few weeks, and always it is a different story. I should be glad to learn the truth."

Maoris Put Up Brave Battle for Country

The history of the Maoris of New Zealand is a most remarkable one. Primitive and even cannibalistic up to sixty years ago, they have in a brief space of years achieved equality with the white man.

It is hundreds of years since six large canoes, each holding about 200 persons, arrived there from the Tahiti archipelago. Maori tradition has preserved the names of these boats, and the New Zealand fleet now employs them. By the time of the British conquest the 1,000 people who had landed, utterly exhausted by their tremendous journey, had become 100,000—a small population for such a large territory.

No tribe ever exhibited such heroism in the face of European conquest as did the Maoris. In seizing New Zealand, Great Britain lost 15,000 soldiers, though the forces of the Maoris, armed only with old-fashioned wooden weapons, did not exceed 2,000. When peace finally came, the conquerors found they had a deep respect for the conquered. —Arnaldo Cipolla in La Stampa, Turin (Living Age).

His Orders

Alfred Austin, the poet, was in the office of an editor one day when a very young reviewer brought in a book which he had been given to criticize. Now, neither the reviewer nor the editor had read a page of that work and the former conscientiously wanted to know what lines the latter wished him to go upon.

"What am I to do with this?" he asked.

The editor just glanced at the cover and observed brightly:

"Give it h—l!"

ALPHABET BORN IN MIND OF EGYPTIAN

Theory Advanced by Chicago Scientist.

Picture a Semitic thinker in old Egypt poring over a tablet of Egyptian picture writing. He knows something about the Egyptian hieroglyphics, how the sign for house, for example, is a boxlike drawing, vaguely suggestive of a child's picture of a house. Probably he knows how to write his name in the Egyptian, piecing it together in a series of simple signs to make up the sounds. And he has an idea.

From one inscription or a single series of inscriptions, the Semite, with a little help, perhaps, from an Egyptian friend, picks out some twenty-two signs that represent different consonant sounds in words. With these few signs, he believes, a kind of writing can be done that will be easier to spell out than the picture puzzles of the Egyptian. The signs he has chosen as letters are set down in the order of their appearance on the Egyptian inscription. And so the first crude alphabet is devised and ready for changes and improvements by other thinkers of many countries.

This theory as to how the alphabet was invented and how the letters were set down in order has just been advanced by Dr. B. L. Ullman of the University of Chicago. Doctor Ullman, who presented his theory at a meeting of archeologists at Cambridge, believes that the alphabet may be of greater antiquity than most scholars have considered likely.

The oldest specimens of writing believed to be in alphabet form are the crude Semitic inscriptions found at Sinai in 1905. These inscriptions, Doctor Ullman said, have been generally dated as late as 1500 B. C., and that date has been widely used in recent years as the time of invention of alphabetic writing.

But three years ago inscriptions in Phoenician alphabetic writing almost as old as the Sinai writings were found at Byblos, in Syria. The letters of these inscriptions were considerably less crude than the Sinai writing, and Doctor Ullman points out that such progress in use of the alphabet as these Phoenician inscriptions show could not have taken place in one or two centuries.

The Sinai writings, he says, are probably quite as old as the most daring speculators have suggested. From this he is "inclined to set the origin of the alphabet at about 2000 B. C., namely about the Nineteenth century B. C., or earlier—fully 1,000 years earlier than was commonly believed a few years ago."

According to Doctor Ullman's conclusions, the Greeks must have got their alphabet from the Phoenicians much earlier than the Ninth or Tenth century B. C., which is the time generally accepted by scientists.

"The old Greek tradition," he said, "was that the alphabet was introduced by Cadmus in 1313 B. C. My view is that this may be right, and in any case the Twelfth century is the latest possible date for the epoch-making event.

"Thus," he concludes, "the Greek alphabet may have existed at the time of the Trojan war, and must have existed when the Homeric poems were composed."

Exchange of Information

A very pleasant arrangement providing for an exchange of expert information of the subject of road construction has been arrived at between the United States and Germany. All data on construction methods, costs and results of experiments, as well as new machinery, will be transmitted from one to the other, and as both countries are giving a great deal of attention to this subject at the present time it is anticipated that the results will be very gratifying and helpful to both countries. This arrangement grew out of the visit to Berlin of the American delegates to the International Road congress, which took place in Milan a few months ago.

Strategy Saved Town

Wishing to extend the training grounds of a camp near the village of Villedieu, in the Vosges, the French military authorities decided to wipe out the little town by gunfire.

Their scheme has, however, been thwarted by the parish priest, who determined to do what he could to save the village from destruction. He searched through volumes of the laws of France, and found that his church could not be closed down so long as there were two attendants at daily mass. Since then the church has been thronged every day with villagers, who thus render the authorities powerless to carry out the destruction.

New Scholastic Idea

One semester each year for three years is spent in an industry as nearly allied as possible to their chosen line of work by students in the department of engineering at the College of the Pacific, Stockton, Calif. During the fifth year students remain continuously in college. This is said to be the only college west of the Mississippi following the co-operative plan of instruction, under which students are enabled, after the freshman year, to gain valuable first-hand experience in the work they expect to follow as a profession and at the same time to support themselves while attending college.

Treasury Experts Not Easy Persons to Fool

Many and clever are the "get-rich-quick" schemes that flood the United States treasury, but the experts there are practically fool-proof. The government redeems all torn, burned or otherwise damaged money, thus saving the people millions of dollars annually. By giving good money for mutilated money the Treasury department saved citizens $4,000,000,000 during 1925. Appeals for redemption of money that is retrieved from animals' stomachs, that is partly chewed by infants, or that is burned are granted if two-thirds of it is turned in and the serial number is legible. Recently a man sent in a cigar box full of green paper. He said it was $148 that rats had chewed up. But the experts found that it contained mostly paper and only a $1 bill that had been run through a meatchopper.

A woman may win a man's love without trying, but she can't keep it that way.

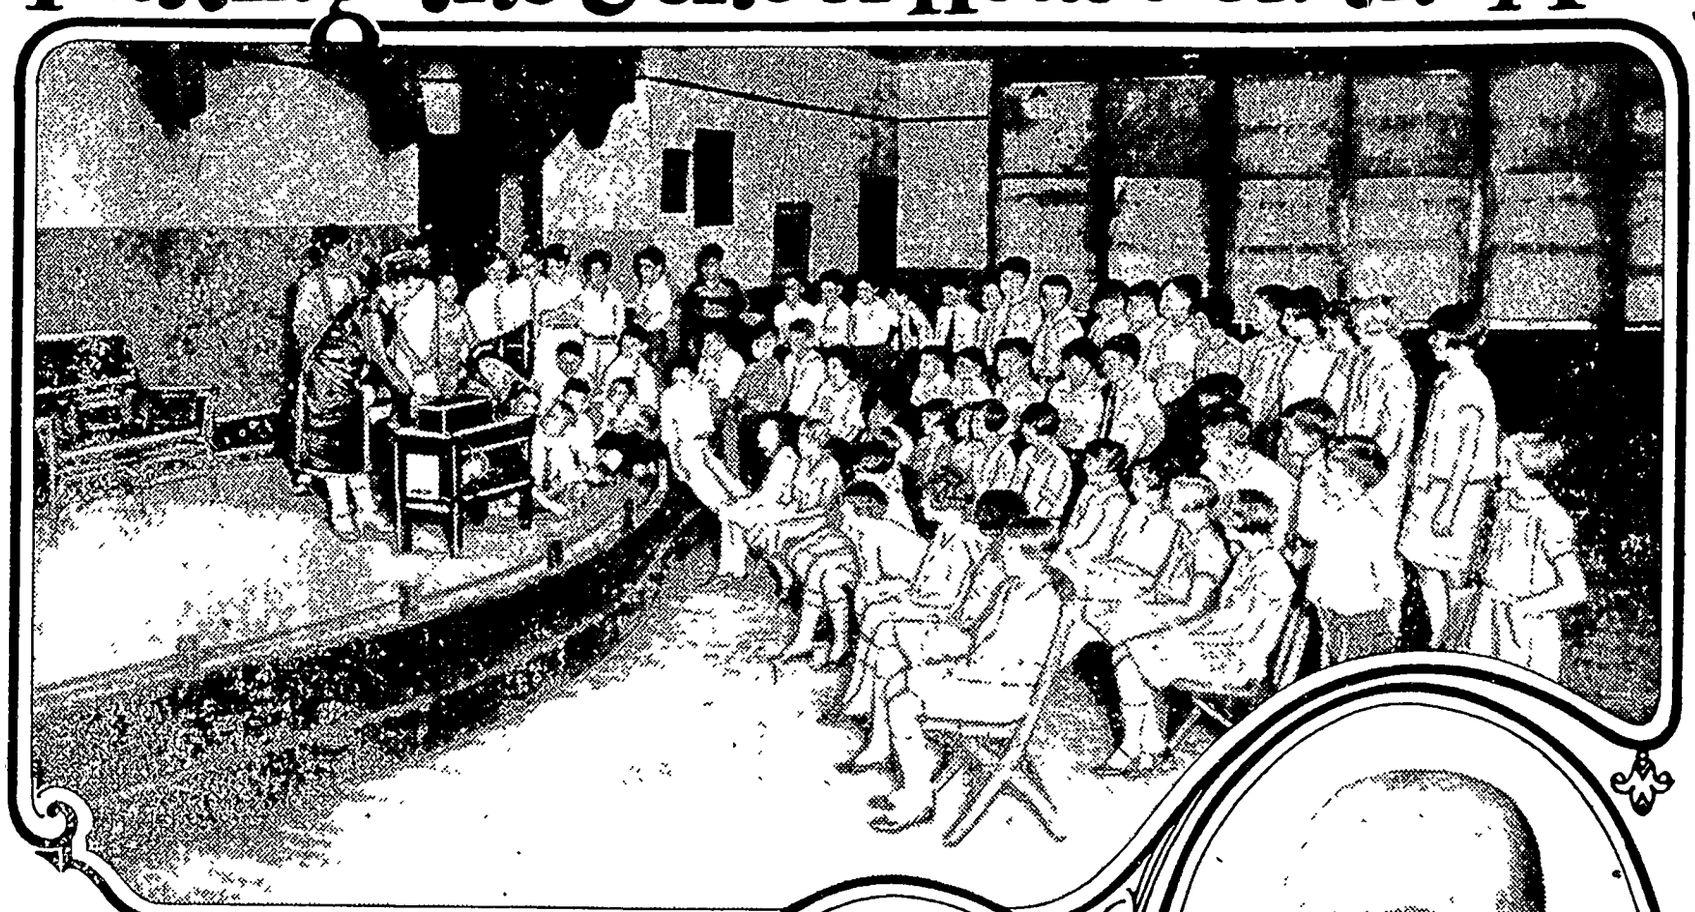
Putting the School House on the Air



ATLANTA YOUNGSTERS RECEIVING CLASSROOM INSTRUCTION VIA "THE AIR"

JOHN J. TIGERT, U.S. Commissioner of Education, a great booster for Education by Radio

A. ATWATER KENT
Philadelphia Radio manufacturer and Pioneer in promotion of Education through the Air

IF ALL THE PEOPLE will not go to school, then the school will be taken to all the people. This guiding spirit of far-sighted educators during the last half century is rapidly enveloping the field of radio. Educators set up "mail courses," or college extension work, on the surface of the earth. They sent correspondence school lessons down to miners beneath the earth. But not until they recently resorted to broadcasting knowledge through the ether above the earth did the school really penetrate into millions of homes, town halls, churches and other places where people gather.

Thousands of graduates of the University of Hard Knocks are boasting that Radio is the most popular member of their Alma Mater's faculty. Now, the air holds education for the whole family—for the twins in kindergarten, for little Sister and big Brother, as well as for Father, Mother and Grandpa.

Jack and Jill, the kindergarten twins, perform physical exercises and hear new nursery rhymes, which are part of the rural school program broadcast every morning of the school year by Station KSAC at the Kansas State Agricultural College. Mary and John, in third and fifth grades, respectively, join in singing with the "Radio Leader" and give rapt attention to the geography lesson and description of trips and places, also part of the Kansas rural school program

"The radio broadens the horizon of many young people and brings new ideas into the community," reported S. J. Meher, superintendent of Lehigh, Kansas, schools, which regularly receive the state college's radio educational programs. "Rural communities tend to employ home teachers who have received little instruction or inspiration from outside their home neighborhoods. Consequently, they sometimes lack new ideas to impart to their pupils. In this respect radio is helping both teacher and pupils.

"In addition to the regular morning instruction over the air, each class is occasionally given the use of the radio in the afternoon for some good organ or concert music. A promise of the radio is an incentive to intensive study, for the pupils know they must have their lessons before they can listen to radio programs on these special occasions."

A Dixie city, Atlanta, Georgia, was first to adopt radio as a definite part of its school equipment. With the co-operation of A. Atwater Kent, radio manufacturer of Philadelphia and strong believer in the value of radio as an educational agency, Atlanta school officials accomplished their goal of placing a radio set in every school, and then, with the Atlanta Journal's station, WSB, they arranged for the broadcasting of one radio period weekly to each grade both in elementary and high schools. Every pupil in Atlanta's schools heard President Coolidge on Washington's birthday.

Connecticut is this year installing receiving equipment in all its rural schools and claims the distinction of being the first state to make this advance.

"A new school life has resulted from the use of radio," Professor Willis A. Sutton, Atlanta's superintendent of schools, observed.

"Radio gets hold of that othereal element known as the imagination Curiosity is aroused. More information is sought. Direct vocal, audible contact is established with the outside world. Great educators, statesmen and captains of industry speak their messages directly to the student. Ambition is stirred. Brain cells previously dormant begin to function.

"Thanks to radio, this has been the best year in all Atlanta school history."

Striking proof that the children learn as they listen-in comes from a schoolboy himself—(Ford Sammis)—editor of the Central High School Bulletin, of Washington, D. C. In an editorial regarding a popular broadcaster's weekly talks he declared:

"The English which he uses is the most striking that we have ever heard. The fine choice of words leaves a strong impression on the listener as phrase follows phrase, each rich in diction, and sparkling with splendid epithet.

"Every talk is invigorating, and is far more of an inspiration to the average student to speak better English than a comparatively dry textbook which tells that copular verbs cannot take an object."

"Boys in Kansas City whistle grand opera music more than jazz tunes," added Ira Insco Cammack, superintendent of schools of Kansas City, Mo., a pioneer in teaching by radio.

"Why? Because radio has made their musical education much more than a mere singing of 'do-re-me-fa' Teachers tell them to tune in every Sunday evening and hear the greatest artists singing and playing in the radio concerts. They do this. As a result, Kansas City schools, where Marion Talley was discovered, hope soon to produce a second artist equally as great.

"In the Inaugural year we teach the Civics lesson on 'How the President of the United States is Inaugurated' by assembling the children in their school auditoriums, where from loud speakers installed there they actually hear the Chief Justice administer the oath of office to the President and listen to the President's Inaugural address. That is much more effective than simply making children memorize the oath of office from a book."

Even books don't hold all the lessons that radio teaches. Mrs. Oliver Swaney of Platte county, Mo., noted that her husband and boys, who by day shouted loudly at cows and pigs on their farm, unconsciously toned their voices down when in the house, in imitation of the soft, cultured voices of entertainers, which came to them via the ether waves.

By carrying instruction to adults who left school prematurely, radio is striving to give everyone in the United States a high school education, declared School Chief Cammack of Kansas City.

Colleges are aiming to surpass that. Already twenty-three state colleges broadcast regularly eleven of them, giving such college courses as psychology, dairy production and marketing, agricultural engineering, sociology, business English, English literature, economics and agricultural journalism. One of every five farmers in the corn and wheat belts is attending these ethereal schools, a survey by Station WLS of Chicago revealed.

Keeping pace with her American sisters in learning, the University of Paris, one of the two oldest universities in the world, has established a Radio Institute of University Extension, with Raymond Poincare himself as President of the Committee of Patronage.

Although millions of school children are helped by radio—although scores of state colleges give parents the schooling they missed when young—although H. G. Wells and Herbert Hoover can point out that more education of all the people is needed to prevent wars and industrial troubles—if the taxpayers do not support education, it cannot advance.

By making taxpayers willing and eager to pay radio renders its greatest service, in the opinion of Dr. John J. Tigert, United States Commissioner of Education.

"The greatest value of radio in education is that it increases the public appreciation of education, and thereby raises educational standards of the nation," Dr. Tigert said.

"The janitor passing the door has as much to say about the extent to which our educational work in this country shall be developed as I, the chief educational officer of the nation.

"Our school system has to be continued by taxation so every voter has an equal voice in determining our educational standards. By rousing curiosity, by planting a desire for more information and education, radio is increasing the number of voters who demand the best schools, best teachers and best educational methods all over America."

Back of nearly every revival of learning, every advance in mass education, there has been some mechanical stimulus which was largely responsible for the renaissance.

Back of the placing of books in the cottages as well as in the monasteries and the accompanying wealth of writing which culminated in the Shakespearian triumphs was the introduction of modern printing. Behind the development of the newspaper from a weekly leaflet for the comparative few to a daily journal bristling with timely news and education for every one was the invention of the telegraph.

So, today, back of the public's demand and the educator's desire for education is the radio.

Hardly had thousands started going to the "University of the Air" when a new advantage of radio was discovered. It was observed that many more persons wear eye glasses than carry ear trumpets. More eyes than ears are completely worn out, the United States Census Bureau officially reported. So teachers are using radio to save American eyesight by transferring part of the eye's work to the ear.

As a result, American ears are learning to "see" by listening-in to the inauguration of the President instead of reading about it; by hearing a travel talk instead of pouring over the geography's pages; by listening to a practical "How-to-do-it-on-your-farm" lecture on agricultural engineering, rather than by reading volumes of generalities on the subject.

This new educational trend has been furthered by the inventors and manufacturers. They undertook to eliminate some of the many dials, switches, knobs and plugs on early receiving sets which mystified the mind and strained the eye of one trying to manipulate all of them, and they succeeded in producing a set which, while still possessing the power to pull in education and entertainment from anywhere between the Atlantic and Pacific, can be controlled by one, single dial.

So simple is this set that no eyes at all are needed to operate it. This has become a boon to another group—the blind. In fact, one of the first single dial sets ever made in his factory was presented by A. Atwater Kent to a talented blind girl of Washington, D. C., whose longing for fine music became known to the Philadelphia radiomaster.

"All well-equipped schools for the blind now have radio sets, both in assembly halls and in individual student's rooms," reports Mrs. E. M. Connell, superintendent of the National Capital's home for the Blind.

"Blind youngsters have no trouble operating radio receivers—the single dial sets make it easy for them to bring in perfectly a procession of stations which teach them more rapidly than did the old fashioned Braille reading boards."

On the Advantages of High-Power Broadcasting to Public and Trade

The high-power broadcast station is an accomplished fact, and the results obtained in the first experiments indicate that the improved service to listeners thus rendered is a valuable contribution towards the permanence of broadcasting

It is estimated that a super-power station, such as that of the Radio Corporation at Bound Brook, N. J., which was designed for an output of fifty kilowatts, has a listening audience of approximately five million people, and when programs of outstanding merit are broadcast the audience frequently total fifteen million Add to this the service offered to broadcast listeners through the periodical linking of numerous broadcasting stations by wire or by radio and it is evident that good service is being rendered to a very large percentage of the Nation's population.

Inductive Interference

The importance of this subject from the standpoint of the listening public generally and the Central Stations in particular will perhaps justify my taking this opportunity to touch briefly on the important subject of interference with radio reception.

The radio broadcast receiver is essentially a sensitive device, for in order to obtain adequate loudspeaker signals it is required to amplify an infinitesimal amount of energy to thousands of times its original strength. It is, therefore, capable of picking up and amplifying the inductive electrical disturbance in its neighborhood. So-called inductive interference results from sparking electrical machinery, leakage on high voltage lines and from the operation of other high voltage devices. With the advent of the more modern broadcast received, with its ability to give further amplification than that obtainable heretofore, the problem has been somewhat increased.

Franklin Pierce Once Placed Under Arrest

Ulysses Simpson Grant was not the only President of the United States to be arrested during his term of office. President Franklin Pierce had a similar experience. One night in 1853 President Pierce was returning on horseback from the home of William Morgan in the southeast section of Washington. He accidentally ran down an old woman, the wife of Nathan Lewis. A local constable named Stanley Edelin placed Pierce under arrest, not knowing that he was the President. "I am Mr. Pierce," explained the victim, whereupon the constable immediately released him. As would be expected, there were rumors that the President was not as sober at that time as he might have been. The Pathfinder received this story direct from Col. Franklin Pierce Morgan, of Washington, now of Virginia, who is a son of William Morgan in whose house President Pierce had been visiting the night he was arrested.—Pathfinder Magazine.

The longest term of office of any government official is that of the comptroller general and assistant, who each hold office for 15 years.

Says Tanlac Has Earned Her Emphatic Praise

Burlington, Iowa, matron, two years an invalid, now enjoys best health in ten years. Following operation, her system remained weak and disordered. Tanlac built her up and earned her confident praise

Mrs. Florence Braun, R. R. 4, Burlington, Ia., is now robust and hearty. "For two years following an operation," she declared recently, "I was frightened at my condition. I was so weak, nervous and underweight that I couldn't do my housework. I hardly knew where to turn for relief. Headaches and dizzy spells made my days miserable. At night I lay awake counting the clock ticks, unable to sleep, and watching for morning.

"A glass of milk was enough to upset my stomach. My nerves gave way and I lost weight steadily. I went around sluggish and gloomy, too listless to take an interest in anything.

"From 110 lbs. and weakness, to 157 pounds and strength is the measure of what Tanlac did for me. As for my life, it is altogether different. I eat and sleep as I did in my early days, feel better than I've felt in ten years and face the day's duties with plenty of confidence in my strength and ability. Tanlac has earned a clean-cut claim to my emphatic praise."

Profit by this lady's experience. If your health is below par get a trial bottle of Tanlac today. Your druggist has it. Tanlac is nature's own tonic, made from herbs, roots and barks. Over 52 million bottles sold.

Still Have Faith in Odd "Medicine"

Faith in a bottle of medicine for all real and imaginary ailments is a characteristic of the English working classes. In insurance practice, in which the check of expense does not act and the physicians are complaisant, this leads to much wasteful expenditure on drugs. In London the insured numbered 1,800,786, July 6, last year, and for these 7,408,518 prescriptions were issued in the course of a year—an average of more than four apiece for the whole number and a much higher figure (not given) for those who were ill or thought themselves so ill as to consult a panel physician. The cost of the drugs was more than $5,000,000. One defense of this extensive drugging is that the bottle of medicine has a psychologic effect on the insured person which makes him feel better. After all, should the poor savage be despised for his faith in incantations and charms? —American Medical Journal.

GETTING FACTS ON APPLE PEST

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

The codling moth is a troublesome insect enemy of apples, prevalent in most of the apple-growing regions. A special appropriation for meeting the situation in Kansas was made available to the bureau of entomology July 1, 1926, but in order to cover an entire season work was begun in cooperation with the Kansas Agricultural college during the spring Damage was especially severe in Kansas and the Ozarks during the preceding season, and it is hoped that these studies will throw much light on the codling-moth problem throughout this region. Field experiments in control are under way at the Bentonville (Ark.) laboratory, which include the testing of arsenicals applied in various dosages and at various times, and of ovicidal and larvicidal materials. Questions relating to the quantity of spray residue on fruit at harvest time are being studied at the Yakima (Wash.) field station. Tests of a large series of baits for moths in the orchard and in packing sheds are also being made. An apple ferment has been found to be the best bait material of those tried, though a ferment of molasses and yeast is also good. None of the essential oils tested shows much promise.

At the Sligo (Md.) laboratory the feeding habits of the codling-moth larvae are being studied, especially those just hatched. The development of insecticides other than arsenicals is being attempted.

Variety of Apple Trees Changed by Top-Working

"Apple tree varieties may easily be changed if the grower wishes to follow directions and use a litle care in his work," says Prof. G. W. Peck of the New York State College of Agriculture at Ithaca.

"The undesirable Ben Davis may be top-worked with some variety of real quality, such as McIntosh or Spy. Grafting may also be used to get another variety of fruit on an isolated plum or pear which does not bear because of lack of pollination.

"Any one may graft fruit successfully if he will take well-matured one-year-old terminal growths from known bearing trees, keep the scions dormant, graft when growth is just starting, and be sure that the growing or cambium tissues of the stock and the scion come in contact so as to insure a union."

Failures of grafts may often be laid to the neglect of the grower to be sure about this union, and another important point is the careful placing of wax over all cut surfaces immediately after the graft is placed. This is to keep the cut from drying out. For best results, scions should be set within a few days at a time when the first leaves of the tree become from a quarter to half an inch long. Warm weather should be selected for the job.

Parasite of Gypsy Moth

The Department of Agriculture has recently introduced into the United States a parasite of the gypsy moth which is particularly promising. This insect is called Compsilura concinnata Meigen. It lives on about 100 host insects. It has now been studied for eight years by experts of the Department of Agriculture, and these authorities feel that the insect will prove of great benefit. It will not only check the spread of insects of the kinds it was intended to control, but it has also shown ability to combat other dangerous insects in this country.

Horticultural Notes

A good raspberry plantation will be profitable for six to ten years.

* * *

Ordinarily the quantity of fruit and vegetables used on the farm is in direct proportion to the quantity raised.

* * *

In pruning see that dangerous crotches and crowding of limbs are eliminated from young trees to avoid breaking down when the trees come of age. The earlier this shaping is done the less shock to the trees.

* * *

Cutting the firewood with a carpenter's saw is just as sensible as using one to prune the fruit trees. Buy and use a good pruning saw. Efficient tools make it easier to do efficient work. Ninety cents for a pair of hand shears and a dollar and a quarter for a saw is an investment justified even in the home orchard.

* * *

Black walnut trees seem to be poisonous to apple trees, if planted near them. They are also harmful to tomatoes, potatoes and corn.

* * *

After all rotten apples, pruned limbs and other refuse have been cleared up about the orchard, give your trees a thorough spraying.

* * *

In pruning gooseberries and currants, remember that they bear fruit on wood that is two years old. Instead of last year's growth as with raspberries and blackberries.

Prolong Period of Sire Service

Beneficial Effects of Exercise Have Been Proven by Tests.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Dairy bulls at Beltsville, Md., have been put on a daily regime calculated by specialists of the bureau of dairy industry, United States Department of Agriculture, to prolong their life of usefulness in the various breeding projects under way on the experimental farm. Systematic exercise and the feeding of sprouted oats are two of the most important features of the plan.

Advocate Exercise.

Investigations in the past have proved the beneficial effects of exercise in maintaining the health and fertility of bulls, and the practice has been consistently advocated. The feeding of sprouted oats to bulls is in line with the beneficial results this feed has shown in correcting breeding difficulties in cows and virgin heifers. Sprouted oats supply the so-called vitamine E, a shortage of which is often held responsible for abnormal functioning of reproductive organs in various kinds of animals.

The special need for determining the best methods of handling dairy bulls to maintain their potency for many years is a result of the "proved sire" idea recently brought into favor. Proved sires are those whose daughters have been tested in sufficient numbers to indicate a consistent ability on the part of the sire to transmit high production. Such proof obviously cannot be obtained until the sires are older than the average dairy bull.

Test Fertility.

Five of the bureau's herd bulls are over eight years of age and average ten and one-half years. One is fifteen years old and continues an active breeder. Several young bulls are being fed experimentally to test the effect of rations on fertility, and two older bulls are now being examined to determine the effects on fertility of excessive service, lack of exercise, and close confinement.

Bovine T. B. Eradicated at Much Increased Rate

The number of cattle tested for tuberculosis in the country under government and state supervision during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1926, was 24 per cent more than for the preceding year, according to the United States Department of Agriculture.

Nearly every phase of tuberculosis-eradication work showed an increased activity during the year. Though the accredited-herd plan of combating the disease was conducted in all the states, general preference was given the area project which provides for the testing of all cattle in a county. Under this plan over 6,500,000 cattle were tested, or over 1,500,000 more than during the preceding year.

Of noteworthy interest in connection with the tuberculin testing under both accredited-herd and area plans was a survey to show the present estimated extent of the disease. The survey showed the probable extent of the disease as 2.8 per cent, meaning that on an average 28 cattle out of every 1,000 in the United States are tuberculous. In 1922 the estimated per cent of infection was 4 per cent.

Sweet Clover Valuable in Building Up Soils

The value of sweet clover as a green manure or soil builder is becoming more and more apparent. Those interested in soil conservation and building have had remarkable success with the use of corn, wheat and sweet clover in a two-year rotation. The inoculated sweet clover is sown in the spring on the wheat. After the wheat is harvested the clover occupies the land for the remainder of the season. The next spring it makes a rapid growth, and during the latter part of April is plowed under and the land prepared for corn.

At the Missouri College of Agriculture it has been found profitable to fertilize the land with about 100 pounds of acid phosphate to the acre. Where the phosphate is added the amount of green clover ready to turn under was about five tons per acre against three tons per acre where no phosphate was used.

FARM NOTES

The supply of good seed corn for this spring apparently will be small.

* * *

Cabbage is rich in the green material needed by laying hens. About six pounds of cabbage may be fed per hundred birds per day.

Unhulled sweet clover seed can be seeded in the winter time but if it has a germination of more than 50 per cent it is usually unsafe to seed until spring.

* * *

Most farm machinery goes to the scrap heap after it has been used only 80 to 100 days while railroads use a locomotive 25 years or more.

* * *

Milk or cream should be cooled to not less than 50 degrees F. within a few minutes after it is drawn or skimmed. This temperature should be maintained.

Help Kidneys By Drinking More Water

Take Salts to Flush Kidneys and Help Neutralize Irritating Acids

Kidney and bladder irritations often result from acidity, says a noted authority. The kidneys help filter this acid from the blood and pass it on to the bladder, where it may remain to irritate and inflame, causing a burning, scalding sensation, or setting up an irritation at the neck of the bladder, obliging you to seek relief two or three times during the night. The sufferer is in constant dread; the water passes sometimes with a scalding sensation and is very profuse; again, there is difficulty in voiding it.

Bladder weakness, most folks call it because they can't control urination. While it is extremely annoying and sometimes very painful, this is often one of the most simple ailments to overcome. Begin drinking lots of soft water, also get about four ounces of Jad Salts from your pharmacist and take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast. Continue this for two or three days. This will help neutralize the acids in the system so they no longer are a source of irritation to the bladder and urinary organs, which then act normal again.

Jad Salts is inexpensive, and is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and is used by thousands of folks who are subject to urinary disorders caused by acid irritation. Jad Salts causes no bad effects whatever.

Here you have a pleasant, effervescent lithia-water drink which may quickly relieve your bladder irritation.

The First National Bank force has an interesting hobby of raising nice flowering plants. They should run a small green house as a side line for they seem quite successful. At present they have an Easter Lilly in full bloom perched in the front window. The plant has four large blossoms and was started from a bulb at Christmas time. They also have some nice geraniums in bloom and possess some fine ferns. The bank is steam or hot water heated and this seems to be ideal for growing indoor plants.

Here s a fine list of 72 farmers in this community who have been paid $80.00 or over for their Cream sold to the Klemme Co.-Op. Creamery the past short month.

We would like to publish the entire list of nearly 400 satisfied patrons but this space does not permit. These loyal patrons have helped to make February, 1927 the biggest output month the Creamery has ever had in history. Had road conditions been better many new patrons would have helped swell the volume of this business.

The Klemme Co-Op. Creamery always pays the very highest market price which has encouraged farmers here to do better dairying and reap larger profits, and "hit for" the road to the Klemme Creamery.

P. T. A. PROGRAM TUESDAY EVENING

SUPT. MOUNCE AND MRS. GARY WILL GIVE ADDRESSES

High School Orchestra Will Give A Special Entertainment

We would like to have a good representation of parents at our next P. T. A. Program next Tuesday evening, April 5th, at 8:15 o'clock.

Our high school Orchestra, soon to leave for their first contest at Charles City, will play, and Mrs. E. G. Gary and Supt Mounce of Garner will discuss questions of interest; Mrs Gary "The Importance of Public School Music, Vocal and Instrumental," Supt. Mounce "Modern Tendencies in Education."

Everybody is invited to attend the P T A. Meetings.

Gladys Schlichting Won Fourth

An eighth grade girl from Britt, Miss Ripple Tyrrell, won the County Spelling Contest last Saturday at the Court House at Garner. There were 43 contestants. Our representative, Gladys Schlichting, was one of the last four up. Representatives from Britt, Goodell and Kanawha remained up longer. As Gladys is now enrolled in the Seventh Grade she will be eligible again next year. Ethel Barz and others will afford her plenty of competition. We hope the contest may become an annual affair and that parents of our best spellers can give encouragement to them in an effort to bring home honors next year.

Faculty Enjoys District Meeting

The faculty here appreciated the opportunity given them to attend the District Meeting at Mason City last week end, Thursday, Friday and Saturday, and we believe they will be worth more as instructors by virtue of their being at the meeting Both general programs and conferences were interesting and instructive. Our new Superintendent of Public Instruction appeared on the program and was well received.

The school of this northern section of our state were well represented.

Junior Carnival Friday Night

On Friday night of this week our Juniors will receive the public and entertain them well at the school house at a school carnival. They promise lots of fun, mystery, and hilarity. No one will be hurt, only surprised at the ingenuity of our modern youth There will be eats and music and wholesome entertainment. The live ones of our town will sneak in for an hour or two and learn from the youngsters.

Supt. Will Return Next Year

We are glad the Board has made it possible for us to remain in Klemme for another year. We like Klemme and the people here, both young and old. We are well pleased with the general school spirit of the town, evidenced by both pupils and parents. Our school programs and activities have had splendid support, from the standpoint of attendance and interest The value of high school attendance is well appreciated by most of our people here and students are encouraged by those outside of our school to stay in the school in spite of some of the irksome tasks and unpleasantries of school relationships. Our graduates of last year and previous years now enrolled in college have pointed the way for present day students of our high school and given a lure to college life. We have had and now have some fine students in Klemme High School, fine in character, personality, and possessed of first rate ability. We have enjoyed the work in Klemme as in few other places. Much of the pleasure of our work here has been due to the fine spirit of co-operation among our teachers. Seldom have we had a more loyal and congenial group of instructors to work with. Our Board has re-elected every one of them for another year. We are sorry that some are not returning. We have confidence in our Board. We believe they are men who will exercise themselves in the interests of our schools unselfishly, and fearlessly. They will come in for their share of undeserved censure, board members always do regardless of how hard they try to give the community a good school. But we believe they can be depended upon to do what they can to maintain high standards of instruction and behavior on the part of all in our schools Both pupils and parents have shown their appreciation of the work our teachers have done and for that we are supremely grateful.—M. F. Penrod.

FARM NAME IS EXCELLENT AD

Names aid in distinguishing farms just as surely as they serve in recognizing individuals, declare advertising specialists at the Wisconsin College of Agriculture.

The selection of an appropriate name is one of the steps in business farming. The named farm is set aside, distinctive, from the unnamed farms in the community, and its name may help to establish a reputation for quality products.

The farm name should be quite short and distinctive so that it is easily read and remembered. The name may be selected from an appropriate land mark such as The Twin Oaks or Lone Line. Many farm owners have incorporated the principal products of their farm into the name as Guernvale Farm which specializes in Guernsey cattle. Others add a suffix to their own name as Gordondale of which Mr. Gordon is the owner.

An attractive letterhead featuring the farm name is considered an excellent means of advertising the farm and its products and it helps the owner to build up a reputation. Road signs, advertising in the local and farm papers and all printed matter may be improved by using the farm name prominently, and the farm owner will reap results.

How many farms are named in the vicinity of Klemme?

TWIN LAKE TOWNSHIP TO VOTE ON ANOTHER SCHOOL

Special Election Will Be Held At The Center School April 2

The people in Twin Lakes township are a progressive class of farmers as is evidenced by the number of new school houses they are building from year to year.

On Saturday, April 2nd they will hold a special election to decide on wether or not to build a new school house in Twin Lake, District No. 8.

The propositions for new school houses usually carries by a large majority and we presume the special election on April 2nd will result in another new school house to be built during the summer.

150 Enter Pig Crop Contest

One hundred and fifty Iowa farmers have entered the 1927 Iowa pig crop contest being sponsored by county Farm Bureaus and the Extension Service of Iowa State College. In this contest a farmer must enter his entire herd of sows which farrow and the men who produce the highest average of pork per sow will be declared winners.

The Meat Diet

The per capita consumption of meat in this country last year was less than for many seasons, although beef indulgence was up to the highest mark Possibly the reason was that beef prices indicated a drop, while lamb and pork chops and veal showed a tendency to climb. But in a general way the Americans are reducing the meat ration—especially in the Southland, where fruits and green goods seem to answer the bodily needs. Nevertheless the Americans are good and hearty eaters and at last accounts were not suffering for ham and eggs.

SCHOOL BOARD ELECTS TEACHERS FOR COMING YEAR

All Teachers Were Given Re-election With Privilege Of Signing Up

The new school board met Tuesday night for their second meeting to take up matters of business on school affairs, among which was the task of electing teachers for the coming year.

Supt. M. F. Penrod and the balance of the faculty were re-elected, subject to their signing and returning a contract within ten days.

We are not in a position to know at this time how many teachers will remain and sign contracts for next year. It is generally supposed that most of them will remain, and possibly others can do better elsewhere.

The Times will have more news along this line at a later date.

DOOR POUNDERS

The peddler will tell you, of course, that your local merchant is over-charging you, that you are not getting value when you trade with your local stores. He will hand you a bunch of commercial "applesauce" about saving you money and giving you the advantage of wonderful and unheard of values. In nine cases out of ten you'll find as good or better merchandise in your local stores for less money. Compare. Satisfy yourself. Nobody is asking you for charity. Your local merchants aren't begging. It is a straightforward business proposition. You will win in the end by patronizing your local stores.

15 CARS LIVE STOCK SHIPPED SATURDAY

STOCK SHIPMENTS PAST WEEK ABOVE AVERAGE

Shipping Association Leads With Twelve Cars Saturday Night

Stock shipments the past week again took a sudden climb above the weekly average, when fourteen cars were shipped out of the Klemme yards Saturday night, and one extra car shipped Thursday which was not reported last week. Three cars of stock were on the list Thursday and if these were added to the shipments for the week would bring the total up to seventeen cars.

The Klemme Shipping Association had twelve car loads of stock in the Saturday shipment, consisting of 7 car loads of cattle, 4 car loads of hogs and 1 mixed car load.

C. A. Larsen shipped 1 car of cattle and 1 car load of hogs Saturday night. And in additional he shipped 3 car loads of hogs Thursday night, one of which we did not report last week and which is therefore added to the Saturday shipments.

Stock shipments during the past four months have been heavy from the Klemme yards and have held a steady average of around twelve car loads a week. Klemme has become noted for their big stock shipments every week and as a result of this stock comes in from quite a distance to be shipped from Klemme, the best stock market west of Chicago!

METHODIST CHURCH NOTES
A. W. Gauger, Pastor

All services for the coming Sunday are planned with the Easter Season in mind. As in former years we are working up to this joyous event as a climax to the several lines of church activities.

On Easter Sunday we hope to receive either by transfer or into full membership such who may wish to unite with us. We will also administer the rites of baptism to children and adults to be baptized. If the pastor can assist you in arranging for this service will you kindly inform him.

An Easter Cantata is being prepared by the Junior League under the leadership of Mrs. Gauger. This will be put on on Easter Sunday evening.

The Liberty Sunday School is preparing an Easter program to be put on during the morning service of that day.

On Palm Sunday the sacrament of the Lord's Supper will be administered in both churches.

Weather Favors Large Pig Crop

Litters of pigs are apparently larger than usual this spring and the unusually favorable weather so far has favored saving a high percentage of those farrowed, in the opinion of E. L. Quaife, animal husbandry extension specialist of Iowa State College. This would indicate that the supply of hogs may be increased more by the present spring crop than has been anticipated

"Was Weak, Now Robust" Says Burlington Man

S. N. Shaffer, street car operator, of 810 Maple Street, Burlington, Iowa, had bad breakdown. Obliged to quit work often. Now in fine physical condition, thanks Tanlac for change

"I used to lose a week at a time," he said recently. "My weight was down to 125 lbs. and at times I could not stand up in my car from sheer weakness. I was nervous, dispirited, and a martyr to indigestion pains. The very sight or smell of food nauseated me. I was too filled with pain and discouragement to sleep at night, and felt myself slipping fast.

"How much longer I could have gone on, I don't know. But when I started on Tanlac I was close to the limit. Now my story is different. I've built up to 147 pounds, eat heartily of fried foods, pastries, etc. and suffer not the slightest discomfort. I'm on the job bright and early every day now. DR. W. B. CALDWELL AT THE AGE OF 83

Old Folks Need a Mild Laxative —Not a "Physic"

Most men and women past fifty must give to the bowels some occasional help, else they suffer from constipation. One might as well refuse to aid weak eyes with glasses as to neglect a gentle aid to weak bowels.

Is your present laxative, in whatever form, promoting natural bowel "regularity"—or must you purge and "physic" every day or two to avoid sick headache, dizziness, biliousness, colds, or sour, gassy stomach?

Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin helps to establish natural, regular bowel movement even for those chronically constipated. It never gripes, sickens or upsets the system. Besides, it is absolutely harmless and pleasant to take.

STORY FROM THE START

In the small New Jersey village of Straitsmouth, in the year 1749, Richard Lindsay, who tells the story, is a carefree youth whose chief activities are fishing and hunting. Proud of his marksmanship, he gives an exhibition before some villagers and a stranger, with whom they afterward dine at the tavern.

Everyone, it seemed, was eager to enlighten him, but Aaron, having the loudest voice and the least consideration for others, was the first to gain the stranger's ear. "The Black Panther," he explained, "is the name they give to one of the most bloodthirsty of these gentlemen of fortune. Like a beast of prey, he slays most savagely and wantonly, sparing neither man, woman nor child. Hardly ever, they say, does a victim escape to tell of the disaster. Only now and then, by a miracle, some strong swimmer has contrived to leap into the sea and keep afloat until some vessel has rescued him. And from survivors such as these we have learned the name and the cruelties of the dreadful Black Panther."

After this explanation, Aaron made haste to moisten his throat again, thus giving Isaac a chance to take up the tale. "Aaron may speak truth," he admitted, "but as for me, I hear another story. What they call the captain I know not and I care not, but 'tis the ship herself that is named the Black Panther, and instead of the skull and cross-bones, she flies a white flag with a black panther embroidered thereon. And all agree that while the other emblem is bad enough, yet when honest folks see the black panther at the peak they abandon all hope and commend their souls to God."

Now this, for Isaac, was a speech of great length, and when he had finished he made haste, as Aaron had done, to refresh himself with another mug of ale. But at once, and this time to my surprise, a third speaker was ready to add his version of the affair. This was Abner Moody, the village drunkard, who spent all of his waking hours in the taproom of the tavern.

"Begging your worship's pardon," he began in his high, shrill voice, "this is the way the story comes to my ears!" And he stressed the pronoun as if to imply that by the very process of reaching Abner's ears rumor was thereby transformed into truth. "Yesterday, at about this hour, I chanced to be right here, and two gentlemen were here, all the way from New York, and I listened to their talk, which was of the Black Panther. And thus the story comes to my ears that the Black Panther is neither the name of the captain nor of the vessel, but of something else.

At this Aaron looked highly indignant, as most of us are wont to do when any of our theories are doubted. "And what the devil," he inquired tartly, "do you mean by 'something else?'"

And thus, while of course neither Abner nor Aaron had so intended it, it happened that Abner's pause and Aaron's question were dramatically most effective, for every eye was now turned expectantly upon Abner. "By something else," he answered slowly and impressively, "I mean something else. I mean that the Black Panther is the beast itself; that the captain of this vessel has captured, somewhere in outlandish foreign parts, a black panther; and that he has tamed it and trained it to fight. And in a battle it slays more enemies than all the rest of the crew. One crunch of its jaws, and a man is gone. And it wears a gold chain around its neck. And it minds the captain. And that's what the Black Panther is!"

Those of us who did not laugh outright could not help but smile, for this was indeed a "traveler's yarn" with a vengeance. The stranger had not only one answer to his question, but three. Yet he skillfully managed to keep the good will of all, for, instead of selecting one explanation as the true one, he answered, "Well, I should say that we had best keep clear of all black panthers, be they man, ship or beast. If these tales be true, I think I shall refrain from venturing a cargo by sea."

But Aaron, by this time pretty well invigorated by the heady ale, hastened to defend the fighting qualities of the seamen of our coast. "Don't you fear," he cried. "Our ships go armed. They have their brave carronades and their brass six-pounders. They'll prove a match for all these vil—villainous pirates."

"Indeed, I believe so," the stranger assented heartily enough. "With the stout lads I see about me here, I would risk any venture. But no vessels set out from your snug little port. There's a harbor to the north of you, though—what do they call it? Cedar Inlet, that is the name. How soon, I wonder, could I ship some goods on some craft bound for the Indies?"

Proud to be of service, it was I myself who answered this query. "You would have to wait," I answered, "because the bark Eastern Star sails from the Inlet tomorrow, bound for Jamaica, and probably there won't be another vessel clearing for some little time."

He looked his disappointment. "Are you sure of that?" he asked. "They may not have finished loading her. Do you really think she sails so soon?"

"I'm positive," I maintained. "She sails shortly after midnight, on the turn of the tide. I was told by the son of one of the owners."

This evidently convinced him. "Then I lose my chance," he said regretfully. "Well 'what can't be cured,' as they say, 'must be endured.' And now I must be going. Master Ogden, I am much in your debt for the loan of your white mare, and my score with you, I believe is settled in full. And as for you, young man"—and he singled me out flatteringly from the rest—"I shall not soon forget your prowess with the rifle. I should not like to be the duck that comes within your range."

"Aye," Aaron broke in, "and he can wrestle, too. Can throw anyone in the vil—village."

The stranger regarded me with admiration. "I have always wondered at the craft of the wrestlers," he said simply. "Would you object to showing me a sample of your skill?"

"That's What the Black Panther Is."

More gratified and proud than ever, I assured him that I would gladly comply with his request. "But most of them," I explained, like the young cub that I was, "don't like to try it any more. Because they always get the worst of it."

"I would not think of troubling them," he declared. "You may throw me instead. Let us go outside on the turf, where I may fall softly. And take care that you don't break my bones."

Nothing loath, I followed him outside, and the others, nudging one another slyly, formed a ring about us. I removed my coat and waistcoat, and the stranger did likewise, his breadth of shoulder and depth of chest showing to advantage as he stepped briskly forward. Indeed, if I had not known that he was a peaceful merchant, unused to athletic sports, I might readily have regarded him as a worthy antagonist. But, as it was, with the kind-heartedness of confident youth, I felt that while I must still retain my prestige as the village champion, my real concern must be not to injure him or to cause him to fall too roughly. And therefore I may fairly say in my own behalf that I did not begin the encounter with my usual vigor, but sought only to come to grips quickly and bring the unequal contest to an end.

And truly the bout was an unequal one, though not in just the manner I had anticipated. Exactly what really happened I have never been able to recall with distinctness; in fact, I cannot take oath that I ever laid hands on the stranger at all. But that he laid hands on me was certain, for the next moment I found myself flat upon my back, with both shoulders pinned neatly to the ground, while my conqueror, with an agility unusual among peaceful members of the merchants' profession, leaped lightly to his feet, leaving me to follow suit as best I might.

If I had not been completely overcome with surprise, I am sure that I should have enjoyed the expressions on the faces of the audience, for their countenances displayed varying degrees of amazement and consternation. Finally Aaron spoke, with hesitation, as though doubtful whether or not he was telling the truth. "Dick got thrown," he announced; and as no one contradicted him (for there was, indeed, no possibility of contradiction) he concluded that the phenomenon had actually occurred, and immediately hazarded, "Try it again, Dick; try it again."

But the stranger shook his head, and began putting on his outer garments. "We would if I had the leisure," he said, "but unfortunately I must be on my way. The lad is a born wrestler, though; anyone could see that. His foot slipped on the grass; otherwise I should have been the one underneath."

This diplomatic explanation removed all traces of gloom from the faces of my friends; and although it did not deceive me, I concluded, wisely enough, that if he chose to put it in this light, that was his concern and not mine; and so followed his example by slipping on my coat. Forthwith he thrust his arm through mine, and drawing me a little to one side, said in a low tone: "I have driven the mare some distance; it would scarcely be right to use her again. But I have just remembered a matter of importance. Have you, by chance, a horse and wagon, and could you drive me a few miles before sundown? If so, I shall be glad to pay you well."

I answered that I had a conveyance such as he desired, and that I would gladly drive him as far as he wished to go, but that I had no wish to be paid. For instead of sulking at having been thrown in the wrestling match, I had the good sense to perceive that this man knew much more than I did, certainly about wrestling, and I shrewdly suspected about most other things in life as well.

Twenty minutes later we were jogging to the south'ard. The stranger had fallen silent, and as I knew enough not to chatter but to wait until spoken to, we were both of us left free either to enjoy our own thoughts or to delight the eye with the beauty of the evening. Yet after we had traversed some three miles in this manner, my attention was suddenly attracted elsewhere as we came abreast of Curlew island. Ever since we left home, indeed, I had noted the shrill whistling of curlew and plover, and had realized that a great flight of these birds was in progress; and now, as we came opposite the island, I could see, even at that distance, that many of these flocks were alighting there for the night. And immediately I resolved to rise before daylight the next morning and secure a bag of these long-legged waders, delicious enough to delight the most exacting epicure.

The stranger had for some time, as it seemed to me, been watching the coast line with close attention, and now all at once he laid a hand on my arm.

"My boy," he said, "I am greatly in your debt, but the hour is late, the road none of the best, and I cannot have you risk an injury in the darkness to the legs of your good horse or to your own neck. Also, for reasons of my own, I wish to enter the Cove on foot. So here we will part."

Once in the road, he thrust his hand in his pocket, drew out a couple of large coins and handed them to me.

"Not as payment, my lad," he observed, "but as a token from one man to another, and in memory of your shooting, at which"—he added with a smile that spoke volumes—"you are even more expert than you are at wrestling. Good-by; perhaps some day we shall meet again."

He waved his hand, walked off briskly down the road, and left me gazing after him, until presently I glanced at the coins, which I learned later that evening from my father were the beautiful golden doubloons of Spain. As I reviewed the events of the afternoon it seemed to me that a merchant's life was more varied and interesting than I had imagined it to me. Indeed, it seemed such a busy existence that I wondered where the merchant had found time to learn the art of wrestling with such skill. And so, still deep in thought, I turned around and squared away for home.

CHAPTER II

Out of the Fog.

By the time I had reached home and eaten my supper, thoughts of the morrow's sport had driven all else from my mind. With a relish which any hunter can appreciate, I made r my shotgun, powder-flask and pouch, and laid beside them my vorite rifle. These preparations pleted, I walked to the beach to at my dory, and finding that ev thing was in its proper place, I turned to the house and went to Never a heavy sleeper at any t but being able to doze, as the sa is, with one eye open, I was alw before a shooting expedition, than ever on the alert. Half a d times in the night I stirred, wake and once or twice even rose walked over to the window, to ad the ocean sleeping so peacefully der the stars, which shone in m tudes in the infinite distances of sky. Toward morning, however, k ly alive as I was to the weather its varying moods, I sensed, ever my sleep, that a change had co and when next I opened my ey saw that the starlight had faded was conscious that a faint, almost perceptible chill permeated the ro "Fog," I thought to myself, and tening to the window I found th light northeast wind had blown from the ocean this chilling, all- vading blanket, covering everyth with its mantle and blotting f sight every landmark around house.

At first, with that ebbing of cour which comes with the early daw decided to abandon my trip; but w my eye chanced to fall on my and rifle, they fired my enthusi anew, and with a shrug of my sh ders I determined to make the b of it, calculating that the sun, la in the day, would in all probabi burn away the fog. I dressed as qu ly as I could, breakfasted with g relish on some pilot biscuit and glass of milk, and with gun and r under my arm, made my way out doors and down to the beach. Th I found the dory, her rail, sides thwarts gemmed with moisture, as I had done so many times befo I seized her bow with joy in my o strength, ran her down to the wat edge, and a moment later had sea myself at the oars and was pull away, with long and steady strok for the island; taking care, for present, to keep close to the sho which was dimly outlined through fog, since I knew from experience h easy it is in such weather to lose on bearings completely in a very sh time.

Far inland, from some distant fa an irrepressible cock, after the memorial custom of his kind, shou aloud that day had come; and alm at once a rival, with no less vig flung the challenge back again. Th suddenly, far away from the east there came to my ears, dim and fa another sound which I could not co prehend, but which seemed, had su a thing been probable, like the muf reports of firearms. Instantly memory of yesterday's talk in the house came to my mind. "The Bl Panther," I repeated whimsically myself. "He is lurking and prowl out there in the fog."

This sound, whatever it was, s died away, and I continued, with more thought of it, to cover the d tance in fine style, and presently, w great suddenness, as is always case with objects in a fog, the sh of the island sprang into being bef my eyes; and an instant later I h driven the dory's bow deep into yielding sand, and jumping out, h hauled her a boat's length up beach and planted the anchor at t base of the reeds. Impatient for t morning's sport, I took from the dor bow a dozen wooden decoys, rud whittled to represent curlew and pl er, each supported on a long stick be firmly implanted in the sand. Th with these lures in one hand and w gun and rifle in the other, I made way across the island to the east shore, set out the decoys, head to wind, on a tempting sand spit; an gunshot away, at the edge of the dergrowth, scooped out for myself narrow blind just deep enough so th when seated, my head was below tips of the surrounding reeds. Th I loaded both gun and rifle with utmost care, and at last was ready what might befall.

For some time yet, however, I doomed to wait with ill-concealed patience. I knew that it was eit sunrise, or very near it, but no li as yet could penetrate this barrier fog. And to render me more restl still, the ceaseless whistling of shore-birds told me that though th were hidden from my sight, they w all about me in myriads.

Pioneer's First Love Affair Quite Serious

Davy Crockett had little schooling, but his language in describing his first love affair is expressive if not entirely grammatical. While Crockett was working for John Kennedy, a Tennessee Quaker, Kennedy's niece came for a visit.

"I soon found myself head over heels in love with this girl," he wrote in his autobiography. "When I would think of saying anything to her my heart would begin to flutter like a duck in a puddle; and if I tried to outdo it and speak, it would get right smack up in my throat and choke me like a cold potato. It bore on my mind in this way till at last I concluded I must die if I didn't broach the subject; and so I determined to begin and hang on a-trying to speak till my heart would get out of my throat one way or t'other.

"And so one day at it I went, and after several trials I could say a little. I told her how well I loved her; that she was the darling object of my soul and body; and I must h her or else I should pine down nothing and just die away with c sumption. But she was an hon girl and didn't want to deceive body. She told me she was engaged her cousin. This news was worse me than war, pestilence or famin but still I knowed I could not h myself. I saw quick enough my c was dough, and I tried to cool off fast as possible, but I had har safety pipes enough, as my love so hot as mighty nigh to burst boilers."—Kansas City Times.

ORCHARD GLEANINGS

PRUNE FOUR-YEAR-OLD GRAPEVINES

It should not be very difficult to prune four-year grapevines, that they may conform to the single-stem Kniffen type of training. The fruit of the past season was borne directly on shoots that made all of their growth during the past summer. These shoots are now classed as canes. The former canes from which the shoots grew are now worthless for fruiting purposes, but in some types of training serve for some years to support the fruit canes that arise from time to time. With the Kniffen types of training, the growth older than one year is almost completely cut away. In pruning according to the Kniffen training, spurs which are but the current year's growth, shortened to a length of two or three buds, are much used. The ideal vine pruned and trained to the single-stem four-cane Kniffen method should include two canes of the current season's growth, arising from just below the level of the top wire, or near the head of the vine. One cane will be tied in the spring to the right along the top wire, while the other will be tied to the left. The amount and character of the cane growth made will largely determine the number of buds to be left on each cane. With especially vigorous vines 12 to 14 may be allowed on each. In addition to the two canes from the head two or more others are cut back to spurs of two to three buds. These will throw shoots the coming season, which in turn become the fruiting canes to be utilized one year from the present time. After the two canes are chosen and the spurs provided all other cane growth is cut cleanly away in this location. Just below the level of the lower wire, two more canes are selected as above directed and spurs provided for, but the two canes to be tied along the lower wire are pruned two to four buds shorter than the canes at the upper wire. Thus the vines after pruning will have four fruit canes, two near each wire level, and spurs at each level to provide fruit canes for 1928.

Prevent Pear Blight by Careful Winter Pruning

The dormant season, with an absence of succulent growing plant tissue, affords suitable conditions for checking the destructive pear blight disease. The disease, which is commonly known as "fire blight," is characterized by a death of blossoms, young twigs, and later larger limbs, thereby giving twigs of affected trees the appearance of having been scorched by fire. The blight is produced by a bacterial germ and is the cause of much concern among fruit growers, especially during the growing season. It is during the winter months, only, that effective control measures can be put into practice.

Since fire blight overwinters in dead twigs and limbs, killed mainly during the previous season's growth, the pruning out and destruction of affected parts during the winter months eliminates the source of infection for the following year's growth. Despite considerable experimentation which has been done in connection with the control of fire blight, no method of prevention with spray material has been found, due to the manner in which the disease works beneath the surface of the bark, where it is not reached with spray materials.

Late Winter Right Time for Cutting the Scions

Scions for cleft-grafting should be cut during the late winter, according to the New York State College of Agriculture at Ithaca. "Cut them while they are dormant," says Prof. Joseph Oskamp, the fruit man at the college, "pack them in moist sawdust, and store them in a cool cellar until they are to be used in the spring. The grafting should be done at about the time for applying the delayed dormant spray, when the buds are showing green.

"Many orchards," declares Professor Oskamp, "contain old trees of undesirable or seedling fruit. If the trees are healthy and not too old, a desired variety can be grafted on them to good advantage, if the stock of the original tree is suitable. For example, it is not generally profitable to top-work Duchess of Oldenburg or Alexander, as the first does not give a healthy growth to the trees worked upon it, and the second blights badly. Careful selection pays in picking varieties to use. They should be from vigorous twigs of the preceding summer's growth. Water sprouts may be used if the wood is hard and the buds are well matured."

Get After Pruning

If the pruning has not been done, get after it. It should be out of the way before spring. Do not cut the trees too heavily. We have noticed that there has not been so much growth on the peach trees this past season. Go over each one and prune if necessary, but do not do a lot of unnecessary cutting. Thin out the apple trees and cut back the tallest lend ers, but do not head back generally. As soon as the work is done get the prunings out of the orchard.

Wilt-Resistant Melon Is Tested

Conqueror Found to Be of Very Good Quality and Sold Readily.

Conqueror, the wilt-resistant variety of watermelon developed by the federal Department of Agriculture, not only has proved to be resistant to this serious disease when grown in Illinois but also was found to be a very good quality and sold quite easily, especially to the local trade, according to H. W. Anderson, associate chief of pomological pathology at the college of agriculture, University of Illinois, who had charge of the test. In many cases, the trade preferred the Conqueror melon to the Tom Watson, which has recently been the favorite market melon. The test of the wilt-resistant variety is being made in White county, where the horticultural department of the agricultural college has been growing the variety for the past three years.

Conqueror Is Ready Sale.

The ready sale of the Conqueror melon and its high resistance to wilt has encouraged growers to continue planting it, and many will give it a trial this season, according to Anderson. A limited amount of seed of the variety may be obtained from White county farm bureau.

Watermelon wilt, against which the Conqueror variety is resistant, is a soil-carried disease and in many of the old watermelon-growing sections of Illinois it has become so severe that the growing of melons has had to be abandoned. The disease lives for many years in the soil, with the result that when land once becomes infested it cannot be used for at least ten years for growing melons.

Development of Conqueror.

The Conqueror melon was developed a number of years ago in an effort to meet the situation. At that time the round type of melon was popular. Later the long type, such as the Tom Watson, was introduced and became the favorite market melon. For this reason, the wilt-resistant variety known as the Conqueror was almost forgotten. Recently when the wilt became so bad that it eliminated the melon industry from many sections, growers sought relief through their farm advisers and the agricultural college. In an effort to help solve the problem, the college started testing the Conqueror variety in White county for the purpose of finding out whether or not it was resistant under Illinois conditions and whether or not it would meet the existing market demands.

Lead Arsenate on Apples Removed by New Solution

An efficient and inexpensive method of removing excessive arsenical residues from apples sprayed for the control of the codling moth has been devised by the Colorado experiment station. The details of this method, worked out by Dr. Wm. P. Headdon, chemist, appear in "Removal of Arsenate of Lead From Sprayed Fruit," recently published as Press Bulletin 63.

According to the bulletin, the new solution is cheap, quick-acting, effective, and causes no bad effects upon the fruit. It is made by taking four pounds each of soda ash and ordinary table salt and dissolving them in one hundred pounds of water. This solution can be used in either wooden or iron vessels. It should be heated to 100 degrees Fahrenheit, but should not be raised materially above that temperature.

Enough apples are then added to the solution to cover the surface thickly. The apples should be stirred gently with a mop or some equivalent instrument, care being taken not to bruise them. The stirring should be continued for ten minutes. On removal from the bath the apples should be rinsed to remove the wash liquid.

Farm Hints

High yields are made, not born of chance.

* * *

It is a wise farmer who knows his own planting seed.

* * *

Grow trees while you wait; you are going to wait anyway.

Blessed is the farmer who trusteth in legumes, for his soil shall be enriched.

* *

Rye seed that is more than a year old cannot be depended on to give a good stand of grain.

* * *

Where soil fertility is a problem the absence of a legume in the rotation hastens the date of the sheriff's sale.

* * *

The enthusiastic gardener thinks that "a little too much is just about right" in the matter of quality of vegetables.

* * *

Sweet clover hay has feeding value almost equal to alfalfa. Although more of it is wasted, it is still an economical feed at $6.50 a ton.

* * *

A farm machinery hospital saves time and money and during cold winter and early spring days is a very busy place for the successful farmer.

DENBY IS NAMED ON LEGION COMMITTEE

Edwin Denby, former secretary of the United States navy, was named by the national executive committee of the American Legion recently as one of the new men to serve on the Legion's naval committee this year.

The work and recommendations of the next national covention of the naval affairs committee will be especially important this year because of the national defense situation in congress. The committee at the last national convention in Philadelphia through its resolutions, which were approved by the convention, outlined some of the subjects which will receive the attention of the new committee. Some of these recommendations are:

No reduction in the enlisted personnel of the navy.

Establishment of a sound policy to insure an adequate merchant marine.

Construction of a naval base on the west coast.

Development and construction of submarines.

Compulsory two years' service for all graduates of the naval academy.

Maintenance of an adequate naval reserve force.

Technical education of reserve officers.

Protection of Americans and American interests in foreign countries.

Others appointed on the naval affairs committee are: Nelson R. Pickering, Ansonia, Conn.; Charles Svenson, Panama; Ed Owens, Galveston, Texas; John A. Beckwith, Portland, Ore.; Dr. A. J. Argall, Denver, Colo.; Clarence A. Wills, Kissimmee, Fla.; W. L. Doolan, Jr., Louisville, Ky.; A. L. Swazey, Taunton, Mass.; Charles F. Macklin, Baltimore, Md., and Townsend Boyer, New Jersey.

179,000 Have Finished Vocational Training

The work of training disabled World war veterans incapicitated for their pre-war occupations in new vocations has been virtually completed, according to Watson B. Miller, chairman of the national rehabilitation committee of the American Legion, whose office is in Washington, D. C. Only about 1,000 veterans are still receiving vocational training under the United States Veterans' bureau out of nearly 180,000 who were granted training by the bureau.

The vocational training effort has cost the government approximately $650,000,000, Miller said. The greatest number of veterans in training at any one time was 132,000, in the spring of 1922. A total of 334,053 men applied for training courses.

The rehabilitation survey groups, which have been handling the vocational training work, have been virtually abolished and their functions transferred to the claims and ratings boards in the various regional offices of the veterans' bureau.

Birmingham Plans to Land 1929 Convention

The Birmingham (Ala.) American Legion delegation to the 1927 convention of the Legion in Paris next September will request that the convention recommend Birmingham as the place for the 1929 convention, according to tentative plans announced by Legion officials of Birmingham.

The 1928 convention will be held in San Antonio, Texas, that choice having been made by the last convention which was held in Philadelphia.

Birmingham post No. 1 in anticipation of entertaining the national gathering in 1929, has inaugurated a membership campaign with 3,000 as the goal.

Legionnaires Give Blood

Virtually the entire membership of the Henry H. Houston II post of the American Legion of Philadelphia volunteered to give blood when transfusion appeared necessary to save the life of Frank E. Myers, member of the post. One of the volunteers was selected, but no transfusion was necessary. Rex B. White, another member of the post seriously ill, has been furnished with blood by several of his comrades.

To Build Club House

Adjusted service certificates, upon which money can now be loaned, will be used to finance the building of a club house for Clyde B. Jones post of the American Legion of Oconto, Wis., under plans approved at a recent meeting. The insurance certificates of members will be used as collateral in securing a loan from banks. More than $42,000 has been pledged to the club house fund in this form.

Champ Oyster Eater

Raw! Raw! for Bill Franklin of Washington, D. C. At an oyster supper held by Vincent B. Costello Post of The American Legion, William F. Franklin, post adjutant, set a record of 70 raw bivalves guzzled at one sitting. After more training Franklin expects to be able to hold his own at any Legion oyster feast, he said.

First Playhouse Located

According to a writer in the Pathfinder Magazine the first playhouse or theater in the United States was located in Williamsburg, Va. It was built in 1716 during the regime of the colonial governor, Alexander Spotswood. Charles Stagg and his wife, Mary, essentially dancers, contracted with William Leingston for the theater. Some years before, in 1665, the court in Virginia acted as play censor also, having passed judgment on a performance of "Ye Bare and Ye Cub" to satisfy a complaint that the costumes were objectionable. The court found nothing objectionable, however.

Writer Claims Vanity Is Spoiling Language

Vanity is corrupting the French language, says Abel Bonnard, a writer of note.

It is vanity, he says, that leads people to prefer a new word, coined or from another language, to the old one they really know and understand.

"The public likes to be fooled," he remarks, agreeing with Mr. Barnum.

He cites many words used currently to describe things long used and with names of their own, but which, for commercial purposes, like the hard-working rabbit skin in the fur business, have to be baptized anew to create that "desire to buy" in the customer.

This vanity to have the latest thing, even when only the name is new, Bonnard regards as one of the chief differences between the passing generation of conservative people and the "modernists." Many people who are "up to date," he observes, shy at expressing themselves clearly and need obscure words and phrases to portray the haziness of their own minds.

Lost Empire Through Unwillingness to Act

Hesitancy in the last month of his career caused Pompey to lose his chance to make himself master of Rome and the ancient world. He had collected an army of 500,000 men in northern Greece. His rival, Caesar, had less than a third as many when he followed Pompey. For months the hostile armies watched each other warily hesitating to attack, though Pompey had so many more men it is difficult to account for his lack of energy. Finally the clash came and Pompey's troops won the day. Caesar had to retreat and Pompey might have crushed him had he pursued diligently, or he might have crossed into Italy and won back the peninsula. Instead, he followed Caesar leisurely, and the decisive battle did not come until Caesar had had time to rally his forces and to choose the battlefield. Pompey was driven in flight to Pharsalia, fled to Egypt and there was treacherously slain by one of his own officers.—Kansas City Star.

The Klemme Legion-Auxiliary enjoyed a banquet at the Idle Hour Theatre Friday night, which they gave in honor of the people who took part in their recent home talent play. All report they had a good time.

Farmers in the vicinity of Klemme have been busy the past few days hauling out lime to their farms. The condition of the roads makes it necessary to hitch four horses to their wagons to pull a small load lime.

The road on east Main street was blocked off last week at the Emil Patet corner to the north and south road on acount of a bad mud hole in front of the Steiman residence. Cars were getting stuck there so it was deemed advisable to close the street for a few days.

A flock of eight wild geese, attracted by the electric lights of the town, circled over Klemme Friday night at about eleven o'clock during the light rain and sleet which was falling. The geese flew down low enough at times to be easily discernable in the darkness.

Mr. and Mrs. J. Herbert Alliwood, of New York City, are visiting this week with Mr. and Mrs. Fred Bachman. Mr. Alliwood is playing next week at the Capitol Theatre in Des Moines with one of the Publix Stage Presentations. Mrs. Alliwood is a sister of Mrs. Bachman.

The J. N. Day store had a coffee demonstration Saturday and served hot coffee, cookies and crackers all day. The day was chilly and damp and the coffee "hit the spot." Mrs. Day presided at the coffee making and reveived many compliments on the excellent coffee she prepared.

Mrs. R. A. Jorgenson was hostess to a birthday dinner Saturday evening in honor of Rev. A. W. Gauger, whose birthday was March 21st, and R. A. Jorgenson, whose birthday was March 24th. Those who helped eat birthday cake were Rev. Calvin Grosshuesch, Prof. M. F. Penrod, and the Rev. Gauger family.

Both the kiddies and the teachers enjoyed the week end vacation last week from Thursday until Monday. The teachers spent Thursday and Friday visiting the schools at Mason City and profited thereby, acording to their reports. Needless to say that the pupils welcomed a few days of play.

Mrs. Ernest Palmby and baby, of Vernon Center, Minn., came Sunday evening and remained until Tuesday visiting with her mother, Mrs. Henry Wille, who has been ill for some time. From her she went to Buffalo Center for a short visit where she was met by Mr. Palmby. Mrs. Palmby came to Klemme with R. W. Elder and J. N. Day, who had been at Vernon Center on a visit.

The Klemme Hatchery is now going top speed. Eggs are being put into the big machine every week, and likewise chicks are coming off every week. Those who have not visited this new Klemme industry and are interested should take a few minutes off and see what it is like. Mr. Blickendorfer, the owner, gladly welcomes visitors and is never too busy to explain the workings of the big incubator.

When Mr. and Mrs. Emil Patet started for Mason City Friday shortly after the noon hour in their Ford Coupe they met with an accident a couple of miles south of Garner near the Whitsel farm. At that particular place on the highway was a bad mud hole and observing a car coming from the north Mr. Patet stopped his car at the side of the road to await the other car and let him get across first. The driver of the car from the north perhaps failed to see the mud hole in time and as a result he lost control of his Nash touring car and it struck the Patet car full along side smashing the left fenders, running board, dishing in the wheels and otherwise damaging Patet's car Mr. L. C. Rosencrans of Algona was the driver of the Nash and acording to Patet Mr. Rosencrans assumed all the blame and will stand the resulting repair bill. The Rosecrans car was not badly damaged in the acident.

M. O. Barr, manager of the Idle Hour wishes the Times to enlighten the movie fans on the Mysterious Miller act Saturday night, which went over rather stale. Mr. Miller's assistant was sick and he endeavored to use a substitute he had trained for a couple of days. The young man "bawled" things up and things did not "pan out" for the magician. The lady assistant also does the mind reading and this explains why that part of the act was missing. The attraction was guaranteed to Mr. Barr as being high class. Mr. Barr was disappointed, but the Times sees no reason to blame him as we have a copy of the letter Mr. Miller sent him asking for a booking date and it looked O K.

The Legion

The American Legion is an organization that lives and teaches, first of all, the true principles of human democracy. It seeks to make good citizens, and to establish a high order of citizenship. It seeks to make better men and more useful men. Every ex-service man should be a member of the American Legion.

Length of Our Days

A Philadelphia doctor, described as an internationally known surgeon and scientist, reached his ninetieth year the other day without kowing why. He admits that he knows no more than anybody else about the secret of living long. It just happened, he explained, and perhaps that was as good an explanation as any. Some people just keep on living in spite of the laws of health, and others die young observing all the rules. Nevertheless, the laws of health are not to be despised. There is no reason to doubt that they are lengthening the lives of many people.

It Pays

Nowadays when people want anything they look in the home newspaper to find where to get it. If they want the services of a painter, a carpenter, a plumber or any other tradesman, they expect to find his card in the paper. They look for it. If they find one the advertiser gets the job. Judicious advertising pays.

Infant Prodigies All Lived but Few Years

The Manchester Guardian tells about the little granddaughter of the late Archbishop Temple, who at the age of thirteen had a 15,000-word story accepted for publication. Such cases of brilliance at an early age were not rare and are not unknown even in our day. One of these infants was the son of Evelyn, the diarist, who wrote of him: "At two and a half years old he could read perfectly any of the English, Latin, French or Gothic letters, pronouncing the first three languages perfectly." A little later Greek and Latin were added. The younger brother of Montcalm could read Latin fluently at four and knew Greek and Hebrew at six. Christian Heinecken, born in Luebeck in 1721, however, takes the cake. This wonder child had read the Bible when barely a year old, historians affirm, and before he was three he had mastered geography and history and was proficient in three languages. But what were the results? Evelyn's son died before he was six; Montcalm at eight and the marvelous Heinecken passed away before he was four.—Pierre Van Paassen, in Atlanta Constitution.

Japanese Continue to Pay Honors to Perry

A shrine to Commodore Perry stands on the heights overlooking Mississippi bay, near Yokohama, to which thousands of Japanese make pilgrimages every year. They honor Perry among their famous ancestors, as having opened up their country to communicate with the world, resulting in the overthrow of the Shogunate and establishment of the golden Meiji reign.

Few people know that in 1918 Japanese living in Seattle financed a trip to Japan of the sole survivor of Perry's expedition, a sailor named Hardy, in order that honor might be done him. When he arrived in Tokyo the streets were decorated and huge crowds lined up to see him. He was received by the mikado at his Chrysanthemum party, and then wined, dined and feted by the nobility for months. He was about eighty years old, a typical old tar, and did not seem to know what it was all about, except that he was having the time of his life.—F. S. Carr, in Adventure Magazine.

PRANK ADDED TO HEAVY STAGE ROLE

When Douglas Fairbanks was playing the role of a young comedian on the legitimate stage before his entrance into motion pictures, he declined to limit his comedy to his role In one play the villain, after a scene with the leading lady, had to pick up his hat, a black derby, and make a dignified exit. On the last night of the run Fairbanks, in some mysterious manner, smuggled an eight-pound shot into the hat. The actor started to pick it up, but could not move it. He tried again, unsuccessfully. Then he looked into the hat, saw the shot and the expression of his face was worth going miles to see. He could not go out on a winter's day without the hat and was afraid if he picked it up the weight of the shot would break the crown and cause the shot to fall on the floor. So he slid one hand under the hat, lifted it up gingerly, put his arm around it and made his exit.—George Broadhurst, in Saturday Evening Post.

The Royal Carrot

Whenever King George goes horseback riding in Hyde park a groom is awaiting his return to Buckingham palace with a carrot from the royal garden. After dismounting the king gives the carrot to his horse and the horse gratefully rubs his nose against the king's arm. It is said that the discerning animal will not accept the carrot from anyone else and refuses to be led away without it.

Whale Stops Liner

When a big French liner was approaching Havana one night not long ago the ship suddenly trembled, and everyone thought there had been a collision.

At daybreak, however, the engines were reversed, and there appeared on the surface a whale, sixty feet long, which had been caught in the propellers and had entirely held up the ship.

Peculiar Sight

Probably one of the first men to see the sun set twice on the same day is an English airman. Flying from London to Paris late one evening, he saw the sun go down. A passenger then asked him to climb another 5,000 or 6,000 feet. There the sun came into view once more, and they watched it sink below the horizon for the second time.

Looking Ahead

Doctor—And, if you get run over remember my telephone number.

Arthur—Darling, will you marry me?

Olive—Nothing stirring.

Arthur—Oh, that's all right—you won't have to do the cooking.

Lesson for April 3

PETER BECOMES A DISCIPLE OF JESUS

LESSON TEXT—Mark 1:14-18; 29-31.
GOLDEN TEXT—Come ye after Me and I will make you to become fishers of men.
PRIMARY TOPIC—Peter Follows Jesus.
JUNIOR TOPIC—The Great Decision.
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Making the Great Decision.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Answering Christ's Call.

I. Jesus Preaching in Galilee (vv. 14, 15).

The reason for Christ changing from Judea to Galilee was the growing opposition to Him. He accepted the fate of John, the Baptist, as foreshadowing His own death. The rejection of the forerunner meant the rejection of Him whose advent he heralded.

1. What He preached (v. 14).

The gospel of the kingdom of God which meant the good news of the near approach of the kingdom of God when the rule of God as predicted by the prophets would be realized.

2. How He preached it (v. 15).

(1) "The time is fulfilled and the kingdom of God is at hand."

This meant that the time had now come for the appearance of the Messiah and the establishment of His kingdom.

(2) "Repent."

This meant that the people should turn around, change their minds and attitude toward Christ and accept Him as their King. The message of repentance is one which needs to be sounded out today.

(8) "Believe the gospel." Then, as now, men needed to believe the gospel of Christ.

II. Jesus Called Peter and Andrew to Become Fishers of Men. Jesus called this pair of brothers for service in His kingdom. It is usually best to perform the Lord's service in pairs. This has a threefold value. It makes testimony effective; it provides fellowship on the part of workers and protection of the witnesses. It is to be noted that these men had previously been called to be disciples of Christ (John 1:36-42). They are now called to service. Observe:

1. From what they were called (v. 16).

They were called from positions of definite service. They were fishers. God always chooses His servants from the ranks of the employed.

2. To what they were called (v. 17).

To be "fishers of men." They no doubt had been successful fishers. The qualities which made them good fishermen, namely, patience, bravery to face the storm and darkness of the night, and perseverance, which led them to toil all night though no fish were caught, would make them good fishers of men.

3. Their obedience (v. 18).

"Straightway they forsook their nets and followed Him."

To obey meant sacrifice, painful separation, the giving up of all business interests and leaving father behind. Regardless of the cost, they yielded prompt obedience.

III. Jesus Entering Simon Peter's House (vv. 29-31)

Soon after the call of Peter and Andrew, Jesus called James and John, after which they entered the synagogue at Capernaum, where He cast out an evil spirit. This miracle caused His fame to be spread abroad.

1. A loved one ill (v. 30).

When Jesus entered this home He found Peter's mother-in-law with a burning fever. We know that among the closest followers of Jesus there are suffering ones and anxious and burdened hearts. To all such Jesus comes with loving sympathy and power to help.

2. "They tell Him of her" (v. 31).

This was the proper thing to do. We should bring to the attention of Jesus those of our families who have need of bodily or spiritual healing.

3. He healed her (v. 31).

"He came and took her by the hand and lifted her up." This act showed the nearness, sympathetic tenderness and power of Jesus. At His touch the fever departed and strength was imparted to her body.

4. "She ministered unto them" (v. 31).

This act shows:

(1) That the cure was instantaneous and complete. When Jesus heals there is no halfway business.

(2) Gratitude on the part of the one healed. She thus expressed her appreciation of what Jesus had done. All those who have experienced the healing power of Jesus will express their gratitude in loving service to the Lord and His disciples.

God's Indulgence

God is not over-indulgent. He is too loving for that. Because He loves us, and plans for our growth, He cannot let our faults go without correction. His justice stands side by side with His mercy, and cannot be evaded or left out of account.—Southern Methodist.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

War Activities in China Focus Interest of the World.

THE killing of a number of American and British citizens by Bolshevik Chinese mobs during the week ending March 26 has brought the crisis in China to the verge of war. Ultimatums have been delivered by the American and British commanders demanding that the lives of their nationals be protected. Failure to comply will mean that Nanking will be treated as a military area subject to bombardment and attack by the American and British forces. Following the fall of Shanghai to the Cantonese army the armies of the north China war lord evacuated the cities of Nanking and Chinkiang without a fight, but following the occupation of Nanking by the Cantonese the south China forces opened fire, on March 24, on groups of foreigners concentrated there awaiting embarkation on American destroyers, killing some Americans and some British. There were 155 Americans included in the group of foreigners subjected to the Chinese bombardment, which was at once replied to by both American and British warships. The foreigners were concentrated for evacuation on a hill in the northern part of the city, where the Standard Oil company plant is located. The shelling by the southern irregulars began shortly before 4 p. m. A few minutes later the United States destroyers Noa and Preston, which had 145 American women and children aboard, and the British cruiser Emerald shelled the area surrounding the hill. With the object of opening the way for the immediate evacuation of the foreigners, combined American and British forces were landed.

America, a number of European nations and Japan were represented by land and naval contingents at Shanghai when the Cantonese army captured the native city on March 20. The main force of soldiers and marines landed for the protection of the foreign settlement consisted of 2,500 United States marines and 15,000 British soldiers. To these were added small numbers of French and Japanese sailors and marines. The fall of the city was followed by a general strike of factory workers in all industries involving several thousand workmen, bringing with it a reign of terror throughout both the native and foreign sections. The Central Labor union, immediately following the declaration of a general strike, issued pistols and ammunition to 500 workmen, who immediately went gunning for British troops and police and evacuating northern soldiers.

Because of the presence of American and British troops in the foreign section disorders there were minimized to a large extent, but disturbances raged in the adjoining native areas. There was constant sniping from alleyways and second story windows. In the northern, or Chapei, district of the city, adjacent to the railway station, laborers attempted to avenge themselves upon a force of about 8,000 northern soldiers, who battled for the small district, unable to escape.

American marines guarded the Markham road bridge leading from the native city into the foreign settlement, and prevented the Cantonese army from entering the foreign section of the city. This bridge is a strategic point in the factory district, particularly susceptible to labor agitations, and an important thoroughfare, the scene of many conflicts in the past between the Chinese and foreigners. At this point one American was wounded.

By March 23 Admiral C. S. Williams, in command of the United States naval forces, and Colonel Hill, in command of the American marines, had rearranged their forces to meet any recrudescence of the rioting, looting, burning, and killing which raged in the native section for 86 hours after its fall to the south China nationalists. The American officials expresssed confidence that the Cantonese regulars, then holding the native city, would prevent any new disturbances.

A BOMB burst in the European situation on March 19 when Italy notified the British government of its anxiety over the claimed massing of Yugo-Slavokian troops on the Albanian frontier. At the same time Italy warned France against supplying Yugo-Slavia with war materials, and claimed to have evidence that France was secretly aiding the Slavs in preparing for an invasion of Albania which is a pawn in the struggle between Italy and Yugo-Slavia for dominance in the Balkans and the new revolution, if it comes, will represent the Yugo-Slavs' effort to secure the overlordship of Albania, which now is held by Italy.

England took immediate steps to prevent the possibility of war in the Balkans. The English government sided with Italy, and for the first time since the visit of Sir Austen Chamberlain to Leghorn, Italy, the British and French policies were brought into sharp conflict through the Italo-French struggle for Balkan supremacy. Since last October the British and Italian policies in the Mediterranean and Balkans have been absolutely in agreement, but the Belgrade gesture was the first open indication of the extent to which the British support of Italy goes.

The amount of publicity given the incident cleared the atmosphere, and by the end of the week the war cloud that had so suddenly arisen had almost entirely disappeared.

THE sessions of the preparatory disarmament commissions opened at Geneva on March 21. At the first sessions Lord Robert Cecil submitted the British draft of the proposed convention for reducing armaments which tacitly supported the objections raised in the United States memorandum against the French theory of the "potentiality of war," elaborated on by M. Paul-Boncour, which includes all the industrial, financial, economic, and agricultural resources of the nations in a labyrinthine complexity to achieve disarmament.

The British proposal leaves the figures on the sizes of armies, navies, and air forces blank, but Lord Cecil intimated he favors basing a military organization on population and the proportion of the existant forces with due account for the geographical location.

On the 23rd M. Paul-Boncour appealed to Hugh Gibson, the American delegate to the conference, to accept the French proposals for a disarmament treaty. He pointed out that it provides that the United States, as well as Russia, be represented on the permanent disarmament commission, although America is not a member of the league. The French plan proposes the junking of the Washington treaty by providing a global allocation of tonnage for navies, permitting each power to build whatever category of craft it pleases. The proposition provides for the allotment of a maximum cubic centimetrage and amount of horse-power to be developed by motors of airplanes. It also provides for a permanent disarmament committee sitting at Geneva to control disarmament everywhere.

All the great powers, the United States, Great Britain, Japan, and Italy, oppose the French plan, leaving only the little entente supporting it.

Count von Bernstorff, the German delegate, demanded that the league disarmament commission proceed to execute the Versailles treaty and the league covenant reducing all armaments.

"The states already disarmed by the treaties are entitled to insist on general disarmament," he said. "Germany now is a member of the league and enjoys all the rights of the organization. We anticipate an epoch when the only war possible is the league against an aggressor, and no state should be permitted to be strong enough to defy all the members. Germany can support only a practical solution—reduction to a general level for all armaments."

A FEDERAL court decision rendered in New York on March 23 holds it unlawful to possess grape juice that has fermented and contains a sufficient amount of alcohol to make it intoxicating. Quoting section 29, title 2, of the national prohibition act, Judge Hand read:

"The penalties provided in this act against the manufacture of liquor without a permit shall not apply to a person who manufactures nonintoxicating cider and fruit juices exclusively for use in his own home, but such cider and fruit juices shall not be sold or delivered except to persons who have permits to manufacture vinegar."

He then declared:

"I can hardly regard grape juice containing 13 per cent of alcohol as nonintoxicating. Possession of grape juice for home use which was nonintoxicating when manufactured by the possessor, becomes unlawful under the act whenever the liquor becomes intoxicating, whether through natural fermentation or otherwise."

A POLITICAL move of more than usual moment was the announcement by former Postmaster General Burleson of his support of Gov. Al Smith for the Democratic nomination for President. General Burleson has been a supporter of William G. McAdoo for the nomination, but on March 23 was reported as saying that Governor Smith "is the most available man in the Democratic party for the Democratic nomination in 1928, and if nominated will carry every state in the solid South."

THE American army good will flyers who have been touring South America are now well on their way home. By the 24th they had reached French Guiana. On the 21st they made a record flight for the trip, covering 1,100 miles, landing at Para, Brazil, at the mouth of the Amazon river. On the 23rd the bodies of Capt. C. F. Woolsey and Lieut. John W. Benton, of the good will crew, who were killed in the accident to the "Detroit" at Buenos Aires, arrived at New York.

THE United States has notified Mexico that March 28 will be the end of the smuggling treaty between this country and Mexico. This is significant because this treaty, among other things, prohibits the shipment of arms to Mexican revolutionists without the knowledge of the Calles government.

The abrogation of the convention makes possible the lifting of the arms embargo on the shipment of arms into Mexico. With the smuggling treaty in operation the lifting of the arms embargo would have little punitive or disciplinary effect if directed against the Mexican government on account of its confiscation of the property of American citizens under the oil and land laws. With it removed the decks will be cleared and this government will be empowered to move if the President decides drastic action is necessary to protect American property in Mexico.

WISCONSIN and Minnesota have attempted to impose taxes on shares of national bank stock but a decision of the United States Supreme court holds the state laws in these states to be in violation of a federal law prohibiting rates in excess of those upon "other moneyed capital in the hands of individual citizens."

Both cases involved the interpretation of section 5219 of revised statutes, which sanction the taxation of shares of national banks in a state with the restriction that "the taxation shall not be at a greater rate than is assessed upon other moneyed capital in the hands of individual citizens of such state."

The court held that competition may exist between capital invested in national banks and other moneyed capital, even though the competition deal with some but not all phases of the business of national banks.

In the Minnesota case it was shown that under the statutes of that state shares of national banks and of other banks and of mortgage loan companies are taxed at a higher rate than money or credits used in other forms of enterprise.

A TOTAL of 2,314,905 visitors were registered at the 19 national parks and 82 national monuments of the United States during 1926, a gain of 260,643 over the previous year, according to a statement issued by Dr. Hubert Work, secretary of the interior. The total receipts increased from $670,920 to $826,454, although the automobile fees in many of the parks were cut in half.

Napoleon Bonaparte

(Part II)

FOR the son of a Corsican lawyer to plan a world empire, nowadays, would be sheer insanity. But in Napoleon Bonaparte's time and country almost anything was possible to the man who knew how to use his chances. Tavern waiters became field marshals; servants rose to dukes. For the first time in France's history it was the man, not his ancestry, that counted. Bonaparte, being the greatest genius in France, rose highest in the mighty upheaval that followed the overthrow of old customs. Having, as first consul, set matters to rights at home, he drew sword against all Europe. Heretofore long, time-wasting campaigns and acres of red tape had marked every war. Bonaparte changed all this. Whirlwind campaigns and defiance of all outworn military traditions formed the keynote of his warfare. On May 13, 1800, he hurried an army across the Alps, captured Piedmont by a brilliant victory over the Austrians at Marengo, June 14, and dictated peace terms to Austria. Other countries, scared by the example, followed suit, and, for the first time in many years, universal peace seemed established all over the civilized world.

Meantime, in France, Bonaparte was forwarding his personal ambitions to such good effect that, when the project of crowning him emperor of the French was broached, it was carried by a popular vote of 3,000,000 to 3,000. He sent for Pope Pius VII to crown him at Paris amid imposing ceremonies, December 2, 1804, but at the last moment he snatched the imperial diadem from the pope's hands and crowned himself. He then placed the crown on the head of Josephine, his wife. The following year he became king of Italy as well.

And now came a change of character so remarkable as to support the old rumor that Bonaparte the general and Napoleon the emperor were two different men. From being shy, lean and silent, Napoleon grew assertive, fat, talkative. The rigid, temperate simplicity of early days gave way to court etiquette, pomp and imperial splendor. His court was brilliant and extravagant.

England, resenting certain of France's annexations, declared war, and Napoleon prepared to invade Great Britain. But Russia, Austria and Sweden formed an alliance with England and the plan was changed. Napoleon, with 180,000 men, crossed Bavaria, took Vienna and met the combined Austrian and Russian armies at Austerlitz. Each of the three armies was commanded by an emperor. After a long and bloody battle Napoleon defeated the allies with fearful loss. He then thrashed Prussia at Jena and Auerstadt and captured Berlin. Russia's army was marching to Prussia's aid, but Napoleon met and overwhelmed it at Friedland, June 14, 1807, and forced the czar to sue for peace. He next conquered Spain and Portugal, and extended his conquests throughout the continent of Europe. He made his brother king of Spain and his brother-in-law king of Naples, and lavished similar royal honors on others of his family.

Spain, dissatisfied that a low-born Corsican should rule it, revolted. England and Portugal allied themselves with the Spaniards and the "War of the Peninsula" began; the English army being commanded by Sir Arthur Wellesley, afterward duke of Wellington. Austria took this time to rise against Napoleon. The emperor hurried an army across the frontier and inflicted a crushing defeat on the Austrian host at Wagram, July 6, 1809, and dictated humiliating terms of peace to the beaten country. Nearly all the world was now at the Corsican genius' feet.

Yet he was far from satisfied. He saw that he held his sovereignty through sheer strength; Austria's action had taught him that the instant his back was turned the beaten nations would spring at him like wild animals at their trainer. He knew that, even while kings and countries cringed to him, they secretly despised him as an upstart. Only so long as he could overawe foes by active, aggressive power could he hope to retain his mastery.

He had no son to inherit his title. Moreover, he now saw his boyish mistake in having married a stupid woman of the people. He had long since outgrown his early adoration for the fickle Josephine. He calmly proceeded to divorce her, and on March 11, 1810, he married the Archduchess Marie Louise, daughter of the emperor of Austria. The proud Austrian monarch had no choice but to submit, and to sell his daughter for the sake of his country's welfare. Marie Louise cared nothing for her imperial bridegroom, and in his later days of adversity promptly deserted him. They had one son, who, while in his cradle, was proclaimed king of Rome. This son died of consumption at twenty-one.

The years 1810 and 1811 marked the flood-tide of Napoleon's prosperity. His dominions extended from Naples to Denmark. He was proclaimed ruler of Spain, Italy, Switzerland, Holland and most of the German states. Russia, Austria and other nations were at his feet. England alone held out against him. Never before or since has such tremendous authority been vested in one man.

Sam Bass, Who Came From "Indianny"

END OF THE TRAIL OF SAM BASS

RANGERS ON SCOUT IN BIG BEND COUNTRY, WEST TEXAS

Sam Bass was born in Indianny,
It was his native home;
And at the age of seventeen
Young Sam 'lowed he would roam.
He went fur out to Texas,
A cowboy fur to be—
A better-hearted feller
I know you'd never see.
—Old Cowboy Song.

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

THAT is one of the many verses of a song that has been sung along the cattle trails or around the camp fire of every round-up camp from the Rio Grande to the Canadian line; to its strains the night herder lulled his restless charges to sleep; and it was a prime favorite of every wandering troubadour whose battered old mandolin or guitar and gift of song assured him of a warm welcome from the lonely inhabitants of some sod shanty on a government claim in the wind-swept West.

The Sam Bass song takes almost equal rank with the one about Jesse James as the most distinctively native American ballad. For what Jesse James was to Missouri, that, Sam Bass was to Texas. The other day press dispatches carried the news that the University of Texas was collecting material about her most famous outlaw because without the story of this picturesque figure the history of the Lone Star state would not be complete.

But Texas alone cannot claim him for her own. The states of Indiana, South Dakota, Nebraska, Kansas and Oklahoma all had a share in the Odyssey of this Robin Hood hero. In a broader sense he belongs to all America because as a figure in the pageant of the American frontier he symbolizes so well one frontier type—the outlaw, whose brief and stormy career inevitably ended in this paraphrased epitaph "Sic transit, six gunibus."

Although Sam Bass has been dead less than fifty years, around his name already has collected a maze of myth and legend until it is difficult to know where fact leaves off and fiction begins. Perhaps the most authoritative account of his life is that contained in a book recently issued by the Yale university press which is doing a notable work in preserving Americana outside of the usual fields of historical research. The book is "Six Years With the Texas Rangers" by James B. Gillett, which, although it does not pretend to be a complete chronicle of the Texas Rangers, gives an interesting cross section of the history of one of the most remarkable bodies of law enforcement officers the world has ever known. In the chapter on "Sam Bass and His Train Robber Gang," Captain Gillett tells of this outlaw hero of song and story as follows:

Sam Bass was born in Indiana, on a farm near Mitchell, Lawrence county, July 21, 1851. He came to Texas while a youth and worked for W. F. (Dad) Egan, sheriff of Denton county, until he reached manhood. While still an exemplary and honest young man, Bass came into possession of a race pony, a little sorrel mare. On Saturday evenings, when most of the neighborhood boys met in Denton, Bass raced his pony with much success. Mr Egan soon noticed that Sam was beginning to neglect his work because of his pony and, knowing only too well what this would lead to, he advised Sam to sell his mare. Bass hesitated, for he loved the animal. Finally matters came to such a point that Mr. Egan told Sam he would have to get rid of the horse—or give up his job.

Bass left Denton county in the spring of 1877 and traveled to San Antonio. Here many cattlemen were gathered to arrange for the spring cattle drive to the north. Joel Collins, who was planning to drive a herd from Uvalde county to Deadwood, Dakota, hired Bass as a cowboy. After six months on the trail the herd reached Deadwood and was sold and all the cowboys paid off by Mr. Collins.

At that period Deadwood was a great, wide-open mining town. Adventurers, gamblers, miners and cattlemen all mingled together. Though Joel Collins bought his cattle on credit and owed the greater part of the money he received for them to his friends in Texas, he gambled it all away. When he sobered up and realized the money was gone he did not have the moral courage to face his friends and creditors at home. He became desperate, and with a band of his cowboys held up and robbed several stage coaches in the Black Hills. These robberies brought Collins very little booty, but they started Sam Bass on his criminal career.

In the fall of 1877 Collins, accompanied by Bass, Jack Davis, Jim Barry, Bill Heffridge and John Underwood, better known as Old Dad, left Deadwood and drifted down to Ogallala, Neb. Here he conceived, planned and carried into execution one of the boldest train robberies that had ever occurred in the United States. When all was ready these six men, heavily armed and masked, held up the Union Pacific train at Big Springs, a small station a few miles beyond Ogallala. The bandits entered the express car and ordered the messenger to open the safe. The latter explained that the through safe had a time lock and could only be opened at the end of the route. One of the robbers then began to beat the messenger over the head with a six-shooter, declaring he would kill him if the safe were not opened. Bass, always of a kindly nature, pleaded with the man to desist.

declaring he believed the messenger was telling the truth. Just as the robbers were preparing to leave the car without a cent, one of them noticed three stout little boxes piled near the big safe. The curious bandit seized a coal pick and knocked off the lid of the top box. To his great delight he exposed $20,000 in shining gold coin. The three boxes each held a similar amount, all in $20 gold pieces of the mintage of 1877.

After looting these boxes the robbers went through the train, and in a systematic manner robbed the passengers of about $5,000. Before daylight the bandits had hidden their booty and returned to Ogallala. They hung around town several days while railroad officials, United States marshals and sheriffs' parties were scouring the country for the train robbers.

While in Ogallala before and after the robbery, Collins and his men frequented a large general merchandise store. In this store was a clerk by the name of Leech who had once been an express messenger on the Union Pacific and who was well acquainted with the officials of the company. Of course the great train robbery was the talk of the town. Leech conversed with Collins and his gang about the holdup, and the bandits declared they would help hunt the robbers if there was enough money in it. The suspicions of Leech were aroused and he became convinced that Collins and his band were the real holdup men. However, he said nothing to anyone about this belief, but carefully watched them. Finally, Collins came to the store and, after buying clothing and provisions, told Leech that he and his companion were going back to Texas and would be up the trail the following spring with another herd of cattle. When Collins had been gone a day's travel, Leech hired a horse and followed him. . . . He watched the gang make their camp one night and crept up to within a few yards of them.

The bandits had built a big fire and were laughing and talking. Soon they spread out a blanket, and to the onlooker's great astonishment brought out some money bags and emptied upon the blanket some $60,000 in gold . . . The coin was stacked in six piles and each man received $10,000 in $20 gold pieces. It was decided that Collins and Bill Heffridge would travel back to San Antonio together; Sam Bass and Jack Davis were to go to Denton county, while Jim Berry and Old Dad were to return to the Berry home in Mexico, Mo.

As soon as Leech had seen the money and heard the robbers' plans, he slipped back to his horse, mounted, and rode day and night to reach Ogallala. He notified the railroad officials of what he had seen and gave the names and descriptions of the bandits and their destinations. This information was sent broadcast over southern Nebraska, Kansas, Indian Territory and Texas. In the fugitive list sent to each company of rangers Sam Bass was thus described: "Twenty-five to twenty-six years old, 5 feet 7 inches high, black hair, dark brown eyes, brown mustache, large white teeth, shows them when talking; has very little to say."

Bass had left Denton county early in the spring an honest, sincere and clean young man. By falling in with evil associates he had become within a few months one of the most daring outlaws and train robbers of his time. Before he had committed any crime in the state the officers of northern Texas made repeated efforts to capture him for the big reward offered by the Union Pacific and the express company, but owing to the nature of the country around Denton and the friends Bass had as long as his gold lasted, they met with no success.

Bass' money soon attracted several desperate and daring men to him. Henry Underwood, a younger brother of Old Dad, Arkansas Johnson, Jim Murphy, Frank Jackson, Pipes, Herndon, Bill Collins, the last named a cousin of Joel Collins, and two or three others joined him in the elm bottoms. Naturally Bass was selected as leader of the gang. It was not long before the outlaw chief planned and executed his first train robbery in Texas, at Eagle Ford, a small station on the Texas Pacific railroad, a few miles out of Dallas. In quick succession the bandits held up two or three other trains, the last being at Mesquite Station, ten or twelve miles east of Dallas. From this robbery they secured about $3,000.

The whole state was now aroused by the repeated train holdups. . . . Counting the thirty rangers (a special company organized at Dallas) and the different sheriffs' parties, there were probably one hundred men in pursuit of the Bass gang. Sam played hide-and-seek with them all and, it is said, never ranged any farther west than Stephens county or farther north than Wise. He was generally in Dallas, Denton or Tarrant county. He would frequently visit Fort Worth or Dallas at night, ride up with his men to some outside saloon, get drinks all around, and then vamoose. Finally, in a fight at Salt Creek, Wise county, Captain June Peak and his rangers killed Arkansas Johnson, Bass' most trusted lieutenant. About the same time as this b ttle the rangers captured Pipes, Herndon and Jim Murphy and drove Bass and his two remaining companions out of northern Texas.

By mid-summer of 1878 the climax of Bass's career was approaching rapidly. Jim Murphy was persuaded by the rangers to turn traitor and to return to the bandit leader for the express purpose of betraying him. Eventually Murphy sent word to General Jones, commander of the Texas Rangers, that Bass and his comrades were planning to rob the bank in Round Rock, a little town less than twenty miles from Austin, the state capital, where Jones had his headquarters and where at the time he had with him four rangers —Corporal Vernon Wilson and Privates Dick Ware, Chris Connor and George Harold. Jones immediately went to Round Rock with Ware, Connor and Harold and upon his arrival notified Deputy Sheriff Grimes that the Bass gang was coming to rob the bank but that he (Grimes) should make no attempt to arrest any strangers who came into town until Lieutenant Reynolds and his men of Company E (among them Corporal James B. Gillett) had arrived from San Saba where Corporal Wilson had been sent to order them to Round Rock.

Bass had decided to rob the bank on Saturday, July 20, and on Friday morning he rode into town with his two companions, Jackson and Barnes, to take a look at the bank and to plan the route of their escape on the morrow.

They went up the main street of the town and entered Coppre!'s store to buy some tobacco. As the three bandits passed into the store, Deputy Sheriff Moore, who was standing on the sidewalk with Deputy Sheriff Grimes, said he thought one of the newcomers had a pistol.

"I will go in and see," replied Grimes.

"I believe you have a pistol," remarked Grimes, approaching Bass and trying to search him.

"Yes, of course, I have a pistol," said Bass. At the words the robbers pulled their guns and killed Grimes as he backed away to the door. He fell dead on the sidewalk. They then turned on Moore and shot him through the lungs as he attempted to draw his weapon.

At the crack of the first pistol Dick Ware, who was seated in a barber shop only a few steps away waiting his turn for a shave, rushed into the street, and oncountered the three bandits just as they were leaving the store. Seeing Ware rapidly advancing on them, Bass and his men fired on him at close range, one of their bullets striking a hitching post within six inches of his head and knocking splinters into his face. This assault never halted Ware for an instant. He was as brave as courage itself and never hesitated to take the most desperate chance when the occasion demanded it. For a few minutes he fought the three robbers singlehanded. General Jones, returning from the telegraph office, ran into the fight. He was armed with only a small Colt's double-action pistol, but threw himself into the fray Connor and Harold had now come up and joined in the fusillade.

The bandits had now reached their horses, and realizing their situation was critical, they fought with the energy of despair. If ever a train robber could be called a hero, Frank Jackson proved himself one. Barnes was shot down and killed at his feet and Bass was mortally wounded and unable to defend himself or even mount his horse, while the bullets continued to pour like hail from every quarter. With heroic courage, Jackson held the rangers back with his pistol in his right hand while with his left he unhitched Bass' horse and assisted him into the saddle. Then, mounting his own horse, Jackson and his chief galloped out of the very jaws of hell itself.

The next day the rangers found Bass, desperately wounded in some woods near Round Rock. He had prevailed upon Jackson to leave him to his fate and make his escape. He was taken back to Round Rock and given medical attention, but it was of no avail. The end of the trail of Sam Bass is marked by a simple little monument in the Round Rock cemetery, now defaced by relic-seekers, bearing this inscription:

SAMUEL BASS

Died July 21st, 1878
A brave man reposes in death here

CHIC BLACK AND WHITE MODES; TAILORED SUITS FOR MATRON

NO MORE remarkable success for the black-and-white vogue has ever been recorded in the pages of history than that now registering throughout the realm of fashion. The two "studies in black and white" as here illustrated are highly typical of the reigning mode.

We are in the midst of an era of sleeveless jackets, such as the one which achieves assured smartness for the costume shown here to the left. Full white sleeves for the underblouse and a plaited skirt of white crepe, the latter bordered with black satin to match the jacket, interpret style in every sense of the word.

The bloused styling of the black-and-white frock to the right is also outstanding this season. White is introduced in a full vestee and in a panel and borderings on the skirt. The hat which this stylishly clad young woman is wearing expresses utmost millinery chic. It is one of the new snug-fitting earlap types. For the younger set these tight molded-to-the-head shapes are quite the rage.

It is not possible to overemphasize the increasing importance of black-and-white. Not only does it occupy the center of the stage at this moment, but fabrics and accessories for the coming months all bear a message of continued favor for black-and-white combinations.

Among the prospects for summer are dresses which combine filmy black with white lace in their development. Lovely, too, are the new georgette prints showing a white background trellised over with huge black roses and other floral patternings. White shoes inlaid with black kid and vice versa will add a beauty note to the black-and-white ensemble.

That Paris so enthusiastically indorses the all-black vogue redounds to the good fortune of the matron. No mode is quite so distingue for the woman of dignity and years beyond flapper age as that of a handsome black silk costume.

Because of the especial importance at present of the black silk coat, also the black silk tailored suit, likewise the black silk one-piece afternoon frock, rich black silk weaves are of paramount interest throughout exclusive fabric displays. These place special stress on taffeta, faille, bengaline, moire, reversible satin, also heavy crepe.

That moire silk lends itself admirably to semi-tailored smartness one must agree after studying the style-points of the frock here pictured. While this dress has a slenderizing effect, yet fullness is introduced ever so adroitly in side panels held in place under scallops arranged in tiers. All the scallops are bound with cire satin.

Another favorite frock for the matron is of black satin styled with to-one-side drapes, cascades falling both from the left shoulder and from waistline. These one-side fastenings and surplice effects are particularly becoming to mature figures, and they are the "last word" in the matter of dress fashioning.

The matron who has wearied of the regulation cloth suit will find relief this spring in the way of silk or satin tailored suits and ensembles. These feature skirts with plaits somewhere in their making, topped with jackets which, while they are neatly tailored, maintain a charming feminized styling. Because of the black-and-white enthusiasm now on, the blouse to wear under the jacket is preferably of white crepe or satin, although silk-print vestees are also in fashion.

Silk topcoats for spring, also says the mode, either bengaline, faille or satin. They show intriguing details of pintucks, folds, seamwork and some are quilted. JULIA BOTTOMLEY.

Thirty million rabbit skins were imported into the United States last year to be made up into coats and other fur articles. The most valuable of all the species is the pelt of the chinchilla rabbit, a breed which is said to have originated in France.

LITTLE CHANGE IN OLD MOTHER EARTH

Orb Has Had Comparatively Placid Time.

Professor Chamberlain of the University of Chicago, the dean of American geologists, was once engaged in an ordinary kind of deciphering job: "How could ice sheets have crept so far south over the coral of an ancient warm sea?" He cared no more for speculation than a bloodhound does for metaphysics; he simply followed his scientific nose. And the trail led him to the most distant stars, where he had to call upon Professor Moulton for astronomical advice.

You may read the story in his little book, "The Origin of the Earth," which bids fair to become one of the most significant of scientific classics. Here I can only sketch what he discovered as a first chapter for the testament of the rocks. Fantastic though it sounds, and remote from geology though it seems, it was arrived at by inquiring: "What causes, which have always been uniformly at work in the universe and which can be observed now, could have produced our set of planets?" The answer proved to be what I outline in the next two paragraphs.

A billion or two years ago there was almost a collision between Sol and another sun; the other sun came so near Sol in its cosmic travels that it began to disrupt Sol; eight gobs of molten matter, drawn by the superior attraction of the other sun, rushed toward it; they were not fast enough to reach it, for it had been wheeled out of its course by Sol; the gobs were thus left spinning in cold space, unable to get back to the warm nest which they had left—and they have continued spinning to this day, revolving about Sol, as eight planets. Two revolve between us and our sun, five beyond us.

The embryo earth was much smaller than now, molten, of irregular shape. But it must have cooled and taken a spherical shape in an extremely brief time, as time goes in geology. No sooner had it settled in its monotonous race course than it began to gather to itself the debris of the encounter of the suns, and grew rapidly in size.

So it had a most bizarre birth and an eventful infancy. But since then it has been a most placid and changeless orb, never hot since it took its present form, never more volcanic than now, never covered with sulphurous vapors.

Very gradually it accumulated an ocean and an atmosphere. The ocean adjusted itself to land masses very much as we see it adjusted today. Portions of the crust have always been slowly pushed up and slowly worn down by erosion, but always within such heights as we see now. Geologists cannot learn of any period of cataclysms and terrible doings. When I read in a newspaper that a survey mark on a peak near Santa Barbara has been pushed north thirty inches during the last twenty-four years I have read the record of as much violence as has been customary throughout the earth's existence.—Henshaw Ward in Harper's Magazine.

Busy Executive

Nation's Business gives the credit of being the world's biggest business executive to Edward Wentworth Beatty, chairman and president of the Canadian Pacific railway, chairman of the Canadian Pacific Steamship, Ltd., and head of the varied enterprises of that company. These properties include 20,000 miles of railroad, a $25,000,000 chain of hotels, 425,000 tons of shipping, 115,000 miles of telegraph wires, 100,000 employees scattered from Europe to the Far East, a $20,000,000 irrigation project, millions of acres of farm lands and an express company serving the entire railway system and the world.

Heart Beat Is Broadcast

Sounds made by the human heart so amplified that they were audible to the entire audience was a feature of a lecture given recently by Prof. A. V. Hill at the Royal Institution in London. The pulse wave of a child was made visible on the screen. Another experiment showed the effects of exercise in quickening the heart. "In 65 years," said the professor, "the heart of a man does enough work to lift his body entirely away from the earth against gravity into empty space. In two years it does enough to lift a ton to the top of Mount Everest."

New Engine a Triumph

A new mystery engine, the most powerful air-cooled motor in the world, underwent tests at an aeronautical plant in New Jersey recently by inspectors of the United States navy. The motor, which is of the radical type, developed 525 horse power and was reported to have run at full speed without any structural or mechanical failures showing. The motor will be used exclusively for the present for planes for the United States army and navy. It is expected greatly to improve the performance of torpedo planes, bombing planes and long-distance scouting planes.

Odd Religious Sect

Hitherto unknown, a religious sect has been discovered near a branch line of the Perm railroad in Russia, by big government census inspectors. The members of the sect take to caverns at the age of forty and remain underground until death. They greeted the census takers with fear, looking on their arrival as a sign of the coming of the Anti-Christ, pretending the end of the world.

Farmers in Co-Operation

At the end of 1925 co-operative farm associations reporting to the Department of Agriculture had on their membership rolls 2,700,000 producers. In view of the fact, however, that some farmers belong to more than one association, and allowing for inactive members, it is estimated that approximately 2,000,000 farmers in this country are now engaged in co-operative marketing. The total business of these associations for the year 1925 amounted to approximately $2,400,000,000.

Coat, All Right, but—

In hurrying to answer an accident call, a Kansas City (Mo.) hospital interne put on the first coat that came to his hand. It was a fur coat, well suited to the chilly blasts outside. After the ambulance had arrived at the scene of the accident, and while the doctor was treating the injured man, he became aware of the curious glances of bystanders. He looked closer at the coat he was wearing. It was a woman's coat of muskrat fur belonging to a nurse at the hospital. On its shoulder was a red flower.

Escapes a Kiss

There is a ten-year-old boy visiting in Wayne who may some day work as hard for a kiss from a red-haired girl as he worked to escape one. When the girl charged at him with her lips pursed he fled across the ice of a creek, and a dozen playmates saw him break through the ice into the water waist-deep. The girl stopped at the edge of the hole and jeered. He ran to the house shivering but pure.—Detroit News.

Curse on a Name?

Eight men in the prime of life have met violent deaths during the last few weeks at Unter Aegert, a village in the Swiss canton of Zug. LOYALTY

Every citizen who buys away from home not only helps to wipe out local business but lessons the value of his own home property.

The home merchant has just as fine values as the mail order house or the broadcaster. In addition he gives you an opportunity to look over his goods, feel the value and estimate the quality. He then gives yu credit and delivers the goods to your home The home merchant pays taxes and makes possible the community. The home merchant, if he is prosperous, is helping the value of every piece of property in the town.

Klemme would not be much of a town if the business district were suddenly wiped out.

WM. STRAATMAN DIED HERE MONDAY

CAME TO THIS COUNTRY MORE THAN FIFTY YEARS AGO

Has Lived In Hancock County For Past Thirty-three Years

Elder Wm. Straatman was born on the 28th of January, 1850, at Bendheim, Westphalen, Germany.

During his early years he attended the schools at his home and later served two years in the German army. At the age of 26 years he came to America and made his home at New Knoxville, Ohio. Here he was united in marriage to Miss Mary Meyers The young couple spent the first years of married life as renters on a farm near New Knoxville.

Came To Hancock County

About thirty-three years ago they moved on a farm in Liberty township, Hancock County, Iowa, where they remained for eighteen years During the last fifteen years Mr and Mrs Straatman lived in Klemme, where Mr. Straatman found employment as care taker of the cemetery

Was Faithful Church Worker

Mr. Straatman was a faithful member of the Klemme Reformed Church During two terms, 1902-1904 and 1914-1916 he served as Elder for the congregation. He has always been an active worker for the good of Christianity.

For some time Mr. Straatman has been failing in health and the critical point came Wednesday, March 30th when he suffered a, stroke which rendered him unconscious. He died at 4:00 o'clock Monday morning at the age of 77 years, 2 months and 6 days.

GOOD ROADS MEET HELD HERE TUES.

KLEMME FAMERS AND BUSINESS WANT SPEEDY ACTION

126 Farmers And Business Men Sign Petition For Gravel Road

For a number of years the county road running east from Klemme to the county road in Cerro Gordo has been in bad shape and impassible at times. About two years ago farmers along the road petitioned the board of supervisors to have the road graded and graveled, and as far as we can learn, were promised to have this work done in a short time Up to this date the board has done nothing about acting on the petition, we understand, and this delay has been the motive for farmers and busines men of Klemme to "get up in arms" and demand action of the board.

With this matter iu view farmers interested and business men held a "good roads meeting" Tuesday afternoon to se what could be done about the matter of getting the road graded and graveled at an early date. The meeting was attended by about one hundred men and the following motion was carried and endorsed by 126 farmers and business men:

"Motion made and seconded that a committee be appointed to investigate the causes why the road east of Klemme has not been acted on according to petition now before Board of Supervisors and in their hands for the past tw years, and committee appointed be given full authority by this assembly to act to any extent necessary in carrying out their investigation." Carried.

Committee appointed:-
John Bock W. F. Pavey
Val. Josten Peter Josten
Wm. Schlawin

"We, farmers and business men of Klemme, Iowa, hereby give our support to the above motion."

(126 signers follow.)

Tax payers in this part of the county expressed their indignation of the way the Boar dof Supervisors has been "killing time" on the matter of this important county road. Farmers and business men are up in arms, especially when it was rumored about that eleven miles of gravel east and west of Goodell is to go in ahead of the Klemme road, and that a but little used gravel road in the north part of the county was constructed ahead of the more important and much traveled county road east of Klemme.

The committee appointed plan to meet with the Board at their next meeting and if no satisfaction can be secured from that angle authorities higher up will be acquainted with the situation.

Klemme farmers and business men are asking for a square deal.

CLEAN UP TIME

Now is the time to clean up the yard. After the Winter there is an accumulation of dead leaves and other playthings of the wind under the trees, around the shrubbery, in corners of buildings and fences. There may also be some dead and dried plants from last year's garden littering up the yard.

Now is the time to give Nature a free hand in beautifying your yard. You cannot make a flower or a bush or tree or grass, but you can help by giving Nature a clean canvas on which to paint the picture.

WAYNE LEMKE STARS IN IOWA CITY BASKET BALL TEAM

Plays Center On Leading "Quad" A Squad

A news clipping from the daily at Iowa City throws some interesting honors on a former Klemme high school basket ball star. Wayne Lemke, graduate of K. H. S. last spring is going strong at the State University as a star for the class A division of Quadrangle basket ball teams. Wayne plays center for the "light-weights" or Class A team and so far this year they have put it all over Class B, or the "heavy-weight" aggregation. About a week ago Wayne moved to a fraternity house and thereby hangs a tale.

Class B. saw their chance to put a crimp in the championship by trying to bar Lemke from further participation as a player on the Quad, all because Wayne helped lick them 16 to 13 the other day. The clipping further states, "However the game is under protest as Wayne Lemke, A1 of Klemme, star center for the winners is reported not living at the quadrangle and is therefor ineligible to compete in the quad games. Action has been taken before the athletic council, and the decision as to who will represent the quadrangle Tuesday when the fraternity champions will be met for the university honors, lies in their hands."

In reviewing the game the article further states, "The second half was a different story, Lemke, who had been held scoreless during the first half, uddely found himself and flipped three baskets through the loop and thus gave his team a six point lead. The contest ended with the score A 16; B 13. All of team A played a nice game with Lemke the usual high point man."

Wayne's team has not lost a game this year and due for the fact that the former Klemme high school star is high point man in the quadrangle he will be awarded a medal.

BABY BEEF CLUB MEMBERS HELD MEETING

There Are Twenty-six Enrolled In Club This Year

The members of the Hancock County Baby Beef club held a meeting at Britt, Saturday April 2nd. The meeting was called in order that the members might get better acquainted with each other and to discuss their problems in connection with the feeding and management of their calves.

A county organization was perfected and the following officers were elected:

Frederick Schneider, Goodell, President.

Marvin Townsend, Britt, Vice-President.

Willie Barker, Britt, Secretary.

Wayne Lewison, Kanawha, Treasurer.

There are 26 members in the club feeding 29 calves and prospects are for one of the best showings ever made by this club. The calves will be shown at the State Fair and at the County Fair and will be shipped to Chicago the latter part of September.

Other meetings will be held during the season by the members of this organization. Possibly a picnic will be held during the summer and a tour will be taken and each member visited.

K. H. S. MUSICIANS AFTER HIGH HONOR

GARY'S ORCHESTRA TO ENTER AT CHARLES CITY SATURDAY

Winning Of District Contest Means Trip To Iowa City Meet

Intensive work is being done this week by our High School Orchestra under the direction of Mr. Gary who will depart Saturday afternoon for Charles City with his musicians and there compete with other orchestras of Northern Iowa in an elimination contest to see who shall represent this section of our state at a final state contest at Iowa City at a later date. We shall be glad if Klemme can win in heir class and get the trip to Iowa City, but as they must compete with other schools of enrollments up to 150 they may not be able to overcome the handicap of numbers. We hope parents who can will make the trip to Charle City but we realize not all can go so far.

Base Ball Needs More Support

Snow and rains have interfered with base ball practice, besides some have been giving so much time to the orchestra practice that they have little left for base ball. Unless more interest is shown it will hardly be worth while to schedule any base ball games this spring

P. T. A. Had Fine Program

The P T. A. Program on Tuesday evening of this week was one of the best this school year. Supt. Mounce, of Garner, gave a splendid talk on "Modern Tendencies in Education" Mrs Gary gave a very worthwhile paper on the "Value of Music, both vocal and instrumental in school," and Mr. Gary's Orchestra gave four splendid selections that will be used at Charles City next Saturday night. Miss Bell's pupils of grades 3 and 4 staged a pretty folk song and drill.

Carnival Was Big Success

The usual splendid loyalty to and support of our school was shown on Friday night of last week when in spite of the inclement weather and bad roads parents and friends came to attend a school carnival and short minstrel program under the direction of Miss Kidder. We understand the receipts amounted to about $75. With expenses deducted there will be left a tidy su mfor the Junior-Senior Banquet which will be prepared by our Junior Class in honor of this year's Graduating Class. We know the Juniors appreciatee this generous response of their townsmen.

TEN CARS OF LIVE STOCK CONSTITUTES SHIPMENT

Saturday Shipments Light But Mid-week Shipments Stronger

The total of live stock shipments for the week past will total up to ten car loads.

Saturday night shipments slumped down to three cars the past week but were light because of the expected heavy mid-shipment to go out Wednesday of this week.

Saturday shipments comprised of 1 car load of hogs shipped by C. A Larsen, 1 car of cattle shipped by C. E. Hewitt, and one car load of hogs shipped out by the local shipping association.

Impassible roads in some directions from Klemme also hindered a large shipment.

Seven Cars Last Night

As we are about to go to press M. O. Barr, agent, reports that he has orders to bill out seven cars of stock for Wednesday. John Larsen shipped four cars in all, three of cattle and one of hogs. C. A. Larsen shipped three car load of cattle.

The past week was nearly up to average for the past four months.

Death Valley Opens to Tourists

LOOKING OUT OVER THE LAND OF THIRST

ONE OF THE FAMOUS 20-MULE TEAMS

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

DEATH VALLEY! What visions of horror those words conjure up in the mind of one who knows anything about this famous spot in southern California—visions of an inferno of heat and thirst, a narrow valley shut in between black-walled mountains and lying below sea level, the lowest point on the American continent; visions of a white plain across which the heat waves shimmer and dance, of mirages of cool lakes which appear before the eyes of dying men to mock their thirst, then vanish, of a desolate, barren land, whose terrific heat literally dries up men's blood in their veins and drives them mad before they die; a plague spot to be shunned by all living creatures.

Such was Death Valley of yesterday. But the Death Valley of today is different. True, the heat and the thirst are still there, but it is no longer a place to be shunned by man. Instead, it is now actually being opened to tourist sightseeing traffic and is being advertised as a new "playground"! And the invitation for tourists to visit Death Valley comes from no less a host than the United States national park service. The following announcement was recently made by Stephen T. Mather, director of the park service:

"A hotel for the accommodation of visitors is just now being completed on the very edge of the desert, a few miles from Ryan. A magnificent view of the valley with its frame of jagged mountains and fascinating colored cliffs may be obtained from the hotel.

"Arrangements have also been made for side trips to various points of interest. One of the most striking of these is Dante's peak, where from an elevation of 6,000 feet the visitor may look into Death Valley, which at this point lies 800 feet below sea level.

"Travelers will be able to get on a train in Los Angeles about 6 p. m. and reach the hotel the next morning."

The new "playground" has already been opened—on February 1, to be exact—but if you expect to visit Death Valley this season you will have to do so before May 15, for on that date the last tourist must be out of the valley. Hereafter the season will open in the fall, but always May 15 will be the "deadline." For Death Valley, pleasant as it is in the winter, becomes an inferno with the return of the summer sun and the temperature runs up as high as 140 degrees or more. As the familiar saying goes, "It isn't the heat, it's the humidity," only in the case of Death Valley it's the lack of humidity that kills. The average humidity is only .01 of 1 per cent. Old-timers will tell you that if you souse a blanket in a tub of water and pull one end out dripping, it will dry thoroughly while you are scrubbing the other half. Or dip your handkerchief in water and hold it up. It is dry in a minute's time. Jump into water fully clothed and you will be bone dry to the last thread in half an hour. Lay an egg on the sand and in ten minutes it will be baked hard. Alfalfa cut in field is cured and ready for stacking in less than two hours. Yes, it's HOT in Death Valley!

Death Valley got its name during the Days of '49. In the spring of 1849 a party of emigrants—100 wagons strong—set out from Galesburg, Ill., for the California gold fields. Late that summer the emigrant train reached Salt Lake City, Utah. There they were told that the regular mountain route to San Francisco would lie beneath twenty feet of Sierra Nevada snow before they could reach the mountain passes. They were warned, too, of the awful fate that had overtaken the now-famous Donner party, most of which had perished of hunger when it was caught in a blizzard near Donner lake in northern California.

But the gold seekers were impatient to reach their goal and, joining with other argonauts, they set out under the guidance of John Hunt, who contracted to take them over the old Spanish-trail to Los Angeles through San Bernardino. Progress was slow and some of the emigrants became dissatisfied. Having heard of a short cut leading west that would save 500 miles of their journey, they decided, over Hunt's protest, to make the venture. The result was that shortly afterwards they found themselves in what is now Death Valley, hemmed in by mountains through which there appeared to be no opening.

There the party split. One group, 36 persons in all, young bachelors from Illinois who called themselves "The Jayhawkers," pressed on toward the mountains to try to find a way out of the trap. Some of them died of starvation, some of thirst and others went mad and wandered away to their deaths in the valley. In all, 13 of the 36 perished before they fought their way through to safety. In the meantime the rest of the party, men with families, had found a tiny stream and there they camped to rest.

But their food supplies began to run low. Their oxen began to die and their wagons to fall apart in the blistering sun. So the leader, Asahel Bennett, sent two young fellows, Will Manley and John Rogers, forth to find a way out of this living hell. As they departed Mrs. Bennett gave Manley a double handful of rice—half of all she had—and silently pointed to the hunger-pinched faces of her children. He understood her meaning. Upon the success of his and Rogers' efforts depended the lives of all the emigrants.

Then the party sat down to wait for the return of the two scouts. A week passed—two—three—and still Manley and Rogers did not return. At the end of the fourth week all except Asahel Bennett's wife had abandoned hope. "They will come back," she maintained steadfastly. But they did not and the party resolved upon one last desperate attempt to escape. They began stripping the canvas covers from the prairie schooners and making pack saddles upon their emaciated oxen.

And then Manley and Rogers returned! They spoke but briefly of the days of horror spent in struggling from one waterhole to the next across the 250 miles of the Mojave desert, of the dead of the Jayhawker party whom they had found along the trail. But they had found food and, most vital of all, they had found a way out of the valley. They guided the party on the long climb to the summit of the Panamint range which frowns down upon the valley. As the emigrants reached the crest and looked back into the trap from which they had escaped, Asahel Bennett's wife raised her arms in a gesture of farewell, "Good by, Death Valley!" she cried. And so it was named.

Although this occurred three-quarters of a century ago, echoes of this tragic event have been heard from time to time in recent years. As late as 1918 the two survivors of the Jayhawker party—Col. John B. Colton of Galesburg, Ill., and Lorenzo Dow Stephens of San Jose, Calif.—met once more to talk over their thrilling experience, but the last living link with the tragic past was snapped on February 12, 1921, when Stephens died in Oakland, Calif., at the age of ninety-three years. Last November, however, the story of the Jayhawkers was recalled again when a crowd of merry-makers dined and danced in celebration of the opening of a new 24,000-barrel artesian well at Stovepipe Wells in Death Valley. It was on this spot that Manley and Rogers, the two scouts sent out by Asahel Bennett, on November 28, 1849, first sighted the waterhole and members of the party sipped from the tiny depression, where now a great volume of water gushes forth, the few life-saving draughts which gave them the strength to struggle on.

Scarcely less dramatic than the story of the naming of Death Valley is the story of how borax, which forms the basis of an industry that helped make this spot even more famous, was discovered there. In the year 1880 Aaron Winters lived with his wife, Rosie, in a frontier home in Ash Meadows, a tiny oasis east of Death Valley. To their home one day came a wandering prospector who told the Winters of the borax deposits in the state of Nevada and how a great fortune awaited anyone who could find more such deposits. Winters asked many questions, including the question of how a person could know borax if he discovered it. He was told that the best test was to pour certain chemicals over the supposed borax deposit and then to fire it. If it were borax the chemicals would burn with a green flame.

Winters had made many visits into Death Valley, and after talking to the prospector was convinced that there was borax there. So he set out immediately, accompanied by his wife, and soon afterwards encamped on Furnace creek. In the marsh (which appears on Furnace creek in the spring) he gathered the most likely-looking deposit. That night he made the test as the prospector had told him. There was a breathless moment of suspense and then Aaron Winters cried "Rosie, she burns green! We're rich!" The borax industry of Death Valley had come into existence.

The next problem was how to get the rich borax deposits out of the valley. Out of necessity came the famous 20-mule team wagons which are inseparably associated with the name of Death Valley. For years this unique transport system brought the borax wealth out of Death Valley. Then the modern tractor wrote "finis" on another chapter of American transportation—one whose like the world has never seen elsewhere. That was written last year and it marked the passing of another era in the history of Death Valley.

But borax is not the only wealth which it contains. Gold was discovered there many years ago and it has been a favorite haunt for the old-time prospector, the lure of its wealth being all the more attractive because of the dangers which guard it. Remember the picturesque "Death Valley" Scotty, whose "find" there made him rich and who gained nation-wide notoriety by the freedom with which he "blew" his wealth? Even more picturesque was another prospector who became known as the "Good Samaritan of Death Valley." Lou Westcott Beck was one of the great number who rushed to Death Valley at the news of Scotty's find. He nearly lost his life on its barren wastes and when he finally escaped he resolved to devote his life to saving others from the fate which he had so narrowly escaped in that dread region.

Each summer Beck made a trip into the valley of purple mist and great thirst, piling up rocks and placing signs on them to guide prospectors to waterholes, searching for lost travelers and guiding them to safety. For 18 years he did this work and during that time he and his companion, a Newfoundland dog named "Rufus," saved the lives of between three and four hundred travelers in the great American deserts—the Colorado and the Mojave as well as Death Valley. Then in 1917 Death Valley "got him" at last. During one of his trips he came to a spring which he had always used and drank from it. He offered some water to Rufus, but the dog refused to drink. The spring had become infected. After a terrible trip to his home in Pasadena, where Mrs. Beck awaited their return, the "Good Samaritan" went to bed ill and never rose again.

The work which Beck inaugurated has been carried on by the United States geological survey until Death Valley is now supplied with enough sign posts so that it is safe enough to travel for anyone who will use ordinary common sense and not take foolish chances. Those who do not soon learn the truth of the prophetic warning of old-timers that "you can't fool with the desert. If you do she'll get you every time." And now the latest announcement of the United Stutes park service means that even those who "fool with her" have better than an even chance to escape the dangers of this "land of thirst."

CAREFUL PRUNING OF GRAPEVINES

Although most grape arbors are designed primarily to furnish shade, or to shut out undesirable views, proper care, especially in pruning, should insure the production of a fair amount of fruit, advises J. Harold Clark, instructor in pomology at the New Jersey State College of Agriculture.

Pruning may be done any time before the buds begin to swell. Vigorous, one-year-old canes, the ones with smooth, light-colored bark, comprise the fruit-bearing part of the vine. When these canes are all pruned out, very little if any fruit can be produced. It is important, however, to remove as much of the old (over one year old) as possible. Leave just enough of it to support four to eight of the one-year canes well distributed over the arbor and not too far removed from the roots. These one-year canes should then be cut back to six to ten buds each. This may make the arbor look too thin, but the new shoot growth will quickly become dense enough to furnish plenty of shade. Vines pruned in this way will be more productive than where more canes are used and each cut back to a spur bearing two to three buds.

With old, tangled vines which have not been pruned for several years, it may take two or three years of careful pruning to get a desirable type of vine with a minimum of old wood and capable of producing a fair crop.

If the vines are planted closer together than six feet, some of them should be removed or else the pruning will have to be more severe than has been recommended.

Spray for Peach Leaf Curl in Dormant Season

Peach leaf curl does a great deal of damage each year. The unfortunate thing about this disease is that when it makes its presence known it is too late to treat it. This disease must be treated during the dormant season or it cannot be treated at all.

It is too late now to treat the disease effectively in southern peach sections, but in northern sections where the buds are still dormant, there is still time to treat the disease effectively.

For controlling peach leaf curl, the trees must be sprayed thoroughly with lime-sulphur solution, 1 part to 20 parts of water, or with 4-4-50 bordeaux mixture. The spray must be applied before the buds begin to swell. Thoroughness of application is absolutely necessary. The twigs must be entirely coated on all sides if control is to be efficient. If the wind is blowing strong from one direction, the trees should be sprayed a second time from the other side, provided this will insure more complete covering of the twigs.

Delay in application until after the buds begin to swell frequently allows the spores of peach leaf curl to germinate, and thus the disease may be beyond control when the spray is applied. The tree should be sprayed when completely dormant. If San Jose scale is present, lime-sulphur solution at a dilution of one part in nine parts of water should be used in place of the weaker solution.

Watch for Wooly Aphis

Wooly aphis is a pest for which nursery trees should be particularly examined. Signs of this disease will be found on the roots of the nursery trees. The appearance is whitish wax or mold like growth. This is an exudate from the bodies of the aphids, which can frequently be found in the crevices of the bark below it. Such trees should be rejected for planting or thoroughly fumigated.

Horticultural Facts

An acre of raspberries will yield from 1,300 to 1,400 quarts in eastern America, though yields have been known as high as 4,000 quarts.

* * *

Give all top-heavy trees a close and careful pruning, because the apples in the tops of the trees as a rule grow in large clusters or bunches and are almost sure to be caught in the wind and your trees will be greatly damaged or likely ruined.

* * *

In the bearing apple tree remember that it is the plump, well-nourished bud which produces blossoms and fruit. Secure such buds for next year by a careful thinning out of the ends of the branches which will insure plenty of sunlight and plant food reaching the buds on the remaining twigs.

* * *

Leave three to six new canes to each raspberry or blackberry, and remove the surplus old wood from the currants and gooseberries. Both of the latter bear mostly on two-year-old wood.

* * *

Grapes may be pruned during the winter. The fruit is borne on wood of the present season which grows from last year's canes. Select several of the best canes, cut them back to three "eyes," or buds, and prune the others away. Those eyes will make this season's new fruiting wood.

Bargains Risky in Fertilizers

Choice Should Be Made on Basis of Cost of Plant Food Contained.

Hunting for bargains is poor policy when it comes to buying fertilizers, says Dr. E. L. Worthen, soils specialist of the New York State College of Agriculture, Ithaca.

The choice should be made on the basis of the cost of the plant food contained and not on the ton price of the fertilizer, he suggested. This necessitates an understanding of the guaranteed analysis and in addition the ability to analyze the price in terms of plant food, he said.

Co-operative Buying Best.

Farmers will be able to get plant food at the lowest figure through the co-operative buying of fertilizer materials in car lots, according to Doctor Worthen.

Much publicity has been given the last few years to the economy of high analysis fertilizers. It is true that of the factory-mixed fertilizers those classing as high analysis are in general a better buy than the mixture falling in the low analysis group. Invariably a worthwhile saving can be made by shifting from low analysis to high analysis mixed fertilizers. In changing from a 2-8-2 to a 3-12-3 mixture, the same amount of plant food can be secured and a saving of 20 per cent, or one-fifth, made in the fertilizer expenditure.

Not Necessarily Good Buy.

However, a fertilizer is not necessarily a good buy because it is high in analysis. For example, the 2-12-2 and 2-16-2 analysis used extensively in certain states for corn and other grain crops cannot be justified, because the 2 per cent of ammonia and the 2 per cent of potash are prohibitive in cost. The same amount of money invested in acid phosphate or in rock phosphate would give better returns. A saving of nearly 8 per cent can be made by purchasing a 5-10-5 instead of the 4-8-4.

Where mixed fertilizers are used, home mixing offers a saving over any grade of factory-mixed goods. Home mixtures can be made for from $5 to $10 a ton less than the same grade of factory-mixed fertilizer costs the farmer.

To a considerable extent fertilizer materials such as acid phosphate, nitrate of soda, sulfate of ammonia, and muriate of potash can be used without mixing. Plant food can be secured at a lower figure in materials of this kind than in mixed goods.

Winter Is Best Time to Prune All Fruit Trees

It is best to prune fruit trees during the dormant season any time after the leaves have fallen. Pruning done then has an invigorating effect on the trees, whereas an equal amount of pruning done in the summer weakens them, because it deprives the trees of foliage before that foliage has an opportunity to contribute to the fruit growth of the tree, according to Prof. Joseph Oskamp at the New York State College of Agriculture at Ithaca, N. Y. Ill effects from pruning when the wood is frozen are usually considered unimportant because the wood is seldom injured from it.

The way the cut is made has a direct bearing on the healing of the wound. If a stub is left, decay is likely to start before the wound heals, so branches should be cut flush. Small wounds need no protection, but large ones should be painted with a thick white lead and oil paint. Here, too, the winter is most desirable, because during the summer the caustic action of the paint may hinder the healing of the wound.

Many different kinds of tools are available for pruning, but the most satisfactory work is done with those that are strong and sharp, regardless of the kind.

FARM NOTES

The best way to save labor is to increase soil fertility.

* * *

Clean the small grain seed before planting—it will insure better crops.

* * *

A coat of whitewash is an effective sanitary measure, when applied to the dairy barn and poultry house.

* * *

Stop, thief! Soil erosion robs American farms of $200,000,000 every year—and farmers look on calmly.

* * *

When sweet clover is seeded with oats, it is not usually rank enough to furnish much pasture until late in August.

* * *

Two standard treatments for the control of seed-borne diseases of the potato are the corrosive sublimate treatment and the hot formaldehyle treatment.

* * *

Copper carbonate protects stored grain from attacks by weevils. Rats and mice will not eat treated seed if there is untreated grain in the storehouse on which they can feed.

* * *

Burning dry pasture grass to produce early growth does more damage than good. The early growth may be somewhat more luxurious on the burned area, but the total yield for the season is usually less than on the unburned areas.

Chinese Chef Master of Art, Says Writer

On the whole, well-cooked Chinese food is unsurpassable, writes Genevieve Wimsatt in "A Griffin in China;" and the occidental gourmand who overcomes his prejudices and eats the food of China for even a short period of time, finds that ever afterward all other cooking seems flat, tame and savorless to him. In Paris or Vienna or New Orleans, wherever he may dine, as long as he lives he will hunger for the oil-roasted duck of Peking, of which only the crisp, amber-brown skin is served, cut into bits, spread on paper-thin pancakes, rolled into a cylinder along with a bit of green vegetable and a thick brown sauce, and eaten from the hand like a sandwich; and whenever he sits down to fish he will compare it, unfavorably, with the fish of China, boiled in wine, blanketed with gravy sauce, salt and tart and sweet, and flavored with fresh ginger.

Detroit's Buried Treasure

"Speaking of buried treasure," remarked a bank official, "there is several hundred thousand dollars' worth of it right here in Detroit. It consists of bank deposits that have been overlooked or forgotten by depositors, and valuables left in safety deposit vaults by persons who have since died. It would surprise the average person to learn how many people forget bank accounts ranging from $10 to $100, and sometimes more. One of the strange things about this 'treasure' is that with the help of bank officers, it is always seeking its owners, instead of being sought."—Detroit News.

COUNTY AGENT OFFERS SOME ROUGHAGE HINTS

Pasture Gates Should Not Be Opened Too Early, Advises

Spring, with weary-winter stock in the paddock, eyeing hungarily the green tinted hillsides, intensifies the age-old problem of good roughage. The man who has kept his best hay and conserved his silage for the six to eight weeks which is now before him will be well repaid for his luck or forsightedness In case the silage is gone and only the poor grade of hay and fodder is left, the average man throws open the pasture gate weeks before the proper date that is known to be best for both the pasture and the stock.

Let us consider the case of a certain cow which requires ten pounds of grain with thirty pounds of silage. and ten pounds of hay to maintain a known level of production. When she is deprived of her silage or good hay, she very likely will not eat a large amount of a poor grade of roughage Would it not be logical to gradually increase the corn and cob meal portion of her ration since it is no higher in price per ton than a good grade of clover hay?

If the ratio of the winter ration was that of two parts of ground oats, two parts of corn and cob meal and one part of linseed oil meal, it may well become a ration as follows for spring feeding with a limited roughage ration: four parts corn and cob meal, two parts ground oats and one part linseed oil meal. By feeding this ration fifty percent heavier with a limited roughage ration than the grain ration was fed during the winter, this cow may be kept near her high level of production without the use of immature grass for pasture.

Sunday School Lesson

(By REV. F. B. FITZWATER, D.D., Dean, Moody Bible Institute of Chicago.)
(©, 1927, Western Newspaper Union.)

Lesson for April 10

PETER'S LESSON IN TRUST

LESSON TEXT—Matt. 14:22-33.
GOLDEN TEXT—Be of good cheer. It is I; be not afraid.
PRIMARY TOPIC—Peter Trusts Jesus.
JUNIOR TOPIC—A Helping Savior.
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Why Peter Failed.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Christ the Ever-Present Helper.

The storm-tossed disciples on the sea at night are an example of the struggling followers of the Lord in the darkness of the present age, as they are tossed by the tempests of the evil one.

I. The Disciples on the Storm-Tossed Sea (vv. 22-24).

1. They are sent across the sea by Christ (v. 22).

"Jesus constrained His disciples to get into a ship." Doubtless His reason for this was to keep them from entanglement in the movement of the people to make Him King, for in John 6:14, 15, it is shown that the people were so excited by the feeding of the 5,000 that they were about to make Him King by force.

2. Christ dismisses the multitudes (v. 22).

This may be taken as typical of His rejection by the nation whose rulers had already rejected Him.

3. Christ praying alone in the mountain (v. 23).

Temptation to earthly honor and power had come to Him, therefore He went to the Father in prayer for relief and strength. The need of prayer is greatest at such times. According to Mark 6:48 He saw from the mountain the disciples toiling on the storm-tossed sea.

II. Jesus Walking on the Sea (vv. 25-27).

1. It was in the fourth watch of the night (v. 25).

He did not come to them immediately, but waited till almost dawn. However, it was the darkest part of the night. Their physical danger was great, but no doubt their mental perplexity was greater. They knew that the Lord had sent them, but why should they be in such straits if He sent them? The stormy sea is no evidence that the disciple is not in the Lord's appointed way.

2. The disciples alarmed at His coming (v. 26).

At the sight of Him they cried out for fear. They said: "It is a spirit." It was the coming of their best friend to deliver them from danger.

3. Jesus' words of comfort and good cheer (v. 27).

In the midst of their distress they heard the Master's words, "Be of good cheer, it is I, be not afraid." This changed their fear to joy.

III. Peter Walking on the Sea (vv. 28, 29).

1. Peter's request.

As soon as Peter recognized the voice of Jesus he cried: "Bid me come to thee on the water" (v. 28).

2. Jesus' response (v. 29).

At the Lord's "come," Peter left the ship and walked on the water. While he kept his eyes on the Lord he walked on the waves. His faith linked him with the divine power and was thus upheld. Vital faith in Jesus Christ will enable the disciple to outride the storms of life.

IV. Peter Sinking (v. 30).

He took his eyes off the Lord and placed them upon the raging sea. This separated him from the divine power. We should learn to fix our eyes upon the Lord instead of upon our circumstances. Failure will surely follow if we give consideration to our circumstances and our own ability to master them.

V. Christ Rescuing Peter (v. 31).

When Peter began to sink he did the sensible thing. He cried out: "Lord, save me." Immediately Jesus stretched forth His hand and caught him. His salvation from death at the bottom of the sea was the result of the Lord taking hold of him. Jesus Christ in the incarnation was the divine hand reaching forth to rescue a sinking world. The significance of the expression "caught him" is made clear in Hebrews 2:16. It is there declared that Jesus took not upon Himself the nature of angels but took upon Himself the seed of Abraham. The same Greek word occurs in verse 31 of this lesson. We should understand from this that the eternal Son of God did not come in the form of a man in order to show man the way to God, but identified Himself with man through incorporation with Him. He came, not as an example, but as a Savior.

Battle and Victory

The battle with the powers of darkness may be long and hard but the victory is possible.—Echoes.

The Comeliest Ornament

The gentleness of Christ is the comeliest ornament that a Christian can wear.—William Arnot.

Be Not Discouraged

Let us not be discouraged when the hand of God layeth heavy woes upon us.—Echoes.

Powers Confer on Policy in China While Their Nationals Are Fleeing.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD.

WHAT to do in, or to, China was the serious problem discussed last week by the governments of the United States, Great Britain and Japan in an exchange of notes. The situation in Shanghai and along the Yangtse river, though no less dangerous than in the previous week, was not so replete with incidents of violence. Evacuation of Americans, British and Japanese from Hankow and towns beyond was carried on rapidly, and in some instances the escaping foreigners were stoned and otherwise attacked by Chinese. Near Nanking a steamer carrying refugees was fired on by Chinese troops and the American destroyer Paul Jones replied vigorously with machine guns and two-pounders. The United States is closing all its consulates in Szechwan and Hunan provinces and its gunboats will be withdrawn from the upper Yangtse as soon as the evacuation of Americans is completed. Most of the latter are missionaries, and a few of them have refused to leave their posts. At the request of Rear Admiral Williams, commander of the Asiatic fleet, 1,500 American marines were started on the way to China. The force includes an artillery detachment and an aviation unit. The arrival of these marines at Shanghai will bring the American landing forces there up to 4,750 men, and the authorities at Washington said the army forces probably would not be sent at this time for fear that such a move might be interpreted as meaning that the United States intended to occupy Chinese territory. The marines for the new expedition were taken from Eastern stations and were called the Sixth regiment after the unit that won fame in the World war.

It was said in London that the attitude of America and Japan would decide the question whether the powers should withdraw entirely from China and let the factions fight it out or should hold on to their concessions by force. The British government is represented as willing to adopt either course, but will not undertake alone to maintain the latter policy. Japan's cabinet decided to co-operate with America and Great Britain, and possibly France, in investigation of the Nanking outrage, and probably will work with them in the defense of lives and property; but both Washington and Tokio indicate that they are averse to anything like active intervention in the Chinese civil war. President Coolidge, furthermore, said the United States would not join the British in punitive measures because of the Nanking incident. This was approved by the conservative members of the Nationalist government, but it was reported in Shanghai that the American civil officials there were greatly displeased by Mr. Coolidge's policy, one of them declaring: "Unless the powers take action now we are lost. I believe emphatically that a determined show of force now would put the Chinese conservatives in power."

Dr. C. C. Wu, one of the conservatives, said coercive measures tending to intervention in the Chinese situation would have the effect of throwing all China to the radicals and into the arms of soviet Russia, which is awaiting an opportunity to communize all Asia. American naval and marine officers there also seem against any policy of intervention.

Sir Austen Chamberlain, British foreign secretary, intimated to parliament that the British government would not let the Nanking attack go unpunished unless the Cantonese made full apology and paid complete indemnity. It was said the punishment might take the form of a blockade of the Cantonese along the Yangtse above Shanghai. As was expected, the radicals of the Kuomintang have sought to represent the Nanking affair as an outrage against the Chinese, and Gen. Chiang Kai-shek, Cantonese commander, said he would make a strong protest concerning the bombardment by American and British warships.

Gen. Chiang Kai-shek states that he will soon announce the beginning of a great campaign against Marshal Chang Tso-lin in the North. He plans to send three armies against Peking. The first army will proceed northward along the Shanghai-Peking railway from Kiangsu province; the second army will advance north along the Peking-Hankow line through Honan province and the third army, commanded by the Christian general, Feng Yu-hsiang, will advance on Peking from the north by the Peking-Suiyan railway from Kalgan. General Chiang declared the nationalists expect to obtain military domination of all the Chinese territories before next Christmas.

Chang, for his part, has virtually asked the help of the foreign powers in combating the Cantonese, appealing especially to Japan because, he says, the full victory of the Nationalists would be followed by an attempt of the Russian Bolshevists to start a Red revolution in Japan, which nation the Russians still consider their enemy.

DISPATCHES from Mexico City say President Calles and his cabinet, under pressure from General Obregon, have accepted the oil and land law understandings arrived at four years ago by the joint commission on which Charles Beecher Warren and John Barton Payne represented the United States. These provided that Article 27 of the Mexican constitution of 1917 could not be given a retroactive effect. Calles insisted these understandings were not binding on his administration, and this was especially the contention of Luis Morones, minister of industry and commerce and labor. But the United States maintained the contrary, and its position was supported by Obregon and finally was accepted by the cabinet. Obregon's victory over Morones may bring the latter into the open as a candidate for the presidency in opposition to the general.

NEARLY all mines in the central competitive field, comprising western Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois and Iowa, closed down at midnight Thursday because of the failure to agree on a wage scale, and approximately 150,000 miners were thrown out of employment. Officials of the miners' union said temporary agreements had been made with a large number of plants, but the spokesmen for the operators said the union claims were exaggerated and that the mines involved were small. Dispatches from Washington indicated that at least for the present the government would take no hand in the controversy. Government surveys indicated that nonunion and union mines unaffected by the shutdown have a potential output rate able to supply the country for several months. The figures showed that upward of 9,000,000 tons of soft coal per week would continue to be produced and that, with the large stocks on hand, there would be no shortage for many weeks.

BECAUSE the Armour Grain company is accused of delivering 5,000 bushels of "screenings" for No. 2 rye, the Department of Agriculture is carrying on an investigation that in a way involves the Chicago board of trade; Iowa has officially demanded that the grain company be suspended by the board from all trading privileges, and resolutions were introduced in the Illinois senate calling for the same action and for a study to see if it is possible to cancel or amend the charter of the board of trade. The rye transaction took place nearly a year ago. Secretary of Agriculture Jardine cited the grain company and the latter asked the Supreme court for a restraining injunction. Mr. Jardine says the board of trade refused the government access to records in the case, but President Bunnell denies this.

WHAT was believed to be a deliberate attempt to assassinate Henry Ford was revealed when it became known that the automobile manufacturer was in a hospital recovering from painful injuries. Mr. Ford was driving alone at night from the Dearborn engineering laboratories to his home when a large closed car containing two men crashed into his coupe, forced it over a 15-foot embankment and drove on rapidly. Mr. Ford was rendered unconscious, but recovered and made his way to a gateway of his estate where help was obtained. He was taken to the hospital suffering from contusions and slight hemorrhages, but within a few days was said to be on the road to complete recovery. Department of Justice agents took hold of the case and a number of suspects were arrested. This supposed attempt on the billionaire's life came in the midst of the trial of Adam Sapiro's million-dollar libel suit against him, and also at a time when he is said to have aroused considerable ill feeling among merchants because he opened cut-rate retail stores.

AMERICA, France and England were all threatened in the tragedy in the Gare du Nord, Paris, when Countess de Janze, estranged wife of a Frenchman, shot Raymond V. de Trafford, scion of a prominent British family, and then put a bullet through her own body. The countess was Alice Silverthorne of Chicago, cousin of J. Ogden Armour and well-known in American social circles. Her relations with De Trafford recently led her husband to file suit for divorce. For several days after the shooting it was believed both the countess and De Trafford would die, but latest reports are that they are out of danger.

WHILE Mrs. Coolidge was trying to learn from White House aides where the President intended to spend his summer vacation, news came down from Wisconsin that the Chief Executive had selected that state and would spend the hot months up among the muskie lakes and trout streams. The exact location of the summer capitol was said to be undetermined, but the G. B. Heinemann estate on Trout lake was reported to be favorably considered. It is about seventy-five miles from Lake Superior and is a pretentious establishment in fine natural surroundings, with a score of small lakes nearby. It was stated in Washington that the President would not go to the Far West for his vacation because the situations in foreign lands and other matters might make it advisable for him to return to Washington hurriedly.

FIVE well-known Americans were appointed by President Coolidge to represent the United States at the international economic conference in Geneva. They are: Henry M. Robinson of Los Angeles, one of the framers of the Dawes plan; Norman H. Douglas, New York financier; John W. O'Leary of Chicago, president of the National Chamber of Commerce; Prof. Alonzo E. Taylor of Stanford university, and Dr. Julius Klein, director of the federal bureau of foreign and domestic commerce.

HARRY F. SINCLAIR, oil magnate, seemingly must go to jail for contempt of the senate. Justice Hitz of the District of Columbia Supreme court denied him a new trial, and then heard arguments as to whether the verdict of guilty returned by the trial jury should carry punishment for one offense or for four, one for each count in the indictment. Both a jail sentence and a fine are mandatory, imprisonment being for not less than one month nor more more than twelve.

TWO well-known citizens were on the death list of the week. Will H. Dilg, founder and former president of the Izaak Walton League of America, passed away in Washington where he took up his residence a year ago. Perry S. Heath, known as the "father" of the rural free delivery service, also died in Washington. Besides his work in the Post Office department he was prominent as a newspaper publisher, and was identified with the framing of the constitutions of North and South Dakota.

MAJ. H. O. SEGRAVE, an Englishman, established a world record at Daytona Beach, Fla., when he drove his racing car Sunbeam over the sand course at the terrific speed of 203.79 miles an hour.

Napoleon Bonaparte

(Part III)

FOR years Europe crouched cringing and helpless at Napoleon's feet. The British bulldog snarled unconquered defiance and the Man of Destiny was wise enough to leave Great Britain alone. So England continued to stand as the one obstacle between the Corsican and the rule of the whole world. Yet Europe, though cowed, waited patiently for a chance to avenge itself of its tyrant. And that chance came in 1812.

Russia broke certain clauses in her treaty with France, and in May, 1812, Napoleon declared war on her. With 700,000 men he began his invasion. Barely 300,000 Russians opposed the advancing French hosts, but their tactics were unexpected. Avoiding a general engagement wherever possible, the Russians continually fell back before Napoleon's advance, wasting the country they passed through so that the pursuing French found neither provisions nor fuel.

Now and then—at Borodino and elsewhere—the French caught up with their fleeing enemies and won decisive victories, though at great cost. Following out tactics similar to those he had used successfully against Prussia and Austria, Napoleon struck straight at Russia's heart by marching on Moscow. He arrived there on September 15, to find the city deserted and in flames. The patriotic Russians had sacrificed home, property and wealth in order to block the advance and mar the conquest of their hated foe. Napoleon could pursue the retreating patriots no further over a desolate territory. His mighty army of 700,000 had dwindled to 120,000. So he ordered a retreat.

The merciless northern winter was setting in. The country was stripped of provisions. Bands of mounted Cossacks harassed the diseased, starving, half-frozen soldiers. Of all the vast army of invasion barely 25,000 reached France alive. Napoleon had, long before this, left his army, hurried to Paris and ordered a conscription of recruits to press the war. But his luck was gone. The "chance" for which ten beaten nations had waited so long had at last come. The climber had stumbled. The invincible general had been beaten. France's unbroken triumph had been turned into defeat. All Europe was roused. The Russian disaster had proven that Napoleon was only mortal. His name lost its terror.

An alliance was formed by Russia, England, Prussia, Sweden and Spain, and in 1813 they massed an army near the Elbe. Napoleon had 350,000 soldiers in Germany. For months he beat the allies in battle after battle, and at last forced them to a truce. They took advantage of this armistice to persuade Austria to join their league. Then at the truce's end, the united armies concentrated at Dresden. There he again routed them. But Napoleon's army was so weakened by the campaign that he was forced to fall back on Leipsic, where the allies hemmed him in. And there, in October, 1813, "the Battle of the Nations" was fought. Napoleon was beaten. Refusing to see that his star had set, he returned to Paris and ordered 300,000 recruits raised.

The allies entered France, and there a second campaign—this time on French soil—was waged. From January to March, 1814, Napoleon once more beat the invaders at very point. But Wellington, with an English army, was advancing on Paris from the south, and force of numbers proved too much for the Corsican.

The veterans who had won him so many victories were dead. Their places were taken by raw recruits. His best generals, too, were gone. The men to whom his name had been a slogan of success were replaced by a generation weary of war. On March 30 Paris was captured by the allies, and the populace hailed the invading armies as deliverers. Talleyrand, Fouche and other diplomats made great by Napoleon, deserted him and went over to the enemy.

France was worn out. For 17 years Napoleon had paralyzed trade and home life by dragging off to war the young men of the nation. Taxes had been heavy. Coming as it did on top of the horrors of the revolution, Napoleon's rule had nearly wrecked the country. For over a decade he had turned all Europe into an armed camp; had changed pastures into battle fields; had sacked and devastated populous districts, and slain hundreds of thousands of men who should have been helping their countries' progress. With iron hand he had swayed the destinies of the continent, changed its map and crushed patriotism and national independence everywhere save in France. Europe loathed him. France was tired of him and tired of fighting.

The emperor had sense enough to see this, and abdicated in favor of his son. This compromise the allies would not accept. They packed their former conqueror off to exile on the island of Elba and installed Louis XVIII (younger brother of the beheaded Louis XVI) on the French throne. Then Europe rested from its long era of terror and bloodshed.

But the respite was brief. The most dramatic events in the Corsican's career were still to be enacted.

another few seconds the sound of ceased; there came, instead, the ch of a boat's bow upon the ; then voices, low and guarded; out of the mist three forms came into view. The foremost, even ing for the magnifying properties he atmosphere, I could perceive e a man of giant stature, and tless of corresponding strength, he was carrying, in an attitude showed that his burden taxed him e utmost, a large chest or box. nd him, one to the right and one he left, came two other figures, I judged, of average size, one ing a spade and the other unin- bered by any burden at all.

oubtless I seem to describe all this very calm, matter-of-fact way, but assure you that at the time the ression it made on me was one of fferent sort, vivid enough to set eyes to staring and to make my d leap faster in my veins; for, the tales I had heard around the at the inn, I had no doubt (in spite the talk that there were none in waters) that these men were pi- es; and that since, for obvious rea- , they did not give their money the custody of the bankers on the e, they had come to the island to osit it in the good old-fashioned , according to the custom of free- ters since their trade began.

et, excited and thrilled as I was, I erienced other emotions as well, f among which was a very lively r; for though I knew, of course, t I was quite invisible, still the advanced straight for me, as ugh their destination was the very t where I lay concealed. Fortu- ely for me, however, they came to top some fifty feet from the edge my blind; he whom I took to be leader of the party gave a curt rd of command, and at once the e man, with great alacrity, set n his burden and began rubbing arms as if to restore the circula- n of the blood. Thereupon the der flung another word to the man th the spade, and he at once laid n this implement beside the box d the two withdrew from their com- nion, coming so far in my direction t soon they were nearer to me than y were to the chest. Apparently y were searching for a mark of me sort, for presently the man who d carried the spade stopped near a , gnarled cedar and observed, "Why this tree, Captain, if you may call such? At all events, it's larger than mates."

At these words I experienced an- her thrill, but of a different kind. aturally these three men were all known to me, and I had not trav- ed enough to have made many ac- uaintances in other towns; yet I uld have sworn I had somewhere ard this man's voice, or at least a ice almost exactly resembling it. t before I had time to perplex my- lf further, the man addressed as aptain made answer, and although I d never seen the fine gentlemen who attend at court, yet his tone, languid and somewhat bored, was such as I imagined these gentry to affect. "'Twill serve," he said. "Now the line, Burford, and cross-bearings. And then"—he added, so low that I could barely hear the words—"and then for Tom."

What followed I could not well observe, for the fog, which had seemed to be lightening, now shut in thick again, and their maneuvers took them first to the west'ard, for which I was duly thankful, and then back in my direction, which made me crouch and cower like a hunted hare. There was measuring, I judged, and placing of marks, and the man who had borne the spade was continually jotting down figures in what I supposed to be a small book. All this time the big man sat on the chest, quietly, as if glad to be let alone, and without, as far as I could see, evincing the slightest interest in what was going on.

Many and many a time, since that morning when I lay crouched amid the reeds, I have debated with myself what I should have done, for I had such an opportunity as might never come again in the course of a lifetime. At such close and point-blank range I could have fired my shotgun full in the face of one of the men, then have seized my rifle and shot down another, and then, taking to my heels and protected by the smoke and by the mist, I could have crouched in the shelter of the undergrowth until I had reloaded my rifle and returned to take my chances with my remaining foe. Here, with fortune favoring me, I would have put out of the way three pirates, and would have gained for myself a chest of treasure.

But such arguments I should answer as follows: In the first place, I did not know that these men were pirates. In the second place, even if I had some means of assuring myself on this point, the fact remains that pirates, in those days, were not regarded with the horror and loathing which they merited. To the world in general, your pirate, like Blackbeard or Morgan, provided you did not fall afoul of him and endanger your own skin, was a good deal of a hero, whose adventures were to be eagerly followed and whose prowess, like that of knights of old, was to be celebrated both in story and in song. And if these two reasons are not enough to explain my inaction, there remains a third, namely, that I was only nineteen, and that my mind did not then work, nor has it since worked, I fear, with any great celerity. And so, when perhaps I should have been bold and keen and wide-awake to make my fortune for life, I continued to crouch there in the reeds, my eyes staring, and so fascinated with what I was seeing that I could only gaze like a great booby, with never a thought of gun and rifle at my side. Do not misunderstand me; I do not say, even today, that I should have acted otherwise than I did; but if I had so acted, I might have managed to prevent the very lamentable series of events which followed.

After a few minutes of these evolutions on the part of the two men who seemed to be the leaders in the enterprise, they stood for a moment in silence at a point midway between me and the third man; then gave him a curt order, and at once, without a word, and, as it seemed to me, somewhat reluctantly, he heaved his huge bulk upright, picked up the box and brought it to the spot where they stood. Then, going back and recovering the spade, he proceeded to dig, and soon had a large pile of earth and sand thrown up by his side. Yet his companions evidently wished to insure the security of their hiding-place, for presently I saw him get down into the pit and make the dirt fly even faster than before. Then, at the word of command, he stopped again, and, reaching out over the side of the hole, he half dragged, half carried the chest, the size of which was hard to determine in the darkness, and swung it down to the bottom, after which he emerged and began filling in the pit. Over this matter, indeed, the whole party spent much time; the surplus earth was carried away and dumped into the pond, and as nearly as I could discern, they were at great pains to smooth out all traces of their footprints around the spot where they had buried the chest.

And then, wholly without warning, a terrible thing happened. The big man, who had done the bulk of the labor, now stood leaning on his spade, gazing blankly into the fog, when, to my surprise, I saw the man whom I deemed the leader steal quietly up behind the dreaming giant and crouch down until he was fairly on his hands and knees, his back level with his follower's legs. At once I recognized the maneuver—I had seen the same thing done, and had done it myself, scores of times in the rough play of the Straitsmouth boys; for, given an active confederate, this is a trick against which there is no guard; if your ally gives the victim a good hard shove, he is bound to lose his balance, reel helplessly backward, and sprawl at full length upon the ground. Yet while, as I say, this was a favorite trick with boys, to see it employed in this place, and with grown men as actors, puzzled me, and made me feel that instead of jest, it boded deadly earnest. And my fears were, as it proved, only too well grounded, for without loss of an instant the third man walked boldly up to his unsuspecting victim, and, without a word or a sign to reveal his purpose, suddenly gave him the violent push which I had been dreading to see. Without uttering a sound the surprised giant flung up his hands and fell heavily upon his back, whereupon, to my horror, the man who had shoved him leaped, without loss of a second, full on top of him, and I saw a great knife gleam and plunge, once, twice, thrice, into the unresisting body of the fallen man.

Meanwhile the man who had knelt had risen to his feet again, and I saw that he held a pistol in his hand, ready to fire. And for an instant, indeed, it seemed that there might be need, for the fallen man, whose vitality must have been prodigious, now succeeded, in spite of his wounds, in throwing off the man who bestrode him and in dashing him to the ground; and the next second, to my terror, he came plunging for my blind, a most horrible and ghastly sight, with head thrown back, and mouth gaping and distorted in agony. He ran aimlessly, reeling from side to side, with arms pitifully outstretched before him, and with body inclining farther and farther forward until at last, whether from tripping over a root or whether from loss of strength, he crashed prostrate, not ten feet from where I was cowering, with my blood frozen in my veins.

With a bound his betrayer was upon him, and I could have fainted away when he turned the prostrate body, and, as if to make assurance sure, plunged his knife, with a kind of diabolical savagery, full into the giant's throat. Then, more slowly, he rose to his feet, and even in my terror I experienced a still further shock as I saw that in spite of his change of dress this murderer, beyond all question, was none other than the peaceful merchant, the affable stranger with whom I had talked and laughed at Straitsmouth only the day before. He stood motionless, the dripping knife still in his hand, looking around him as if seeking a tuft of grass with which to clean it, while I crouched low amid the reeds, hoping and praying that he would not see me. But as he glanced hither and thither to the right and left of him, all at once—and I could have screamed aloud as I saw what was coming—his eyes, drawing nearer and nearer, at length looked squarely into mine. Frozen with horror, I made no movement of any kind, but remained staring as if turned to stone.

Nor was he, on his part, more active He must, of course, have been a man accustomed to all kinds of excitement and adventure, and not easily to be surprised; but the sight of a face looking up at him out of the reeds on an island which he confidently believed to be uninhabited, save for himself and his partner in crime, clearly staggered him. Before either of us could act the man who had been in the background had stepped forward, and he, at least, was quick as lightning itself. With a gesture so rapid that the eye could not follow it, his hand leaped up and I found myself gazing into the round muzzle of a deadly looking pistol, while he said, without raising his voice, but in a tone like steel, "Come out of there!"

With a sinking heart I realized that my opportunity had passed. Whatever I might have done, had my wits been as quick as his, was of no import now. The sight of that pistol settled everything, and, abandoning all hope, I obeyed his command.

I shall never forget that first sight of Capt. Francis Barclay. He was not a large man, but I have never in my life met another who gave such an impression of power. His figure was lithe and well-proportioned; his face, thin and aquiline, was very dark and clean-shaven, save for a small coal-black mustache; his hair, also jet black, curled negligently beneath his cocked hat, with its sable plume. Nor was his dress less noticeable than his face and figure, for in spite of the hour and the occasion, he was clad in knee-breeches and silken hose, with long slashed boots; his waistcoat was of some light sprigged stuff, and his coat was of scarlet, with ruffles at wrist and throat.

He had, as I have said, shown that he was proof against surprise, and yet, as I came forward, I distinctly saw his expression change. What there could be to amaze him in the sight of a desperately frightened boy I could not then imagine, yet he glanced at me as if thoroughly taken aback, crying out, "In God's name Burford, what is this? I thought we had left him on the schooner."

My friend of yesterday—now, I had little doubt, my enemy—had advanced to my blind and had thoughtfully taken possession of my gun and rifle. Now he resumed his place at the captain's side. "I was startled when I saw the other," he answered, "but this is not he. This is the boy I spoke of, who drove me down the shore. "And in a tone vastly different from his friendly geniality of yesterday he asked: "How much have you seen? The fog is thick; perhaps you have seen naught save my quarrel with my friend. Perhaps you could not see, in the darkness, that he struck me first."

Now why I did so I do not rightly know, except that I think I have inherited from my good parents a strong love of truth; and I dare say, also, that I may have felt that even if I cared to tell lies, theso men were clever enough to detect me; so I answered directly enough: "I saw everything. I saw you bury the chest, and I saw what followed."

His expression altered when I spoke of the chest. Then he turned to his companion, who still held his pistol leveled at my breast. "A fine, outspoken lad," he said with an irony that even I could understand. "But I fear of too roving a nature. Home, after all, is the only place where a boy is really safe."

At these words, the import of which there was no mistaking, I felt a sudden sinking of heart. And at the same time I experienced that sensation, which comes to all of us at times, that all this could not be true. The whole aspect of the day with its chill, persistent fog, the unlooked-for coming of these strange men, the cold-blooded murder I had witnessed—surely, I thought, I could throw off this nightmare, waken, and find myself in my bed at home. Yet that silent bulk at my feet, with the pool of blood trickling into the thirsty sand, was real enough. And that dark-visaged figure with the pistol was real enough, too; and as I looked, without any melodramatic flourish, but as coolly and naturally as if he were about to shoot at a mark, he raised his weapon still higher until it pointed at my forehead, and I knew that the hand which held it was as firm as a rock. I made no doubt that he was about to fire, that I was as good as dead at that moment, and there fell upon me that absolute calm which comes when all hope is past, when one has, in anticipation, already suffered the agonies of death. And now, thought I, as long as I must die, I can at least die like a man and let him see that we breed no cowards in Straitsmouth; and thereupon I straightened myself erect, let my arms fall loosely at my side, and looked him squarely in the eye.

Bohemian May Claim His Place in World

When one doesn't know where his next dollar is coming from he may become a bohemian or a bandit. It all depends on his type of mind. The former alternative is that of the merry, uplifted soul, the latter of the sinister, usually malevolent one.

The bohemian sort is good company if he hasn't drifted into predatory habits. He is always ready to entertain you with his mind and is cordial to your own efforts toward geniality. He is not too severe on your occasionally limping wit and his laugh is generous. We ought to value and cherish him more than we do, though he be a ne'er-do-well.

Everybody can't make money; and it takes so little to make this bright spirit happy. Usually he is talented, but if he isn't he is soothing to the frequently lacerated souls of those who are talented. Isn't the nature that "just rests you" a blessed one, meant to gladden a tiresome day?

If his disposition is to lean somewhat on his friend, the man of oak, well, the oak can stand it. It is, in fact, what the oak is looking for and welcomes.—F. H. Collier in the St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Swan-Song Legend

There is no scientific ground for the legend that a swan sings beautifully just before it dies. No swan ever makes any sound which resembles singing unless it is the so-called whistling swan of Iceland. According to Greek mythology, Apollo, the god of music, passed into a swan. "Swan song" is now popularly applied to a last or dying work, such as that of a poet, artist or composer.—Pathfinder Magazine.

Picturesque Pottery

Ancient inhabitants of Peru often made pottery jars in the shape of vegetables, such as ears of corn, squash, potatoes and beans.

DESERVES NAME OF HERO OF MEDICINE

Everlasting Fame Accorded Armenian Physician.

An Armenian immigrant, who became an American doctor and died 12 years later from the effects of X-ray burns, has been selected as "the most picturesque hero of American medicine" by Dr. Wilmer Krusen, head of the Philadelphia department of public health.

Doctor Krusen declares, in an article in the American Magazine, that the unsung heroes of scientific medicine have done as much as the soldiers and statesmen to make the world safe for democracy, and he proves his case by examples of medical martyrs in the conquest of yellow fever, spotted fever, typhus, and in the study of the X-ray.

"Every big city can lay claim to one or more of these heroes of the X-ray," says Doctor Krusen. "The story of Dr. Mihran Kassabian is only typical of what many others went through."

Kassabian was born in Turkey, and as a boy was surrounded by the horrors of massacre. He came to America and studied medicine, receiving his degree just in time to enlist in the army medical corps for the Spanish war. In 1903, again a civilian, he became director of the Philadelphia X-ray laboratory.

The X-rays, used upon a patient for diagnosis, are harmless. The patient is exposed only a brief time. But the X-ray specialist, exposed day after day, plays with almost certain death unless he has means of protection.

Kassabian and the other pioneers did their work with bare hands. One day Kassabian detected a small ulcer on one hand. Other ulcers soon appeared, until both hands and wrists were covered with ugly spots from which came the most excruciating pain. Then Kassabian knew that the wonderful rays by which he had saved many lives were literally eating him away.

He refused to quit work. While his life was being eaten away, he rose to eminence. He studied, wrote, and went back again and again to his machine to let it do its worst on him, seeking constantly for the secret which would protect future experts from the fate which overhung him. Famous medical societies honored him. He was a doomed man, but one still with his boots on. Death, with which he raced for six years, overtook him in 1910.

Lead, the metal which the X-rays cannot penetrate, protects the specialist of today. He is not asked to endure, what Kassabian, and many others, went through, "They were the trail blazers," says Doctor Krusen.

Historic Orders Gathered

A collection of 10,000 original military and civil orders and proclamations issued by Napoleon, the French crown and revolutionary authorities in the latter Eighteenth and beginning the Nineteenth centuries has been acquired by the Alsace-Lorraine institute of the University of Frankfort. The collection in part was purchased by anonymous persons from the estate of the late Prof. Rudolph Reuss of Sorbonne university, Paris, and presented to the Frankfort institute. It is one of the most valuable collections of its kind in the world, being surpassed only by that in the National library in Paris. Most of the orders were printed in French and German, since they were intended for posting in Alsace-Lorraine.

Smart Dog

Every afternoon about two o'clock Brownie, a handsome dog, can be seen trotting around to the circulation room of the Quincy Patriot-Ledger. He never varies the time of his arrival by more than a few minutes. After the boys get their papers he often accompanies them on routes if it is pleasant, but stormy days he just goes out to the corner and sees them off and then returns to the office. How does the dog know when it is two o'clock, and why does he never show up on Sundays? He must figure this out in a way animals have and that cannot be accounted for by any human standard of reasoning.—Quincy Patriot Ledger.

Vodka-Stuffed

Mexican Consul Lubbert said at a dinner in San Antonio:

"It is a mistake to think that Mexico is going in for Bolshevism. We Mexicans would never tolerate Bolshevism. It is most antipathetic to us. It is probably antipathetic to the Russians themselves, only they are so stupefied with vodka, you know.

"It remainds me of a little Russian boy who looked up from a travel book and said:

"'Father, is it true that gorillas can't endure our climate?'

"'Gorillas, my son,' the father answered, 'endure our climate perfectly, only they have to be stuffed first.'"—Exchange.

Hot Answer

Senator Ashurst was condemning certain campaign irregularities.

These men's hot answers to our accusations," he said, "remind me of a Prescott husband. He was quarreling violently with his wife one day.

"'Perhaps you're not aware,' his wife said, 'that I had eight very good proposals before I accepted you.'

"'And perhaps you are not aware,' the poor fool husband roared, 'that I proposed to a round dozen of beautiful women before I became acquainted with yourself.'"

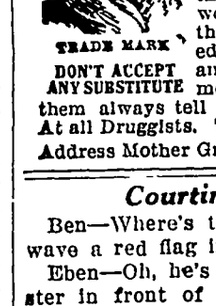
Encouragement for Weak, Nervous Women



Sedalia, Mo.—"For some time, until about one year ago, I was suffering with pain in my side and back and was very nervous. This weakened me until I had but little strength Finally Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription was recommended to me as a very good remedy for women and I started taking it. I began to improve right from the start. The aches, pains and nervousness left me and I soon felt better than ever before. I gained in weight and felt stronger than I ever did."—Mrs. Cora Curry, 207 E. Salina St.

METHODIST CHURCH NOTES
A. W. Gauger, Pastor

Next Sunday is Palm Sunday. We are again reminded of Christ's triumphant entrance into Jerusalem when he was proclaimed king. This thought should command and call forth our highest allegiance to Him as King of Kings and Lord of Lords.

We will observe the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper at our morning service in both churches. Every chrictian should find it obligatory as well as a privelege to employ this means of grace We especially invite the children to come and enter into that closer communion and fellowship with the Master.

We find it advisable to omnit our evening service on the coming Sunday as a goodly number of our music lovers and patrons of Morningside College have expressed a desire to go to Garner to hear the Morningside Chapel Choir sing in the Methodist church. This will be a rare treat as they are all trained voices under the leadership of competent musicians. No admission will be charged. However, a freewill offering may be taken.

All evening services including the Epworth League will be dismissed.

R. F. D. BENEFITS

Our system of free mail delivery was recently lauded by a prominent farm federatino worker who spoke of th emany benefits the system has conferred.

Few people realize that one f the greatest steps in the progress of rural districts has been the rural free delivery and that it has brought immeasurable advantages to the farm home. Once isolated localities are now in constant touch with all local and national affairs and daily contact is provided through the medium of the mails.

Rural free delivery has now come to be one of the indispensable things of farm life. Certainly it is valuable in that it provides a bit of variety and diversion.

K. H. S. ORCHESTRA LOST IN CONTEST

GENERAL OPINION KLEMME HAD BEST OCRHESTRA

Orchestra Given Treat By Mr. And Mrs. Quandt Tuesday Evening

Mr. Conrad Quandt and several of our faculty accompanied Mr. Gary and his orchestra to Charles City last Saturday afternoon where was held the annual musical contest of Northern Iowa High Schools, preliminary to the State Contest to be held later at Iowa City.

Klemme lost to oRckford High School whose numbers and experience proved to them an asset. Many persons outside of Klemme disagreed with the judge in his placing Rockford first Our orchestra did splendidly and we are sorry not more from Klemme were present to hear them. However, as it was on Saturday night, most of our people could not get away. The unfavorable weather and roads no doubt kept others away.

Orchestra Given Party

The superintendent, Mr. Gary, and the orchestra were invited to the restaurant on Tuesday evening where they were served refreshments by Mr. and Mrs. Quandt. All are appreciative of this courtesy and expression of good will toward our school roganization.

Mr. And Mrs. Gary Entertain

The faculty has been invited to Mr and Mrs. Gary's home tonight, Thursday evening, for refreshments and an hour or two of enjoyment.

Students Very Busy Now

With the Senior Class play now being practiced, an orchestra program in process of preparation,, nd base ball training undertaken, together with the regular daily school program, school is a rather busy corner of our town. With but five more weeks of schol after this we wish there might be very regular attendance on the part of those whose marks are none too high and of those whose attendance has heretofore been rather irregular. We should finish the year in as good fashion as possible.

TWO OF FACULTY WILL RETURN HERE

SUPT. M. F. PENROD AND MISS WHEATMAN SIGN CONTRACTS

Board Considers Many Applicants To Fill Vacant Positions

Every teacher, from the first grad Every teacher in the Klemme high and grade school was given the honor of re-election by the school board but only two signed their cntracts before the "dead-line" Friday night.

Mr. M. F. Penrod signed up a contract for the office of superintendent for another year. Miss Lenora Wheatman was the only other member of the 1926-1927 faculty to sign a teaching contract for another year, and fills the position of teacher in the primary room.

As a rule, teachers did not sign contracts for the Klemme Schools as they have been offered much better positions with a higher salary n

Klemme has had a very fine faculty the past year and the teachers are highly recommended to the schools who have been fortunate enough to contract with them.

Mr. Hockey Signs At Mallard

Mr. L. E. Hockey, instructor in the eighth grade and manual training teacher and athletic coach, has signed up with the Mallard Schools for next year with a substantial increase in salary. Mr. Hockey produced one of the best basket ball teams in North Iowa high schools this year, which turned out a near champion squad. Klemme is sorry to lose Mr. Hockey.

Miss Gauger Goes To Hampton

Miss Marie Gauger, 5th and 6th grade teacher, has landed a real "plum" as she goes to Hampton next year where she has signed up as 4th grade teacher. This is a large fine school an the position carries a nice increase in salary. She is to be congratulated on her ability as a grade teacher.

Others Have Positions In View

Mr E. G Gary, who has made a wonderful record during his two years stay in Klemme, especially long musical lines, has several very tempting positions in view and has been asked to apply for some very good positions in schols interested in musical work, especially in orchestra work. Mr. Gary will be able to command one of the good salaried positions and we wish him good luck wherever he may go.

Miss Bell, 3rd and 4th grade teacher did not sign up here as she likewise had better offers outside f Klemme. She has not as yet signed up with any schol but has been asked to apply at some good schools at an increase in salary.

Miss Kidder, we understand, intends to return to her college work again next fall to complete her course in Domestic Science and also take further vocal training.

Miss Stoner has not as yet signed up a contract, but we understand that sometime in June she will perhaps sign a contract, but not one as a teacher in a public high school. The school she has in view consists of just one very ideal pupil.

Klemme has had the best line-up of teachers this year than of any for the past ten years or more. The people of Klemme have been well satisfied with their work as a rule, and the teachers also speak very well of the treatment they have received at the hands of our people and will have a warm spot in thier hearts for Klemme.

The school board will indeed be fortunate if they can secure as good a group of teachers for next year as the faculty we had this year.

Card Of Thanks

We wish to extend our sincere thanks to all who so kindly assisted us during the illness and death of our husband and father, and thank all who contributed floral offerings, and cheerful words of sympathy.

Mrs. Wm. Straatman Mrs. George Neimeyer, Mrs. R. R. Lemke, Mrs. Harvey Wilkens, and relatives,

FINE PLACE TO LIVE

Klemme wants people to come here to live. Klemme not only wants people but the right kind of people. We would not, for instance, want the crowd that is now congregating at Weepah, Nevada. We do not want speculators and fly-by-nights who are here today and gone tomorrow. We want people who will come here to make homes, and who will invest their money here and who will take root and become a part of us and help by their presence and efforts to make Klemme a still better and more attractive town.

METHODIST CHURCH NOTES

A. W. Gauger, Pastor

A fine spirit prevailed in our services last Sunday. This was equally true of the Junior and Senior Epworth Leagues as well as the other services. All services have been smaller in attendance since the roads have been almost impassible, however we trust there may be a change for the better soon.

As usual we shall observe Good Friday by having an appropriate service at 10:00 o'clock. This service will find a ready response on the part of every true Christian. Mt. Calvary is the highest mountain in the world—none other can reach up to it. Others may surpass it in altitude but none in the height of its reaches and rich meaning to a fallen mankind in making it possible for the same to reach the finest and richest things possible to them.

On Easter Sunday our services begin at the usual hour with appropriate opening in song and scripture with special music featuring. The baptismal service will follow soon after the opening service. We shall be glad to minister to those desiring this service.

A number of persons have indicated their desire to come into fellowship with the church and will be received at this service.

In conclusion the pastor will give a brief Easter address on "The Finality of Christ."

The outstanding service of the day should be the generous offering asked for "World Service." This will be the great thing of the Sunday School on Easterday. No less than a dollar and if possible more from every adult and every youug man and young woman and proportionately less from those not able to reach this and from the smaller folk. Let's make it a silver offering thru-out!

Sunday evening will be given over to the fine program and Easter Cantata in preparation by the Junior League. This is a program that merits a full house and we are sure the Juniors will have such.

The Epworth League begins at 6:45 on this evening and concludes earlier because of the program.

The call from our Methodist Hospital for an Easter Egg Offering meets with fine response. Every family or individual may come in on this with from half dozen to dozens and dozens of eggs for this noble institution which is our own Conference Hospital. This shower is not for farmer folk only, lest we forget

"Butch" Schroeder Holds Record At Chicago Stock Yards

The many friends and acuqaintances of our ex-citizen, Henry Schroeder, better known as "Butch" will be interested to learn that he had the proud distinction last week Thursday of having sold the highest priced load of heavy steers that have been sold on the Chicago market for the year of 1927, or since 1925.

There were 18 head, all Herefords, and brought $13.75 per cwt., or $229.35 gross money per steer.
